That is, these Senators seek to cure the evil toward which I am directing my efforts by a reservation which gives to the United States the right, after a decision shall have been rendered, to repudiate that decision.

I insist that if you are seeking here, and if you believe in, the right of the United States of America to have equal representation with Great Britain not only in the assembly and in the council, but in the labor conference as well, then that evil that thus you seek to remedy can not be remedied by saying that you will adopt the evil and thereafter, when the evil shall have accomplished its purpose, you will repudiate the action in which, possibly, you may have participated. I insist that the reservation provides no remedy for inequality of representation. You will under it sit down at the board with these other nations, give to Great Britain six votes, six representatives at that board, when we have but one; that you will participate in the proceedings, but that you will be lying in wait until the decision shall have been rendered, and then you will exercise an option as to whether or not that decision shall be binding upon you. This is neither the frank nor the honest nor the courageous way in which this evil should be met and dealt with. The reservation provides no remedy. Indeed, it recognizes and adopts the wrong, merely according the sorry privilege of a repudiation of action, perhaps after long deliberation and discussion of which we have been a part.

The question is, Are we entitled to equal representation with Great Britain? If we are, why should we not give it to the United States of America? Are we entitled to the same number of votes as the Empire of Great Britain? Then, if we are, let us take the same number of votes as the Empire of Great Britain. If we are, let us take them, and why should we not; and why should we hesitate or fear to take an equal number of votes if we believe we are entitled to them?

In the labor conference with which this amendment now presented endeavors to deal, do you realize that the United States has four representatives, four votes, and that the empire of Great Britain has 24 representatives and 24 votes? In all the conference there are 128 votes, and our great country has the disproportionate number of 4 votes out of that 128! If these Senators believe that the United States of America is entitled to equal representation and equal voting power, upon what theory, if, as they concede, the inequality exists in this document, do they continue the inequality and by a reservation dodge the whole question and touch not at all that inequality?

The question is not of repudiation after a decision shall have been rendered. That is not the point that we ought to reach, the point that touches all of us most nearly, and that touches our country. The question is as to the right in the first instance of representation, the right in the first instance of voting power, the right in the very first instance in this labor conference, which has tremendous power and deals with tremendous questions of importance, the right that America has to exactly the same representation and the same voting power as the Empire of Great Britain.

This amendment is offered, Mr. President, so that, so far as I am able to make it, the issue shall be plain. If it is sought to be amended in any particular to make it plainer, I will take any amendment that may be asked by any man who says he wants to correct this inequality. I will take any amendment that may be suggested to accomplish the desired result; but the question is, and every man must answer that question by his vote, Shall the United States of America have as many votes and as much representation in the league of nations and in the labor council as the Empire of Great Britain? That is the question; and there is not any sort of sophistry or specious reasoning concerning technicalities or attenuated interpretation that will enable that question to be avoided upon this issue. I submit to the Senate that our duty is—not only our duty, but it should be a duty which we perform with alacrity and enthusiasm—to give unto the country that is ours, and that we love, equal voting power and equal representation with any country on the fact of the earth, even with the Empire of Great Britain.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I shall take but just a moment of the time of the Senate.

I claim that this amendment gives the United States no more votes than the first amendment. It provides—> a voting power in every respect and upon all questions equal to the aggregate representation and voting power of any member of the league and such member's self-governing dominions and colonies and parts of empire; and this amendment shall be liberally applied and construed to effectuate fully said intent.

Mr. President, of course that amendment will not give the United States a single vote where it is a party. If it does, it gives it something that no other nation has. Nor does it give the United States a vote, as I explained the other day, in any dispute between this country and a member having self-governing dominions, or between this country and any other country not having self-governing dominions, or between any two countries not having self-governing dominions, other than this country. It is exactly what the other amendment was in that respect.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield for a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Without conceding at all what the Senator says in that regard, if it be amended exactly as the Senator says he wants it, will he vote for it?

Mr. KELLOGG. I will not vote for it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Of course not.

Mr. KELLOGG. Because it can be taken care of effectually, so far as this country is concerned, by a reservation, and so far as the labor provision goes, if it is not already taken care of by the reservation proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], it can be taken care of.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I did not intend to speak further upon this subject, and I shall be very brief now. I would not speak now but for the belief apparently upon the part of the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] that the amendment, as he now proposes it, will wholly accomplish the object sought by the reservation, as well as give equality in voting in cases which the reservation does not touch.

I made an argument the other day, Mr. President, attempting to show that so far as the vital interests of the United States are concerned, the amendment proposed by the committee does not afford protection, and that to secure such protection a reservation is necessary; and I suggested the form of a reservation that I believed would protect the interests of the United States.

I at no time, Mr. President, made any claim that the reservation that I suggested would do all the things that the amendment would accomplish. I fully appreciated that that was not so, and because it did not, I voted for the amendment proposed by the committee, and I shall vote now for the amendment proposed by the Senator from California, because the amendment does give equality of votes to the United States and the British Empire in advisory matters, in all meetings of the assembly or the league, under article 11 and other provisions of the treaty. While they have no power to bind anybody, they do have the power to make advisory recommendations. That the amendment will accomplish, which the reservation does not, and for that reason I favor it.

But neither the amendment proposed the other day, nor, in my judgment, the amendment now proposed, protects the United States where the assembly has the right to bind the United States. That, in my judgment, can be cured only by a reservation such as suggested, unless, Mr. President, we rewrite the entire text of that portion of the treaty. I do want to impress upon the Senate, if I can, that although this amendment be adopted, if the interests of the United States are to be protected, a reservation will be necessary.

To just follow that for a moment, the language of the new amendment is:

> Upon all matters whatsoever the United States shall have votes in the council and assembly * * * numerically equal to the aggregate vote cast or registered by any such member of the league and its self-governing dominions and colonies and parts of empire.

That language, in my judgment, would have the same construction as the language originally proposed by the committee, in that it would only give the additional number of votes, where, under the treaty, we were entitled to vote at all, and it would not cover a case where, by the treaty, the United States was excluded from voting.

I think the Senator from California will admit that his amendment would not give the United States six votes where the United States was a party to the dispute.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is not the point you are making, sir, at all.

Mr. LENROOT. I say, I think the Senator from California will admit that.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Unquestionably that is true, but this amendment does mean exactly what you have been saying it does not mean.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me see. If the Senator, then, admits that, although the language says that we shall have votes upon all matters whatsoever, and yet admits that it excludes the United States from voting when it is a party to the dispute, it must be because the treaty itself, not this language, excludes the United States from a vote where it is a party to the dispute.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, do not misunderstand me. What I say is that the United States is excluded so far as the United States is concerned as a disputant; but the United States has in council and in assembly exactly the votes that Great Britain has under the very terms of the amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. Where it has any votes at all, I agree.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Wherever Great Britain votes five votes, the United States has a right to vote five votes.

Mr. LENROOT. Where it is a party to the dispute?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Wherever Great Britain votes five votes, the United States can vote five votes.

Mr. LENROOT. Let me understand the Senator. Does he, then, contend that his amendment would give the United States five votes where it was a party to the dispute?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Wherever Great Britain votes five votes. That is what it does, exactly.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator, then, contends that although we were in a dispute with Japan, where Great Britain would cast six votes in that dispute between the United States and Japan the United States would cast six votes? Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Certainly it will cast its votes, just as Great Britain will under similar circumstances; or, if Great Britain is excluded, the United States will be excluded.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it possible that the Senator from California then asks that in a dispute between the United States and Japan, where Japan is excluded from voting, if Great Britain votes, we shall have six votes? Is that the Senator's contention? I would like an answer from the Senator from California upon that question.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Just pardon me——

Mr. LENROOT. If that is the construction, I must retract what I said a few moments ago when I stated that I would vote for the amendment.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Pardon me. The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] has stated to me that there was some misapprehension. Will the Senator ask his question again?

Mr. LENROOT. I want to know if the Senator from California contends that if the United States has a dispute with Japan, the United States——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Oh, no; the Senator has misunderstood me, if he says that. I say that wherever Great Britain votes five votes, we will vote five votes under similar circumstances. Wherever we must stand aside as a disputant, very well; wherever Great Britain must stand aside, very well; but where Great Britain votes five votes, we vote five votes, on any question of any character whatsoever.

Mr. LENROOT. I think we now understand each other.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Did you misunderstand me before, or did I misstate the case?

Mr. LENROOT. No; the Senator from California was certainly mistaken about it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Possibly I did not reply accurately to the question of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I fully understand now the position of the Senator from California, and I am in accord with that position. He takes the position now, with which I agree, that notwithstanding the language of the amendment, the treaty excludes the United States from any vote where the United States is excluded under the treaty and one of those cases where the United States is excluded by the terms of the treaty——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Pardon me, now. I do not say anything of the sort. I say where the United States is a disputant.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. But I do not say, in the Senator's technical construction of the word "other" that we would stand aside.

Mr. LENROOT. No; the Senator anticipates me. I am coming to that.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. That is not what I am saying, and because of the misunderstanding a moment ago, I do not want another misunderstanding. I think the Senator was inaccurately quoting me.

Mr. LENROOT. Possibly. The RECORD will show. But we have established now, I take it, that this amendment will not give to the United States any votes where the United States is one of the disputants.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin is very clearly in error in his construction of the effect of the amendment. The assumption has been constantly made in the course of this debate that should a controversy arise between the United States and Great Britain, the one vote of Great Britain would be set aside together with the one vote of the United States, but the remaining five votes possessed by the self-governing colonies, dependencies, and parts of the British Empire would still continue to be cast.

Mr. LENROOT. That is an entirely different question.

Mr. MOSES. The proposal of the Senator from California, as I understand it, is that under similar circumstances the remaining five votes of the United States shall be cast.

Mr. LENROOT. That is an entirely different situation, which I am not discussing at this time. That is covered by the amendment known as the Moses amendment, and it is also covered by a reservation that has been proposed.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. KNOX. The question propounded by the Senator from New Hampshire has cleared up that feature of it, but it is contended that if we have a dispute with Great Britain, neither Great Britain nor any of her colonies shall vote. It seems to me that there can not be any opportunity for difference of opinion between the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from California on the other proposition, because it is the whole theory of the treaty that disputants do not participate in the voting at all; and whether they have 1 vote or whether they have 5 votes or whether they have 50 votes, they step out of the arena. As I understood the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], if under similar circumstances we had a controversy with Japan of course Great Britain would vote her 5 votes in that controversy; but if Great Britain had a controversy with Japan we would vote our 5 votes.

Mr. LENROOT. There is no misunderstanding now.

I now get to the point that the language of this amendment does not cover us when we are a disputant, or give us votes, because we will be excluded whenever we are a disputant. By the same reasoning we would not need any additional number of votes wherever in any other case we are excluded by the terms of the treaty from voting at all. That must be absolutely true, and that brings us again to article 15, which I discussed the other day, where a dispute is taken from the council into the assembly. The members of the league are divided into two groups, one group consisting of all the members who are also members of the council, and they must be unanimous. Then the treaty says there must be a majority of the other members of the league to sustain the action of the unanimous group who have representatives upon the council. So still the United States would be excluded from voting, because the United States does not constitute one of the other members of the league. So we would be excluded there exactly in the same way that we are excluded when we are a party to the dispute.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, may I ask another question of the Senator?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. The Senator must surely admit that there will be a vast number of questions coming before both the council and the assembly that you could not characterize as disputes between nations. The Senator will admit that the amendment proposed by the Senator from California would give us an equal number of votes with Great Britain in respect to those questions, which probably will occupy the bulk of the attention of both council and assembly.

Mr. LENROOT. I agree to that, and that is why I am for the amendment. I am only repeating this argument to-day for the purpose of establishing, if I can, that in all cases of dispute where the vital interests of the United States are concerned this amendment does not cure the evil, and the only way I know that it can be done, without rewriting that portion of the treaty, is by such a reservation as I have proposed. That is my only purpose in making this argument.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, I do not want any misunderstanding or misapprehension to be had concerning the colloquy which occurred between the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and myself. I say to him, and I say now to the Senate, that in a case where the United States is a disputant, of course it is relegated, just exactly as in the case where Great Britain is a disputant, to the provisions of the covenant that it can not vote. But I say that by this amendment it is upon an equality with Great Britain, and I deny, in cases which will come to the assembly then, in other instances where the United States is not a party, that it will be in any other position than Great Britain, and Great Britain alone.

The design of this amendment is to put the United States and Great Britain upon an equality and give them equal representation and equal voting power. The amendment does just that thing and does it fully and does it completely.

The Senator from Wisconsin argues that there are cases that will be taken to the council that will come to the assembly, and when they come to the assembly, because of the interjection of the word "other" in section 15 of the covenant, that the United States can not vote upon those questions. Not so, because under this amendment, upon those questions to which neither the United States nor Great Britain will be a party, the United States will be upon an equality with Great Britain, with equal voting power and equal voting force.

When I was answering the Senator from Wisconsin a moment ago I was referring in each instance to the case where the United States was a disputant. I had in mind his argument of the other day, which I have studied since that time, concerning the construction of the word "other" in article 15. I insist that it is only where the United States is a disputant that it must stand aside, but that in every other instance, in the assembly and in the council, the United States and Great Britain are on an inequality. That is what I am striving to cure; that is what I think this amendment accomplishes. It accomplishes it, even according to the Senator from Wisconsin, so far that he will vote for the amendment, and if he, with his construction, will vote for the amendment, how can any other man upon this floor decline to do so if he is seeking equality of representation and equality of voting power with Great Britain for his own country.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] if his amendment should read "under the league" or "under the treaty"? It refers to that in four places. In line 5, on page 1 of the amendment, is found the first instance. As I recall it, the labor organization is not sanctioned under the league at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I think the treaty provides that they shall meet under the league. Am I not correct in that?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Under the covenant, the Senator means?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Under the covenant of the league of nations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. There is some provision that report may be made to the league, I think, or that the council shall have some jurisdiction of what the labor organization or the assembly, formed under the treaty, may do. But here is an amendment which refers to the council, the assembly, and this labor organization "under the league." I do not know whether the Senator considered it in drawing the amendment. I simply wanted to suggest to him that the labor provisions in the last part of the treaty itself——

Mr. JOHNSON of California. May I suggest to the Senator that if he will glance at the labor provisions on page 489 of the treaty print he will see that it is a matter that can very readily be determined.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; I have that page before me. I will say to the Senator that I am not giving any opinion upon it. I thought possibly the Senator had made a mistake or had not considered it. I admit that I have not, and so I can not give him any opinion upon it.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I would be perfectly willing to perfect it by saying "under the treaty."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, if it does say "under the treaty" it includes both, because the covenant is a part of the treaty.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Then, Mr. President, in order that there may be——

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator makes the change, may I interrupt him?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. The language in line 5, in which the labor conference is referred to, contains the modifying words "under the league." Those last words that I have read apply to the council, to the assembly and to the labor conference. As I understand it, the council and the assembly are provided for under the league, but the labor conference is provided for away back in the treaty.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. If the Senator will permit me, they were referring to the labor conference, and the punctuation would indicate that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; there is a comma there.

Mr. NORRIS. Then it seems to me the word "league" ought to be changed to "treaty."

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I ask leave to perfect the amendment by adding the words "or treaty," so that it will read "under the league or treaty."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It occurs in line 5 and in line 9 on page 1, and on page 2 in lines 1, 7, and 8. If the Senator will glance carefully at it, I think the same change should be made at those places.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. In each instance add the words "or treaty."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Strike out the words "under the league" and substitute the words "under the treaty."

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I was going to use the words "under the league or treaty."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. That is all right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the modifications in the amendment proposed by the Senator from California.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 5, after the words "under the league," insert the words "or treaty"; the same amendment in line 9, after the words "under the league," insert the words "or treaty"; on page 2, line 1, the same amendment, after the words "under the league" insert the words "or treaty"; on page 2, lines 7 and 8, the same amendment, after the words "under the league," insert the words "or treaty."

Mr. COLT. Mr. President, it seems to me, as I said the other day, that the Johnson amendment is impracticable and unworkable. The argument seems to be founded upon the proposition that this is a treaty between the United States and Great Britain, and leaves out of consideration the fact that there are 32 parties to the treaty, and that the principle upon which the voting is based is membership voting, each member having a single vote.

Suppose the assembly were gathered here and they were voting upon the proposition of the admission of a new member to the league; 32 members are present, 31 of these members cast a single vote, and the United States casts six votes; 27 of these members are sovereign States, 5 or 6 of them world States. I wish to ask the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] is it a practicable proposition, when the assembly meets, that the United States should cast six votes, as many as six of the other great sovereign States?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. President, does the Senator——

Mr. COLT. This is as an association of nations. We want an association that deals squarely with all nations. This proposed change must be submitted to the other parties. Will France or Italy or Japan or Brazil, or the other great powers, agree that the United States shall have six votes?

You could carry that illustration further: Suppose you have the neutral nations admitted, as contemplated by the covenant, and then the membership will be 45, and 44 cast a single vote, and 39 out of that 44 are sovereign States, some of them equal to the United States; under these circumstances should the United States have six votes? Again, suppose, as contemplated by the covenant, the membership consists of 50. Would it be right for 49 members to have one vote each and the United States six? The proposition that I maintain from a legal standpoint is that this covenant all the way through is constructed upon the principle of membership voting, with each member having a single vote.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. COLT. And that if you should inject this principle of one member having six votes, you will have to reconstruct the whole covenant. I ask the Senator whether it is fair by our associates in this league for us to insist upon having six votes and leave them only one vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Rhode Island yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. COLT. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. In the illustration the Senator is giving, where he said we are assembled here as a league, he assumes, I suppose, that Great Britain is one of the constituent members.

Mr. COLT. Great Britain is a member and the self-governing colonies and dominions are members.

Mr. NORRIS. How many votes in that assembly, in which the Senator says we only ought to have one vote, has Great Britain?

Mr. COLT. Great Britain, with her self-governing colonies and dominions, has six votes.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think it is any more unfair for us to object to Great Britain having six than it would be for France to object to us having six?

Mr. COLT. Certainly unfair, because there is something in the proposition that these self-governing colonies and dominions are entitled to representation in the league, and the Senator is asking the United States, without any self-governing colonies or dominions, to come in here and claim their six votes.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will read the treaty and the names of those who sign the treaty and the names in which they do sign it, he will have to admit, I think, that His Majesty, the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and the British dominions beyond the seas, the Empire of India, is, under the very terms of the treaty, given six votes. Every one of those self-governing colonies, as the Senator calls them, gets its authority, under the treaty which we are considering, by and through the King of the British Empire. Is not that true?

Mr. COLT. It is true. That language may be in the treaty, but the covenant itself entitles any self-governing colony or dominion to a vote, and it so happens that in the application of that principle it only applies to the British Empire. It would apply to us if the Philippines had that status.

I say it is a very difficult thing to meet. I want to meet it. I do not want that inequality. I believe it can only be met by a reservation.

I want to have some regard for the other nations that are members of the league. I repeat that you have either got to reconstruct the covenant as a legal document or else you have got to adopt some such broad reservation as that suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and say that in any case where we think there is inequality, where we think we are wronged, we will not be bound.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, it seems to me that the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] admits himself out of court. He admits that there is an inequality here. He first gives us an illustration of an assembly such as it is proposed here to organize, where each nation represented has one vote, but he has to admit that one of those nations, by virtue of having some so-called self-governing colonies, has six votes. He calls our attention to the condition that would exist if we were given six votes, and states that France might not like it and that Italy might not like it. That is an objection. I agree with the Senator that it brings us to a condition which is illogical; but we are already there under the Senator's own admission. We have already an assembly or council or a conference where one nation has six votes while we have only one. I admit with the Senator that it may be difficult to remedy the defect. It seems almost as though we ought to rewrite the document, as the Senator says. If that be true, then, we ought to throw the whole thing out of the window and let it be rewritten.

Mr. COLT. The question is not stated fairly when the changes are rung on six votes to one. It turns upon the principle of whether the self-governing colonies are going to be admitted as members.

Mr. NORRIS. They are now admitted; they are already in.

Mr. COLT. I say that may be a defect, and we want to try to cure it as far as possible. It will have to be cured in one of three ways, namely, by depriving the self-governing colonies and dominions of voting power, by reconstructing the covenant, or by safeguarding the United States through a reservation providing that the United States shall not be bound in any case where it is felt that injury has been done.

Mr. NORRIS. There is a great deal in what the Senator from Rhode Island says. The logical way to proceed would be to follow the theory on which he started; that every nation should have one vote, and if one nation had three representatives in the assembly all other nations should each have three representatives in the assembly. That would be the logical thing to do. The amendment which was offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and voted down, in my judgment, would have accomplished that result. We must either give to the other nations as many votes as are given Great Britain or we must take away from Great Britain enough of her votes so as to put her on an equality with the other nations; one course or the other must be pursued.

As it now stands that inequality exists; Great Britain has six votes. If we ask six votes for ourselves and France wants six votes I am in favor of giving France or any other nation six votes. My personal judgment is, if we had agreed to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Tennessee that we would have taken away from Great Britain five of her votes. Then there would have been no difficulty.

Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to the manner in which the signatories have signed the treaty. Let me refer to the manner in which the treaty was signed by the representatives of Great Britain; and that is as far as I shall have to go in order to show that she has six votes. How was Great Britain represented and who signed the treaty on her behalf? The treaty is before us signed by representatives of Great Britain and each one of her self-governing colonies. It was signed by the representatives of Great Britain in this way:

His Majesty the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British dominions beyond the seas, Emperor of India, by the Right Hon. David Lloyd-George, M. P., first lord of his treasury and prime minister; the Right Hon. Andrew Bonar Law, M. P., his lord privy seal; the Right Hon. Viscount Milner, G. C. B., G. C. M. G., his secretary of state for the colonies; the Right Hon. Arthur James Balfour, O. M., M. P., his secretary of state for foreign affairs; the Right Hon. George Nicoll Barnes, M. P., minister without portfolio; and for the Dominion of Canada—

It is the same sentence, mark you; I have not come to a period as yet; I am reading the same sentence now with which I began—for the Dominion of Canada, by the Hon. Charles Joseph Doherty, minister of justice; the Hon. Arthur Lewis Sifton, minister of customs——

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Let me finish the sentence. When I come to a period I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. OWEN. I merely wanted——

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator will wait until I reach a period; then I will yield to the Senator, but I want to finish the sentence—

For the Commonwealth of Australia, by:
The Right Hon. William Morris Hughes, attorney general and prime minister;
The Right Hon. Sir Joseph Cook, G. C. M. G., minister for the Navy;
For the Union of South Africa—

I have not reached a period yet—

by:
Gen. the Right Hon. Louis Botha, Minister of Native Affairs and Prime Minister;
Lieutenant General, the Right Hon. Jan Christiaan Smuts, K. C., Minister of Defense;
For the Dominion of New Zealand, by:
The Right Hon. William Ferguson Massey, Minister of Labor and Prime Minister—

There is no period as yet, Mr. President—

For India, by
The Right Hon. Edwin Samuel Montagu, M. P., his Secretary of State for India;
Major General, His Highness Maharaja, Sir Ganga Singh Bahadur, Maharaja of Bikaner, G. C. S. I., G. C. I. E., G. C. V. O., K. C. B., A. D. C.

His Majesty the King of Great Britain is represented by certain persons representing each part of the Empire, and the Empire is given one representative and one vote for each of these parts.

Those are the representatives of the King and Great Britain, every one of them claiming in and through the King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. First, I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma, and then I will yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator has not come to a period.

Mr. NORRIS. No; but I have yielded.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator said he would yield when he came to a period.

Mr. NORRIS. I did better than I said I would; I yielded before I found one.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator did not find one, and that is the very point to which I intended to call the Senator's attention.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well; I can keep on until I reach one, if I have the breath.

Mr. OWEN. The Senator would have to read the names of the representatives of the French Republic and of the representatives of all the other signatories before he would come to a period.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; because the representatives of the various powers that signed the treaty are included; but it will not be found when it comes to the French Republic, or any other nation signatory to the treaty, that the names of their representatives are connected by the word "and" as the self-governing dominions are connected up with Great Britain as a part of the same sentence.

Mr. MOSES. I call the Senator's attention to the fact also that the word "for" will not be found in connection with the signatures of the representatives of the other powers.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question in that connection.

Mr. NORRIS. Very well.

Mr. SHIELDS. Does the Senator find any provision in the treaty that all of the self-governing colonies of Great Britain shall have ambassadors or ministers to the United States?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. SHIELDS. Is there any provision that we shall send ministers to them?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. SHIELDS. Is not that usual in the case of sovereign and independent governments standing on a plane of equality in the family of nations?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes, sir. I thank the Senator. His suggestion adds to the proof, if that were necessary, that all the colonies are only parts of one empire. I now yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, I am sorry the Senator could not yield before the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] left the Chamber, because I think if the Senator from Nebraska would dwell a little on the democratic and representative character of the alphabetic statesman whose name is the last of those appended to the list of the representatives signing for the British Empire, it would be enlightening.

Mr. NORRIS. I can not go any further, I will say to the Senator; the alphabet was exhausted by the letters appended to the name of the statesman referred to.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. KNOX. I merely wish to call the Senator's attention to another clause of the treaty which tremendously strengthens his argument that the various representatives to whom he has referred were signing for one Government, namely, the British Empire. The very first line of the treaty, defining who the principal allied and associated powers are, says:

The United States of America, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan.

Naming the British Empire as one entity.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the British Empire includes every one of the British colonies, the names of whose representatives I have read, and the treaty shows that affirmatively on its face. All of those colonies got into the league through the King. He is the King of one of them just as much as he is the King of the others. It seems to me that the wording of the document demonstrates beyond the possibility of doubt that this one Empire has in the league under this treaty six votes as against any other nation whose representatives signed the treaty and which becomes a member of the league under the treaty.

Suppose, Mr. President, the United States should become involved in war with Great Britain, where would Canada be; where would Australia be; where would New Zealand be; where would South Africa be; and where would India be? All against us. We know that they belong to that one nation.

I am aware that the question is asked—it was asked the other day by my colleague [Mr. HITCHCOCK]—why should we have this jealousy against Canada? Why are we objecting to Canada? We are objecting to Canada for the same reason that we would object to the State of New York if it undertook to be a member of the league; because Canada is a part of the British Empire. She is not an independent nation, and everybody knows it. The treaty shows it, and nobody can successfully deny it.

I have no prejudice against Canada. I wish to say that I feel as friendly toward Canada as toward any nation on the face of the earth outside of our own. I have no jealousy of Canada. I would be glad to see Canada an independent nation, but if Canada wants to be a full-fledged member of this league, if she wants to have a full vote in the council or in the assembly, then let her throw off the shackles of the British Empire and be independent like any other nation. That is her business; I am not criticizing her because she does take such action. If she prefers to stay in the British Empire she has a perfect right to do so; it is not in my mouth to criticize her; but she can not in one breath say, "I am an independent nation entitled to a vote the same as every other nation," and in the next breath say, "I am a part of the British Empire." And then there is India, with a full vote. Everybody knows—it is an open secret—that the only reason on earth for putting India in this league and giving her a vote is to increase the power and influence of Great Britain. It simply adds another vote to Great Britain. Everybody knows and nobody denies it. The people of India will have no more voice in the league than the people of Mars, but this device increases the power of England, and America is asked to stand for it.

If we get into any dispute that may lead to difficulties with any one of these self-governing colonies that are part of the British Empire, we immediately face the British Empire—nothing else, nothing less—and I am not criticizing that. I am only stating it as a fact. Now, the question is, What shall be done to give an equality in this league, on the council, in the assembly, and in the labor conference, where under this treaty as it is written this Empire is given six votes to our one, six men to our one as representatives? How are we going to remedy it?

This amendment is not a full remedy. I admit it. I do not believe it is the logical way, but it seems to be the only outlet that we can have. It seems to be the only way in which we can say that we are entitled to as many votes and as many representatives on every one of these tribunals as any other nation. We are entitled to that; every man knows we are entitled to that; the whole world knows that we are entitled to it, and yet we hesitate to demand it; yet we are here saying we will not take it, we will go into this league handicapped in this way, and giving our chief competitor in the world an opportunity to outvote us with six votes to our one everywhere that we meet her.

Mr. President, it is not only that she has the six votes in these conferences; she gets another power by virtue of those six votes that is indirect, and that has a wonderful influence. The weak nation, the little nation, or perhaps any nation that is going to have controversies in the league, in the council, in the assembly, or in the labor conference, will naturally want to be successful in those controversies; and it therefore follows that they will court the favor of the nation or of the empire that can give them the most in return for their favors. We all know that in actual life, in political conventions and everywhere else, the State or the county that comes with a great, big delegation because of the very fact of its large delegation has a power over other counties and other States and other delegations that are not so large. So that it is an inequality all through. There is not any justice in it. I do not see how any American citizen can stand for it, can approve any treaty that will say, "We are only one-sixth of the importance of some other nation."

If this treaty has been so constructed, as the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] says—and there is something in his argument—by these representatives over there at Versailles, so ingeniously wound up with this evil in it that it can not be remedied without rebuilding it all, then we ought to have the courage to throw it all out, and say that it must be rebuilt or we will have nothing to do with it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] laid great stress upon the coming to a period in reading the description of the representatives of the British Empire and the various self-governing dominions. It is not a matter of any particular importance whether there is a period there or not, but I simply called the attention of the Senator to the fact that these various self-governing colonies are separated by semicolons throughout the entire list, in the same manner precisely as every other member nation signatory thereto.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. OWEN. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I think the Senator is right, as far as the period is concerned, but I want to ask him——

Mr. OWEN. I regard it as immaterial. It makes no difference.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit that. Now, let me ask the Senator this question: On page 5 of this treaty, just after the first representatives of Great Britain are mentioned, there is the word "And." What does that mean, if it does not mean that what follows is a part of the British Empire?

Mr. OWEN. If the Senator will permit me to have the floor for a few moments, I should like to address myself to this matter without being cross-questioned while I do it. I say that with all kindness and with all respect; but I want to make my own argument, and not have the argument made for me by questions.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. OWEN. I yield; certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. Perhaps I owe the Senator an apology for interrupting him.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, not at all—not at all.

Mr. NORRIS. When the Senator has the floor I certainly would not interrupt him in any way except in the most courteous way, but I insist that I am not trying to make his argument for him. I asked him a fair question; I stated it as courteously as I knew how, and I hope he will treat me in the same way.

Mr. OWEN. I certainly intend always to treat with the utmost courtesy my very particular friend from Nebraska, for whom I have the warmest admiration and affection, as the Senator knows; but I want to make my own argument, and I do not want to be interrupted, and I shall not take over three or four minutes. I do not take much time on the floor.

Mr. President, the British Empire is, of course, a composite body, consisting of the original British Empire proper—the British Isles—and then the four great self-governing Dominions and India. I flatly deny that the British Empire has six votes, notwithstanding the assertion of Senators to the contrary. I say the British Empire has one vote, and only one vote, and that vote represents the British Isles and the parts of the British possessions which are not mentioned by specific terms as great, self-governing, modern democracies. Canada has one vote. Australia has one vote. South Africa, consisting of many States, has one vote. New Zealand has one vote.

India, which is in fact governed by the foreign office of Great Britain, has one vote, and it is quite possible that the nominee from India might be designated by the foreign office in London, although I do not believe that the foreign office would go so far as to deny India the right of nominating its own representative. But India has nearly 300,000,000 people. Surely no man would deny India the right to one vote when we have given one vote to Haiti, governed by our marines, just at our border, which has not one thousandth part as many people as India.

Canada has one vote, and no man will presume to say that the British Empire, under the direction of the prime minister, Mr. Lloyd-George, would undertake for one moment to tell Canada who the representative of Canada should be in the assembly. It would be an act of unbearable presumption on the part of Lloyd-George to attempt to do such a thing.

No man will contend that the government of the British Isles would venture to tell New Zealand or Australia or South Africa what representative citizens should be sent to represent them or under what instructions. They send their own representatives under their own instructions. They are self-governing people, entitled to self-government of right, just as much as the people of the United States are entitled to self-government. They send their own chosen and instructed representatives. They are severally progressive democracies. I speak of Australia, and of New Zealand, and of South Africa, and of Canada. If the English Government were Tory and reactionary in the extreme, those four votes would dominate the six votes if they attempted to vote as a unit, which they would not do. Gen. Smuts expressed his discontent with the conference at Paris. It did not fulfill his expectations. He was completely at liberty.

The trouble with the Senators who oppose this treaty is that they have no faith in the common honesty or the common sense of mankind or of the representatives who will be assembled around the council table of the assembly. All their arguments are based on this false and grossly unjust conception.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, this question of equalizing the power both as to voting and as to the influence of the United States in this league is a very difficult one. That is to say, it has been difficult to draw an amendment which would cover the entire subject matter. There is no longer any doubt, I presume, that this amendment as it is now drawn covers a very important and vital feature of this problem of inequality which exists in the league. Whether it covers it completely or not, it seems to be conceded that there is a vital portion of the question which is effectually covered by this amendment.

I think the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] is quite logical when he says that he is going to vote for this amendment and also vote for a reservation; but, assuming that Senators desired to equalize the influence and the vote, I do not see how they could vote against this amendment and rely alone upon a reservation, because no reservation which has been proposed and no reservation which can be proposed will cover the entire subject matter and completely solve the problem.

I believe, Mr. President, if it were not for the fact that Senators desire not to amend this treaty, if it were not for the fact that as a matter of expediency they do not care to send it back as an amended document, the amendment of the Senator from California would be accepted almost out of hand.

Senators seem to think that it is better to suffer this inequality than to take the chance of sending the treaty back. I do not agree with them; but if this matter were here as an original proposition, if the Senate were making this treaty and there were not involved the question of sending it back for reconsideration, as some of them view it, I venture to say that the amendment of the Senator from California would be accepted practically without a dissenting vote. It is inconceivable, it is unthinkable, that without some reason which a Senator thinks is a controlling reason he would deny to his country equality of voting, equality of influence, in a vast organization which is supposed to last not only for a decade, but for all time, and to deal with all the affairs of the world.

Mr. President, in refusing to send this treaty back we ought to take into consideration that we are building, if we are building at all, not for a day or for a year, but for all time to come, if this matter shall meet the expectations of those who are the authors of it. Is it a safe thing for us to proceed, to the disadvantage of our country, upon the theory that we do not desire to delay for a certain length of time the consummation of the league?

It has occurred to me, Mr. President, that such an able lawyer as the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], if he were really concerned for the protection of his country, the preservation of her prestige and her power and her honor in this great organization, instead of expending his ingenuity in assailing this amendment, he would give us the benefit of his learning and his ability as a lawyer toward perfecting it. Nobody denies that his reservation takes care of only a small portion of it, and it leaves the control of this great assembly in the election of its members, and in all of these noncontentious matters, or nondisputable matters, to which the Senator from Pennsylvania referred, uncovered and uncontrolled by the question of equality. How is he going to leave it? What is his remedy? He offers nothing. And yet such Senators as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] frankly concede that this amendment is the only way to reach a certain vital part of this problem.

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], in speaking the other day, said:

> I do not claim that the British Empire should have six votes in the assembly or more than one representative in the council; I shall not defend the action of the President in granting the demands of the British Empire in this respect.

Why should he not defend the action of the President in granting the demands of the British Empire if he proposes to let them retain what they got? Having the power as a coordinate branch of the Government in the treaty-making power, and it being within his power to remedy it, why should he criticize the President or anyone else for giving Great Britain that which he as a Senator permits her to retain?

Further, he said:

> I do not think the President stood for all he should have, nor did he demand all he should have for his country at Versailles.

What is the Senator from Minnesota demanding in addition? What is he adding to that which the President came home with? Where is his ability as a lawyer that it is not devoted, while he is a public official, to the welfare of his country? It is easy, Mr. President, to find fault and criticize, but it would seem that he would strive to strengthen this amendment and protect his country against the injustice which he admits to exist. It would seem he would devote his ability to building up and strengthening this amendment, instead of tearing it down.

He said further:

> If he proposes to decrease the influence of Great Britain in the assembly of the nations of the world, he must either take from Great Britain her six votes, which he does not propose to do, or he must give every other nation in the world the same vote under all circumstances.

There is a disposition here to look after all of the other nations of the world. We can only do successfully and efficiently one thing, and that is look after the interests of the United States, and we need not suffer any remorse of conscience if we devote ourselves to that, and that successfully, because we learned at Versailles that the other nations look after their own interests, and that they do not need any guardian. The treaty as it came from Versailles demonstrates one thing beyond question, and that is that the representatives of the other nations took care of their interests perfectly and successfully.

The able Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] said that we must have regard for the other nations and that we must not place ourselves in a position where we seem to disregard their interests. The other nations can harmonize the situation to the welfare of the United States, and will undoubtedly do so rather than give up the idea that the United States is to underwrite the other nations. They can equalize their interests, and they will undoubtedly do so, and all we have to do is to take care, as best we may, of the interests of the United States. You can not do it in any other way than by an amendment. You can have a reservation, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] says, which will take care of a portion of it, but you can not have a reservation which will take care of the entire portion. So the logical position to assume, it seems to me, for all except those who are opposed to amending the treaty under any consideration whatever, is to vote for the amendment, and then vote for reservations, and you will have done all within your power to equalize the British Empire and the United States.

I was talking to a distinguished Englishman the other day upon this particular question, and he was very frank to say that he recognized the inequalities of the provisions of the covenant in regard to this. But he said, "You understand the peculiar situation in which we are placed by reason of the fact that we have these self-governing dominions, who have certain ideas about their rights and about their dignity and about their authority, which we were compelled to recognize."

We do not seek to interfere with that in this amendment. It has been stated over and over again, and it can not be stated too often, that we have no desire to interfere with the peculiar situation with which Great Britain has to deal. We have no desire to shear anything away from the power of the self-governing dominions. We have not undertaken to do so by this amendment. But we have undertaken, in view of the peculiar situation of the British Empire, to equalize it by an amendment which places us upon an equality with her, both as to votes and as to influence, leaving the British Empire to take care of her self-governing dominions, interfering in nowise with her policy, but simply claiming for the United States that equality of power and influence to which she is entitled, as we think, under the league.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. President, during the course of the debate this afternoon the statement was made that objection had been made to the preponderant vote of the British Empire nowhere except in this Chamber. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] made that statement. I have seen it made in the press of this country. It must be, therefore, that Senators who share that view and editors of newspapers who represent it neither read the cables from Paris nor study the Journal of the French Chamber of Deputies.

The Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], when last he spoke, referred to the statement of Leon Bourgeois, once prime minister of France, and to be the first member for France of the council of the league of nations, in which he criticized the voting power accorded the British Empire under the covenant of the league.

M. Augagneur, speaking for the deputies on the left, in a bitter speech expressed an opinion like that of M. Bourgeois. Finally M. Franklin-Bouillon, whom some Senators met when he was in this country, who later became a member of the French Cabinet, and who is at this time chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Chamber of Deputies, in terms which might well have been those of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] or the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], spoke in condemnation of the inequality and the injustice implied in according to one power six votes while other powers of the first rank have but one vote.

Indeed, Mr. President, while it is far from the fact that criticism has been uttered in no chamber other than this, it is a fact that only here in the Senate of the United States has unqualified indorsement of the six votes for the British Empire been heard. Not in any parliament of the British Empire has anyone made any such sweeping statement as has been made on this floor.

I have been able to read the Journal of the Chamber of Deputies and the Hansard, the official report of the debates in the Canadian Parliament, which, in part, have been quoted by other Senators. But I believe that no Senator has quoted from the long and interesting speech of a member of the House of Commons of Canada who for 16 years was a member of the Canadian cabinet. The speech, in part, was a reply to Sir Robert Borden, who argued that for Canada the arrangement made afforded all the advantages of independence and none of the disadvantages. Canada was to be a member of the league within the league; she would have her own representative as the representative of the Dominion in the assembly, and, if I read Sir Robert's speech aright, that Great Britain would yield the place in the council of the league to a representative of Canada if Canadian interests were at stake.

Replying, in part, to the speeches of Sir Robert Borden and Mr. Doherty, who had spoken for the Government, as they say in Canada, that is, for the administration, Mr. Fielding said:

> I think the putting forth of the claim for representation of Canada separate and apart from the British Empire was not wise, and I think it is going to make for trouble in the future. It has already been the cause of trouble in the United States. * * * I think the claim * * * has a large measure of logic in it.

Behold, we have a member of the Canadian House of Commons answering Senators of the United States, and upholding, as against Senators in the American Senate, the right of the United States to equal representation. He continued:

> I think the claim * * * has a large measure of logic in it, when they say it is unfair that they, a Nation of over 100,000,000 people, should have only one representative in the assembly of the league of nations, while the British Empire has six. I do not see any logical answer to them.

This is not a Senator from Minnesota nor a Senator from Maine who is speaking, although you may be astonished to hear me say so, but a member of the Canadian House of Commons. He continued:

> I had suggested, as my honorable friends may remember, in a former session, that the State of New York would have as much reason to ask for special representation, in addition to the national representation at the peace conference as Canada would, because the State of New York is a big factor in the United States; much bigger, I think, than Canada is in the British Empire.
>
> It is difficult to answer the contention that the State of New York, or any other great State, was as much entitled to separate representation as any separate section of the British Empire. The president of the council met that by this comment: "Why," he said, "the United States is one great nation, while the British Empire is composed not only of the United Kingdom but of five other nations, and therefore there is no comparison between them." A moment's reflection will show my honorable friend that that argument can not bear examination. He uses the word "nation" in the same breath in two ways as meaning the same thing, when it means entirely different things. The nation that he speaks of, the United States, is a sovereign nation subject to nobody, while the five nations that he speaks of are not nations at all, but dependencies of the British crown and subject to British authority.

Mr. President, perhaps because Mr. Fielding does not care to reflect upon the political status of another part of the empire, while he continues to argue regarding the independent sovereignty, the true national status of all of the dependencies of the empire, he makes no special allusion to India, the empire of India, for whom one of the signatories is Edwin Samuel Montagu, chosen doubtless, as the Senator from Oklahoma indicated, by the Indians under some very peculiar method of democratic representation. I think if we search for Mr. Montagu's Indian origin we should find it first in London, then perhaps in Harrow or Westminster, and so on through Cambridge to the Inns of Court, and then, thanks to activities of the Government whip, to a seat in the House of Commons until he was dispatched upon a mission to devise a homeopathic method of applying self-government and self-determination to India. I venture that perhaps he had never stepped upon the shores of the Indian empire of whom he was one of the representatives. Certainly, then, Indian democracy has its own exponent, its own representative, in the other signatory for the great Empire, Maj. Gen. His Highness Maharaja Sir Ganga Singh Bahadur—and I will ask leave that the balance may be printed in the RECORD, and therefore will not tax the attention of the Senate to read his titles and dignities enumerated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, that will be the order.

The matter referred to is as follows:

> Major-General His Highness Maharaja Sir Ganga Singh Bahadur, Maharaja of Bikaner, G. C. S. I., G. C. I. E., G. C. V. O., K. C. B., A. D. C.

Mr. McCORMICK. This democratic representative of 300,000,000 people is an autocrat, a very enlightened autocrat, sent to Europe, by the appointment of the viceroy whose origin is no more Indian than that of Mr. Montagu.

Mr. President, the truth is that there is no logic and there is no justice as between the principal powers in the representation accorded the British Empire. If you please, justice may require that the self-governing dominions should be given some voice, although that is moot, since their diplomatic representatives are the same persons who represent the foreign office in London. But, if you please, I will accept, and other Senators of my view will accept, the proposition that justice requires that they shall be represented in the assembly of the league. Political exigency, then, in order to present to the Indian masses the semblance of empire and nationality and self-determination, exigency, expediency required that India should not be denied what the dominions were accorded. If the other great powers are ready to assent to the inequality, although that is not true, if one may judge by the debates in the French chamber, it is not incumbent on us to assert their right to equal representation. If we succeed in securing for the United States as many votes as has the British Empire, and the other principal powers ask for the same number, surely no representative of this country would stand in their way.

The supporters of the amendment introduced by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] to-day, like those who supported the committee amendment which bore his name, have not wanted to disfranchise any of the self-governing dominions. They have not sought to belittle the civilization or growing industry or growing power or the sacrifices of South Africa or New Zealand or Australia or Canada. I shall be glad again to bear witness to the valor of their arms in the field, as I did when I returned from the front, where I had beheld the British armies assembled from all the Empire, engaged with incomparable sacrifice and gallantry in the struggle in which we finally had a part.

This is an issue, Mr. President, which will not down. It is not a mere legal abstraction. It will raise an issue in the league, if ever we enter it, that will touch the national pride and self-respect of the American people. The question will live with us, not only here in the Senate but throughout the country. In the States and in the counties, in the cities and at the crossroads, Americans will say to one another, "The Senate failed to do its duty and to secure 100,000,000 people a voting power equal to that accorded 60,000,000 of self-governing people."

A few days ago, Mr. President, I sought to make inquiry of one of the Senators who was speaking in opposition to the amendment offered by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON], or, rather, the committee amendment which bore his name. I sought to learn from him his opinion regarding a situation which might develop through the appointment and finding of a committee, to which the council had failed to agree unanimously or to which the assembly had failed to agree by the vote required for binding action.

Under article 5 of the covenant a majority may appoint a committee to investigate particular matters. A committee appointed by a majority of the assembly may investigate an alleged tort, a dispute, or any matter affecting the peace of the world brought to the attention of the council or the assembly of the league.

Let us assume, as we may, that the committee has brought in its judgment; that it should be adverse to our interests directly, or, as touching some other power in South America or in Asia, almost equally adverse to our interests, indirectly. Certainly Senators can conceive that there might be a dispute on the shores of the Pacific or the Caribbean which would affect our interests almost as intimately as if it were a dispute with the United States itself.

Under article 15, if the council did not with the necessary unanimity or the assembly did not agree with the necessary vote to the report of the committee, members of the league "reserve to themselves the right to take such action as they shall consider necessary for the maintenance of right and justice." That means that the committee would have made up the case before the public opinion of the world, and the great powers, failing decision under the covenant, supported by public opinion, created, organized by the committee, would take such action as they saw fit "for the maintenance of right and justice." Here certainly, in a very real and material sense, the six votes held in fee by the British Empire and the four others held by mortgage would play a great part in the constitution of the committees whose findings would determine the public opinion of the world. Under those findings the nations should draw the sword, as provided in article 15. Until this injustice is cured, until the covenant, if it be adopted, be purged of this inequality, the American people, moved by self-interest and self-preservation, by pride in their patrimony, will never allow this question to rest.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote!

Mr. LODGE. Regular order!

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gerry	Lodge	Simmons
Ball	Gronna	McCormick	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Hale	McKellar	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Harding	McLean	Smith, Md.
Calder	Harris	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Chamberlain	Henderson	Moses	Smoot
Colt	Hitchcock	Nelson	Spencer
Culberson	Johnson, Calif.	New	Sterling
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newberry	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Swanson
Dial	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Thomas
Dillingham	Kellogg	Overman	Townsend
Edge	Kendrick	Owen	Trammell
Elkins	Kenyon	Penrose	Wadsworth
Fall	Keyes	Phelan	Walsh, Mass.
Fernald	King	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	Kirby	Pomerene	Warren
France	Knox	Ransdell	Watson
Frelinghuysen	La Follette	Sheppard	Wolcott
Gay	Lenroot	Shields

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is upon the amendment proposed by the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. HITCHCOCK, Mr. JONES of Washington, and Mr. LA FOLLETTE called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SWANSON (when Mr. BANKHEAD's name was called). The senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] is unavoidably detained from the Senate. He is paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE]. If he were present, the Senator from Alabama would vote "nay" and the Senator from Vermont, if present, would vote "yea."

Mr. GRONNA (when his name was called). On this question I have a pair with my colleague, the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. If he were present and I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea" and he would vote "nay." Not being able to get a transfer of my pair, I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARDING (when his name was called). Because of a standing general pair with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], I am unable to vote. If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). In order that the Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] may have the privilege of voting on his own amendment, I have taken from him the pair existing between him and the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and, in the absence of the Senator from Virginia, I withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a pair on this vote with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SWANSON (when the name of Mr. SMITH of Arizona was called). The Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If he were present, the Senator from Arizona would vote "nay." He is unavoidably detained from the Senate.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. He being absent, I am obliged to withhold my vote. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SWANSON (when Mr. UNDERWOOD's name was called). The junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], who is detained from the Senate on account of sickness, is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. If the Senator from Alabama were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I am paired for the afternoon with the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], as has been stated by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] is paired with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED]. The Senator from Missouri is in favor of the amendment and the Senator from Kentucky is against it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I have a pair on this vote with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 42, as follows:

YEAS—35.

Ball	Fall	Lenroot	Poindexter
Borah	Fernald	Lodge	Shields
Brandegee	France	McCormick	Smoot
Calder	Frelinghuysen	McLean	Spencer
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	New	Townsend
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kenyon	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Knox	Penrose	Watson
Elkins	La Follette	Phipps

NAYS—42.

Ashurst	Harrison	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Henderson	Myers	Smith, Md.
Colt	Hitchcock	Nelson	Sterling
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nugent	Swanson
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Thomas
Edge	Kellogg	Owen	Trammell
Fletcher	Kendrick	Phelan	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	Keyes	Pomerene	Williams
Gerry	King	Ransdell	Wolcott
Hale	Kirby	Sheppard
Harris	McKellar	Simmons

NOT VOTING—19.

Bankhead	McCumber	Reed	Stanley
Beckham	Martin	Robinson	Sutherland
Gore	Moses	Sherman	Underwood
Gronna	Page	Smith, Ariz.	Warren
Harding	Pittman	Smith, S. C.

So the amendment of Mr. JOHNSON of California was rejected.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business with closed doors.

The motion was agreed to, and the doors were closed. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LODGE. As in legislative session, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate, as in legislative session, adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, October 30, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate October 29 (legislative day, October 22), 1919.

BUREAU OF FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC COMMERCE.

Herman G. Brock to be Second Assistant Director Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce in the Department of Commerce.

UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Roland D. Horne to be junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE.

Maurice H. Donahue to be United States circuit judge, sixth circuit.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

William H. Tschappat to be colonel.

QUARTERMASTER CORPS.

Harry E. Wilkins to be colonel.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

Edgar Jadwin to be colonel.
Edward M. Markham to be lieutenant colonel.

To be majors.

Stuart C. Godfrey.
Francis C. Harrington.

CAVALRY.

To be captains.

Samuel V. Constant.
William C. Chase.
Norman E. Fiske.
Donald O. Miller.
Wilson T. Bals.
Cyrus J. Wilder.
Harold C. Fellows.
John T. Pierce, jr.
George M. Herringshaw.
Thomas F. Limbocker.
Cornelius M. Daly.
Richard B. Trimble.

To be first lieutenants.

Carleton Swasey.
Edwin W. Godbold.
Hugh Brooks.

John G. White.
Raymond C. Gibbs.
Leo F. Crane.
Rohland A. Isker.
Robert R. Maxwell.
Charles A. Horger.
Arthur D. Soper.
Conrad G. Wall.
Harold A. Davis.
Charlie E. Hart.
James T. Donald.
Edward G. Knowles.
Francis V. Terry.
Charles E. Dissinger.
Martin G. Charles.
Earl M. Abbott.
Samuel V. H. Danzig.
George F. Neilson.
Dean A. Jones.
Hugh F. Conrey.
Paul C. Febiger.
Alexander D. Mason.
Earle L. Hazard.
Paul J. King.
Harry E. Pendleton.
Benton F. Munday.
Gyles Merrill.
William C. Bowie.
Wilfred E. Willis.
John B. Seaton.
James M. Adamson, jr.
Charles E. Sheldrake.
Joe C. Rogers.
Frank A. Allen, jr.
Guy O. Kurtz.
Louis J. Compton.
Clarence A. Lefferts.
Read Wipprecht.
Claire M. Daugherty.
Ceylon O. Griffin.
Dimetrio P. Harkins.
Bruce M. McDill.
Loren F. Parmley.
Edward Herendeen.
Grayson H. Bowers.
Thomas W. Herren.
Harry G. Clarke.
Alden H. Seabury.
Fred W. Koester.
Clarence A. Shannon.
Alexander B. MacNabb.
William N. Todd, jr.
Walton W. Cox.
Dudley Miller.
John K. Egan.
Thomas R. Taber.
Ross E. Larsen.
Charles W. Burton.
Calvert L. Estill.
Nathan Cockrell.
Cecil J. North.
Robert M. Eichelsdoerfer.
James T. Watson, jr.
Edward B. Harry.
Herbert D. Bowman
Albert G. Klapp.
Fred P. Clark.
Harry Leroy Jones.
George S. Clarke.
Harold P. Stewart.
Harold LaR. K. Albro.
Darrow Menoher.
Mark A. Devine, jr.
Gerald FitzGerald.
William H. Killian.
Carl J. Dockler.
Olin C. Newell.
Lawrence T. Brown.

FIELD ARTILLERY.

To be lieutenant colonel.

Edgar H. Yule.

To be major.

Edmund L. Gruber.

To be first lieutenants.

John C. Miller, jr.
Walter A. Metts, jr.
Morgan F. Simmons.
Frank Camm.
Leonard H. Frasier.
Clifford B. Cole.
John S. Burrell.
Richardson L. Greene.
Roland MacGray.
Robert J. Horr.
John L. Grant.
Paul L. Deylitz.
Leo M. Kreber.
Edwin L. Sibert.
O'Ferrall Knight.
Charles C. Blanchard.
Paul E. Hurt.

POSTMASTERS.

MARYLAND.

Walter S. Wilson, Aberdeen.
Edward W. Ross, Pocomoke City.
Thomas D. Bowers, Chestertown.
Adelia E. Bowers, Millington.

NEW JERSEY.

Matthias C. Ely, Jersey City.
John Jenkins, Delanco.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Sadie R. Keffer, Clairton.
Besse M. McCauley, Dravosburg.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, October 29, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father in heaven, teach us to know, respect, and dignify law—the laws which Thou hast made and the laws which men have enacted out of the experiences of life; that we may be obedient servants of the living God and law-abiding citizens of the State and Nation of which we are a part; that out of the reconstruction of life through which we are passing, brought about by a world-wide war, harmony, peace, and plenty may crown the efforts of our statesmen and bring back the normal. Through Him who taught us brotherly love, pure and noble life; and Thine be the praise forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. To-day is Calendar Wednesday.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOOD. The conference report on the first deficiency bill has been agreed to by the Senate. The agreement was a unanimous agreement. I believe it would take but a very short time to dispose of it in the House, and I move, therefore, to dispense with Calendar Wednesday only long enough to take up and dispose of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to dispense with Calendar Wednesday until the conference report referred to is disposed of——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is such a motion proper? Should it not be rather by unanimous consent?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion is proper.

Mr. BLANTON. To dispense with Calendar Wednesday?

The SPEAKER. Yes. The rule provides, the Chair's recollection is, five minutes' debate on a side.

Mr. KAHN. I would like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations a question. How long will it take to dispose of this report?

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the report can be disposed of very quickly. It has been published now for two days; everybody knows what it is. I think there is only one item about which there is any dispute, and it ought not to take an hour to dispose of the conference report.

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection, if it can be done in an hour.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that, in the opinion of the Chair two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, Calendar Wednesday was dispensed with until the conference report is disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9205) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 10, 12, 28, 31, 34, 35, 40, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 55, 62, 63, 64, 72, and 73.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 5, 7, 11, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 29, 30, 32, 36, 37, 38, 39, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 57, 58, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, and 86, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 2: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

"COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC INFORMATION.

"Authority is hereby granted the Director of the Council of National Defense to expend during the fiscal year 1920 the sum of $32,000 from the funds now to the credit of the Committee on Public Information for necessary expenses incurred therefor since July 1, 1919, and for the expenses of auditing and closing the accounts and affairs of said committee. All unexpended balances of appropriations for and allotments to the Committee on Public Information shall remain available for payment, under the direction of the Director of the Council of National Defense, of such liabilities as were actually and necessarily incurred by the committee prior to June 30, 1919: Provided, That $1,000,000 of such appropriations and allotments shall be covered into the Treasury immediately upon the passage of this act."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 4: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 4, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "continuing" and insert in lieu thereof the word "completing"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 6: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 4 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "Ten" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Five," and in line 6 strike out "$1,600" and insert in lieu thereof "$800"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 8: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 8, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all of the matter inserted by said amendment after line 15; and the Senate agreed to the same.

Amendment numbered 9: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 9, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$200,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$4,863,176"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 41: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended to read as follows:

"ORDNANCE DEPARTMENT.

"Ordnance reservation civilian schools: Authority is granted for the expenditure during the fiscal year 1920 of not to exceed $45,000 from appropriations heretofore made for the 'purchase, manufacture, and test of ammunition for mountain, field, and siege cannon,' for the operation and maintenance on ordnance reservations at Amatol and Mays Landing, N. J.; Nitro, W. Va.; Jacksonville, Tenn.; Penniman, Va.; Sheffield and Muscle Shoals, Ala.; and Tullytown, Pa., of schools for children of persons employed thereon, where public schools are not conveniently available for such children, including salaries, supplies, stationery, and industrial work, replacement and repair of books and equipment, and all incidental and necessary expenses in connection therewith."

On page 11 of the bill in line 10 strike out "1919" and insert in lieu thereof "1910."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"NAVY DEPARTMENT.

"Rent: For rental of additional quarters for the Navy Department, fiscal year 1919, $175."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 56: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 56, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$6,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 59: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 59, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$500," and in line 4 strike out "$666.67" and insert in lieu thereof "$333.34"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 60: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 60, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$600," and in line 5 strike out "$666.67" and insert in lieu thereof "$400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 61: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 61, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 2 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out "$1,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$600," and in line 3 strike out "$666.67" and insert in lieu thereof "$400"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 65, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$45,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 74: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF LABOR.

"For salaries and expenses of the international conference of labor, as follows:

"United States Government executive staff: For two and one-half months, at monthly compensation as follows: Assistant to the Secretary, $450; first assistant, $300; three executive assistants, at $200 each; two assistants at hotels, at $200 each; private secretary, $200; two stenographers, at $150 each; typist, $125; and two messengers, at $75 each; in all, $6,312.50.

"Conference staff, for two months, at monthly compensation as follows: Two stenographers, at $150 each; two deputy secretaries, at $300 each; four subsecretaries (for commissions), at $200 each; four interpreters, at $200 each; three English-French translators, at $200 each; three French-English translators, at $200 each; six French stenographers, at $83.33 each; six English stenographers, at $150 each; chief messenger, $125; eight messengers, at $75 each; expenses, at not exceeding $10 per diem for each person, $12,000; in all, $23,649.96.

"Chief clerk's office, for two months, at monthly compensation as follows: Chief clerk, $200; assistant chief clerk, $150; and stenographer, $150; in all, $1,000.

"Expenses: For reporting proceedings, $20,000; printing proceedings, $10,000; paper, $2,500; contingent expenses, $1,000; in all, $33,500.

"Total, international conference of labor, $64,462.46: Provided, That all accounting in connection with the conference shall be done by the disbursing officer of the Department of Labor: Provided further, That no part of the money herein appropriated for the international conference of labor shall be available for the payment of an allowance for per diem expenses in lieu of subsistence to any person residing in the District of Columbia: Provided further, That this sum shall not be supplemented by expenditures from any other appropriation nor shall any part of this or any other appropriation be used for telegraphing or cabling the proceedings of the said conference."

And the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$1,075"; and the Senate agree to the same.

JAMES W. GOOD,
J. G. CANNON,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
Managers on the part of the House.
F. E. WARREN,
CHARLES CURTIS,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9205) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Strikes out the paragraph, inserted by the Senate, requiring the executive departments and independent establishments to report each proposed new activity or investigation to the Bureau of Efficiency, and also the paragraph directing the Bureau of Efficiency to investigate the methods of business in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

On No. 2: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, relative to the closing up of the accounts of the Committee on Public Information, modified so as to authorize the use of $32,000 of unexpended balances for expenses incident to the work during the fiscal year 1920, and covers into the Treasury $1,000,000 of the unexpended balances of appropriations and allotments.

On Nos. 3, 4, 5, and 6, relating to the District of Columbia: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, reappropriating certain unexpended balances of appropriations for sewer construction work for 1919 and makes them available for 1920; appropriates $19,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the upper Potomac interceptor; inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, increasing from 20 per cent to 33⅓ per cent the amount of the appropriation for community forums and civic centers which may be expended for the payment of secretaries, teachers, organizers, and clerks; and appropriates $800 instead of $1,600, as proposed by the Senate, for charwomen for the new courthouse.

On No. 7: Appropriates $2,900, as proposed by the Senate, for the Columbia Hospital.

On No. 8: Appropriates $5,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, for the Federal Board for Vocational Education for the vocational rehabilitation of soldiers and sailors; and strikes out that portion of the amendment authorizing the transfer from the War Department to the Federal Board for Vocational Education of certain equipment valued approximately at $250,000.

On Nos. 9, 10, 11, and 12, relating to the State Department: Appropriates $200,000 instead of $100,000, as proposed by the House, and $461,666.67, as proposed by the Senate, for additional officers and employees; appropriates $4,140.28, as proposed by the Senate, to provide for compensation of the ambassador to Belgium; strikes out the increase of $200,000, proposed by the Senate, in the appropriation to reimburse the fund "Emergencies arising in the Diplomatic and Consular Service, fiscal year 1920," on account of the expenses of the American mission to negotiate peace.

On Nos. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22: Appropriates for certain additional employees in the Treasury Department from November 1, 1919, as proposed by the Senate, instead of from October 1, 1919, as proposed by the House.

On Nos. 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27, relating to public buildings: Increases the amount which may be expended during the fiscal year 1920 for repairs on Treasury Department buildings in the District of Columbia from $16,000 to $21,000, as proposed by the Senate; appropriates $2,800 additional for the purchase of a post-office site at Mount Olive, N. C.; appropriates $3,000 for rent of quarters at Nashville, Tenn.; appropriates $1,500 for rent of quarters at Newport, R. I.; and $125,000 for additional construction at the Cape Charles (Va.) quarantine station, as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 28 and 29, relating to the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department: Strikes out the increase of $25,000, proposed by the Senate, and inserts the proviso proposed by the Senate, authorizing a maximum pay of $12 per day to not to exceed three persons.

On No. 30: Appropriates $136,813.94, as proposed by the Senate, for additional employees in the office of the Treasurer to be employed in redeeming national currency.

On Nos. 31, 32, and 33, relating to the Bureau of War Risk Insurance: Strikes out the appropriation of $1,000,000 proposed by the Senate for advertising and inserts the appropriation of $161,536 for the purchase of addressograph supplies, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 34: Strikes out the appropriation of $31,000, proposed by the Senate, for telephone lines for the Coast Guard.

On No. 35: Strikes out the appropriation of $55,000, proposed by the Senate, for additional scales for the Customs Service.

On No. 36: Inserts the paragraph, as proposed by the Senate, requiring the American Printing House for the Blind to furnish two copies of each of its publications free of charge to the National Library for the Blind.

On No. 37: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, establishing a credit of $147 in the accounts of C. G. Duganne, formerly disbursing officer of the Reclamation Service at Denver, Colo.

On No. 38: Appropriates $550, as proposed by the Senate, to credit the accounts of Sydney E. Smith, disbursing clerk of the War Department.

On No. 39: Inserts the language, proposed by the Senate, making the appropriation for contingent expenses of the War Department available for heating apparatus and repairs to buildings occupied by the War Department other than the State, War, and Navy Building.

On No. 40: Strikes out the appropriation of $200,000 for continuing the construction of the Aqueduct Bridge.

On No. 41: Restores the language, stricken out by the Senate, authorizing the maintenance of schools on Army ordnance reservations, modified so as to authorize the use of $45,000 instead of $64,000 as proposed by the House, and specifies the places at which schools may be maintained.

This amendment also corrects an error in the text of the bill by properly identifying a reference to the river and harbor appropriation act of June 25, 1910.

On No. 42: Strikes out the appropriation of $35,000, proposed by the Senate, for the purchase of a bridge across the Missouri River at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.

On No. 43: Strikes out the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the expenditure of $13,872 for the purchase of certain land at Camp McClellan, Ala.

On No. 44: Strikes out the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the expenditure during the fiscal year 1920 of $15,681,350 of unexpended balances of appropriations made during the fiscal years 1918 and 1919 for the Air Service of the Army.

On Nos. 45, 46, 47, and 48, relating to the Navy Department: Strikes out the appropriations, proposed by the Senate, for increases in compensation of draftsmen and engravers in the Hydrographic Office; strikes out the paragraphs, proposed by the Senate, authorizing certain expenditures in the office of the Naval Records and Library; inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, appropriating $175 for rent of quarters; and inserts the appropriation of $6,289.94, as proposed by the Senate, for the payment of claims for damages which have been adjusted by the Secretary of the Navy in accordance with existing law.

On No. 49: Strikes out, as proposed by the Senate, the paragraph authorizing the transfer of $9,300,000 from appropriations for "Pay of the Navy" and "Provisions of the Navy" for the fiscal year 1920 to other bureaus of the Navy Department for work in connection with the repair of vessels.

On No. 50: Reduces from $800,000 to $500,000, as proposed by the Senate, the amount which may be expended from the appropriation "Maintenance, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts," for pay of classified employees.

On No. 51: Appropriates $3,500, as proposed by the Senate, for repair of an annex to the Senate folding room.

On No. 52: Appropriates $160,000, as proposed by the Senate, for expenses incurred in protecting timber on the public lands from forest fires.

On Nos. 53, 54, and 55, relating to the Patent Office: Appropriates for additional employees from November 1, 1919, as proposed by the Senate, instead of from October 1, 1919, as proposed by the House; and strikes out the appropriation of $7,333.34 for additional employees to bring up to date the trade-mark work of that office.

On No. 56: Appropriates $6,000,000 instead of $17,000,000, as proposed by the Senate, for continuing the construction of the Alaskan Railroad.

On Nos. 57 and 58, relating to the Postal Service: Appropriates $750,000 for compensation of clerks and employees at first and second class post offices, as proposed by the Senate; and appropriates $700,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $300,000, as proposed by the House, for the payment of limited indemnity on mail matter for the fiscal year 1919.

On Nos. 59, 60, 61, 62, and 63, relating to the Department of Justice: Increases the compensation of the chief clerk at the rate of $500 per annum instead of at the rate of $1,000 per annum, as proposed by the Senate; increases the compensation of the private secretary and assistant to the Attorney General, and the attorney in charge of pardons, at the rate of $600 each, instead of at the rate of $1,000 each, as proposed by the Senate; strikes out the appropriation of $5,000, proposed by the Senate, for additional motor vehicles; and strikes out the authority, proposed by the Senate, for the purchase and maintenance of motor vehicles in connection with the detection and prosecution of crimes.

On No. 64: Strikes out the appropriation of $2,000, proposed by the Senate, for the payment of a United States district attorney of Portland, Oreg., for services rendered during the years 1916 and 1917.

On No. 65: Appropriates $45,000, instead of $25,000, as proposed by the House and $70,000 as proposed by the Senate, for the control and prevention of the spread of the Japanese beetle.

On No. 66: Appropriates $2,950,000 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $2,500,000 as proposed by the House, for expenses of the Forest Service in fighting and preventing forest fires.

On No. 67: Strikes out the paragraph, proposed by the House, authorizing the purchase and maintenance of a motor vehicle for the official use of the Director of the Census.

On Nos. 68, 69, 70, 71, and 72, relating to the Coast and Geodetic Survey: Strikes out the appropriation of $12,000, proposed by the House, to increase the compensation of draftsmen; strikes out the appropriation of $5,000, proposed by the House, to increase the compensation of engravers; strikes out the appropriation of $35,622.23, proposed by the Senate, to increase the compensation of draftsmen, engravers, computers, lithographers, transferrers, pressmen, plate printers, and certain other employees; appropriates for additional draftsmen and other employees from November 1, 1919, as proposed by the Senate, instead of from October 1, 1919, as proposed by the House.

On No. 73: Strikes out the appropriation of $35,000, proposed by the Senate, for expenses of the industrial conference.

On No. 74: Appropriates $64,462.46, instead of $73,212.46 as proposed by the Senate, for expenses of the international conference of labor. The Senate amendment is modified so as to increase the compensation of three English-French translators and three French-English translators from $125 to $200 per month each; to strike out the appropriation of $650 for expenses of the telegraph room; to strike out the appropriation of $10,000 for expenses of moving departments to provide offices; to insert an appropriation of $1,000 for contingent expenses; and to insert a proviso prohibiting the use of any other appropriation to supplement the funds granted in the bill and also prohibits the use of this or any other appropriation for the expenses of telegraphing or cabling proceedings of the conference.

On No. 75: Appropriates $1,075, instead of $2,150, as proposed by the Senate, for the compensation of statutory employees of the Botanic Garden.

On Nos. 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, and 81, relating to the Senate: Appropriates for the compensation of employees and for other expenses of the Senate in the manner and amounts proposed by each of the Senate amendments.

On No. 82: Appropriates $9,303.95 for the payment of judgments of United States courts which were certified to Congress after the bill had passed the House.

On No. 83: Appropriates $116,630.69 for the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims which were certified to Congress after the bill had passed the House.

On Nos. 84 and 85: Appropriates $1,160,333.82 and $353,920.50, respectively, for the payment of audited claims which were certified to Congress by the Secretary of the Treasury after the bill had passed the House.

On No. 86: Corrects a section number of the bill.

JAMES W. GOOD,
J. G. CANNON,
JAMES F. BYRNES,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, this bill passed the House carrying $14,279,704.67. It passed the Senate carrying $42,443,985.66, which means that the Senate added $28,164,280.99. The Senate has receded on items aggregating $12,982,949.81. The House has receded from its disagreement to Senate amendments in items aggregating $15,181,331.18. The principal items involved in the recessions by the House are the following: Five million dollars for the Federal Board for Vocational Education. The estimate was made to the Senate after the bill passed the House. When the bill passed the House there was no estimate pending before Congress for additional appropriation for this service, and as a strong showing was made, the House, therefore, has accepted the Senate amendment in that regard. The House conferees receded in the matter of additional employees in the State Department. The House bill carried $100,000 for additional employees. The Senate bill carried in a lump sum $300,000, and the report which we have agreed to provides for $200,000, which would mean that the House conferees receded to the extent of $100,000, and the Senate conferees also receded in a like amount. There was also an amendment by the Senate for additional employees in the State Department, carrying $161,666.67. The Senate receded from its disagreement to the amendment, so that the State Department receives $200,000 for additional employees. At Cape Charles, where we have been constructing a quarantine station and doing some dredging, the action of the waves have been such as to endanger the structure, and, while work is going on there now, the War Department felt that the work of filling in might well be done along with the dredging. The Senate adopted an amendment carrying $125,000 for this service, and as it seemed to be an emergency need the House conferees have agreed to the Senate amendment. In the Bureau of War Risk Insurance a Senate amendment carried $1,000,000 for advertising in the newspapers and the magazines by the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. It also carried an item for $161,536 for the purchase of addressograph supplies. There has been considerable agitation with regard to permitting the Bureau of War Risk Insurance to spend money for advertisement in the papers and magazines. I think anyone who has studied carefully and deeply the question of war-risk insurance realizes that the insurance in many cases is similar to industrial insurance, where the insurance premiums must be collected from laborers at short intervals.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. What were they going to advertise for, people to give employment to some clerks they have got down there, so they need not decrease the number?

Mr. GOOD. When the matter was first suggested the Bureau of War Risk Insurance wanted $2,600,000, as I recall, for this purpose. They wanted to arouse public sentiment in favor of this kind of insurance, and at first had in mind to advertise for names of soldiers and addresses, where they could not get in contact with them, so many having left their former residences and could not be located. Latterly they gave that up, and now want to advertise only the merits of Government insurance, and impress upon the discharged soldiers the importance of their carrying this insurance. It seemed to the House conferees, as it did to the Committee on Appropriations when the matter was considered there, that the Government should give every opportunity to every soldier who wants to continue the insurance, and should explain to them the value of this insurance. The committee felt, however, that this could be best done by a letter addressed directly to the soldier, and should not be made to depend upon his looking through a big magazine, with perhaps several hundred pages of advertisements, in order to find an advertisement that would in some measure describe what his rights were.

Now, besides that, the gentleman can well see if we enter this field a million dollars is but a drop in the bucket, and in the end it might mean the purchase or subsidy of magazines and newspapers throughout the country for political purposes. The committee felt that this was a departure that we ought not to make. It called for a small appropriation now that would lead to a large appropriation, and hence the entire amount was eliminated.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Was there any effort in this bill to increase the appropriation for clerk hire in the War Risk Insurance Bureau? Does there seem to be any way of prying these useless clerks away from these positions unless Congress reduces the appropriation? As long as they have money down there they will keep a large number of clerks, which I think anybody who has visited the department and witnessed some of its operations can plainly conclude are not necessary, because they are not doing any work.

Mr. GOOD. When this matter was before the committee there was an estimate for $6,275,000 for additional clerks for the balance of this year. That estimate was on the basis of their present organization. The committee reported out $4,000,000, which will mean a very substantial cut in their present rolls. As I recall they have about 13,000 employees in the bureau, and to continue those employees to the end of this year would have required more than $6,275,000. Now, the director stated that while the work in some of the departments, such as compensation and allowance and allotment, was falling off and soon there would be no one in those departments, yet in the insurance section the work was increasing, and the director complained because we had made the cut of $2,275,000. He says he is fearful he will not be able to conduct the work with that reduced amount, but will try and get along with it. But that amount was not in conference, and the item is just as it passed the House.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Did the director explain why the work was increasing in the insurance section, when so many soldiers were dropping their insurance?

Mr. GOOD. I think it was because they were trying to get them back and to continue this insurance. A strong effort is being made with those who have dropped their insurance to get them to continue it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That ought not to involve a great deal of work.

Mr. GOOD. It seems to involve a great deal. The problem is a big one, to have all these discharged soldiers carry their insurance.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Under the present management, yes; but with proper management, I think not.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. KNUTSON. I understood the gentleman to say that the personnel of the War Risk Bureau consists of about 13,000 clerks?

Mr. GOOD. That is my recollection.

Mr. KNUTSON. What was the number during the war, when we had four million and a half of men under arms?

Mr. GOOD. The work of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, as the gentleman knows, was simply getting under way as the new increments were taken into the Army, and with each draft of men the work greatly increased. But they were way behind with their work, as the gentleman knows, when hostilities ceased.

Mr. KNUTSON. As far as help goes, it seems as though the bureau is in high at the present time. The gentleman said they were just getting under way when the armistice was signed?

Mr. GOOD. I think perhaps there has never been a time when they had more employees than they had there a month or so ago.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is not there any relief in sight from all these useless clerks?

Mr. GOOD. They had 13,307 clerks on August 1, 1919. The table that was inserted in the RECORD does not give the further information the gentleman asks.

Mr. KNUTSON. There has been a very small reduction down there as a matter of fact, has there not?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know that there has been any reduction, but of course there will be a material reduction very soon.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There has been quite an increase, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. GOOD. There was an estimate submitted to the Senate that was not submitted to the House of $160,000 for fighting forest fires on public lands. The House conferees agreed to this amendment of the Senate.

The Senate added $17,000,000 for completing the railroad in Alaska. By the Senate amendment all of the limit of cost of the railroad, as enlarged by the recent bill, was appropriated. The statement from the Secretary of the Interior was to the effect that a large part of this would not be used during this fiscal year, and a large part of it, even, would not be expended in the next fiscal year, but the Secretary did say that he would need $6,000,000 to continue the work for the remainder of this fiscal year, and the Senate receded to the extent of $11,000,000 and the House agreed to the item of $6,000,000 for this service.

The Postmaster General, after the bill passed the House, made an estimate of $1,500,000 for additional clerks and employees in the first and second class post offices. A letter from the Postmaster General is to the effect that the service in these offices had increased to the extent of about 20 per cent during the month of September alone. The House agreed to the amount put in by the Senate, namely, $750,000, which is only half the amount estimated by the department.

The Postmaster General also made an additional estimate for the payment of insurance for limited indemnity to parcel-post packages. The House bill carried $300,000 and the Senate added $400,000 to this item. Considerable criticism has been sent out by the Post Office Department, in letters, of the action of Congress in not making appropriations for this service. That criticism, I might say, was sent out at a time when there was no estimate pending for an appropriation, and yet the department was criticizing Congress because an appropriation had not been made. When their attention was called to that Gov. Dockery was very frank in saying that those letters were sent without his knowledge and that they should never have been sent. The House, however, did agree to the increase of $400,000, which was a supplemental estimate, an amount not considered by the House committee at all, but it can not be expended for any other purpose. It is expended in small items of $4 or $5—I think the average is not over $6 or $7—and the expense involved in writing to the claimant that there is no appropriation ought to be obviated, and that can only be done by an appropriation in the first instance. Besides that, there is considerable profit to the Government in carrying this insurance at the present rates, and a person who suffers a loss ought to be indemnified as soon after the loss as possible.

Mr. PARRISH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GOOD. I yield for a question.

Mr. PARRISH. Does it show from the hearings or from evidence before the committee whether or not the $5,000,000 will be sufficient to take care of the appropriation for the rehabilitation of wounded soldiers?

Mr. GOOD. The House conferees had no discretion in that matter. The only discretion they had would be either to agree to the $5,000,000 or some amount less than that. There was an estimate of $20,000,000, and the House conferees felt that the Federal board would use at least the amount carried by the Senate amendment, and so receded from its disagreement to that amendment and agreed to the full amount carried by the Senate.

Mr. PARRISH. The gentleman does not now know whether or not the $5,000,000 will meet the demand?

Mr. GOOD. No; I can not tell. Nobody could tell.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield for a question.

Mr. DUNBAR. Did the gentleman not state at one time that the Vocational Board would require during the coming year $25,000,000?

Mr. GOOD. Yes. But those statements have been made at random. No one knows what this service will cost. It will all depend upon how many men will avail themselves of the service, the efficiency with which the money appropriated is handled, and the amount that must be paid to the colleges and institutions to train the crippled men.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield to another question?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. Is it not possible and entirely probable that $50,000,000 will be required by the Vocational Board for the rehabilitation of the soldiers?

Mr. GOOD. That is very probable.

The House conferees did not agree to the item that authorized the Secretary of War to turn over to the Federal Board for Vocational Training the tools and certain equipment of the War Department estimated at a value of about $250,000. It seemed to the House conferees that the Secretary of War has the authority that he has already exercised of loaning these tools and this equipment to the board. If the board desires to buy something or use something that it must buy it ought to buy it and pay for it, and the War Department ought to stop giving things away. [Applause.] We shall never know and we shall never have any system of bookkeeping if we continue to give things away. I know it will mean increased appropriations at times, but better ten times over appropriations that go back into the Treasury than to have a system adopted whereby people everywhere will think that all they have got to do is to go to the War Department and ask for its surplus material and that that surplus material will be turned over to them free of charge.

Now, the Vocational Board has this surplus of tools and equipment. They ought to have it. They ought to use it. They ought to be using it in equipping these men for usefulness in life. There is no question about that. But they have it now, and if there is any question about the authority of the Secretary of War in turning it over we will make his authority plain. But inasmuch as the Secretary of War did not raise that question, the House conferees did not believe we should extend his power to give things to other departments where title passes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to ask the gentleman in regard to Senate amendment No. 55, on page 26, in regard to additional employees in the Patent Office. There has been considerable correspondence, and a good many applicants have claimed that——

Mr. GOOD. The Senate receded on that item because the salaries fixed by the Senate amendment would change existing law, and the House conferees felt that at all times we must protect the legislative committees of the House so that those committees can keep tab on their legislation. If there should be a change in the law, the committee would not object to appropriating up to the limit of the law when the necessity of the appropriation was shown. But to exceed the limit is not a very good policy, as the gentleman will agree, and again there was no estimate from the department. The Commissioner of Patents appeared before the House committee. We gave him all he asked for in the way of copy-pullers, and so forth. This item was put on in the Senate, and we felt that even if it ought to go in at all, it ought not to go on until after an investigation by the body that has the power to report the legislation.

Mr. RAKER. It was really found that the help was needed, but the committee thought that the legislative committee should bring in a bill to fix the salaries rather than to have it go as a rider on the House bill?

Mr. GOOD. I do not think the additional help was badly needed, or the commissioner, when he appeared before our committee, would have said something about it. He did not say anything about it, and we thought it might very well go over.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Amendment No. 2, as to closing up the accounts of the Committee on Public Information—has the Committee on Appropriations any information as to what we shall be able to salvage from that committee?

Mr. GOOD. On amendment No. 2 the House receded with an amendment, by which we require that there be turned into the Treasury at once $1,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is money that they did not get around to spend?

Mr. GOOD. The Committee on Public Information has assets that can be realized on, valued at about $1,300,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is that unexpended appropriations?

Mr. GOOD. That is unexpended. The sum of about $250,000 is obligated. It was thought that by turning into the Treasury $1,000,000 they would have enough left to pay their obligations and audit their accounts and dispose of their property. Some of the money is scattered all over the country. Some of it was deposited in banks in Russia that were taken over by the Bolshevists, and some of it was placed in the hands of disbursing officers, and some of it is tied up in an estate.

Mr. KNUTSON. Then I take it that all the money was spent either by Russian or American Bolshevists?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know about that.

Mr. KNUTSON. I would like to ask the gentleman another question, if I may.

Mr. GOOD. Very well.

Mr. KNUTSON. Amendment No. 39. How many buildings does the War Department intend to equip with steam heat and other modern conveniences, to be torn down later?

Mr. GOOD. None at all.

Mr. KNUTSON. But amendment No. 39 authorizes the use of the contingent fund of the War Department to install heating apparatus.

Mr. GOOD. That is the same language that has been carried in the bill for a great many years, and they do not propose to install any steam heating in buildings not owned by the Government.

Mr. WHALEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WHALEY. On page 23, under the Naval Establishment——

Mr. GOOD. If the gentleman will permit, I just want to conclude the general statement, and then I will yield for a question. There was an estimate of $200,000 for the International Conference of Labor. The Senate granted $73,212.46, and the conferees have agreed to $64,462.46, and that amount will, it is believed, be required to pay the expenses of that conference.

The House bill carried $2,500,000 for forest fires, but over $3,000,000 have been expended in fighting forest fires, and the House conferees have agreed to the Senate amendment for $450,000 additional for that purpose.

There were judgments amounting to $125,934.64 and audited claims amounting to $1,514,254.32 that were not considered by the House committee at all, but were rendered after the bill passed the House, and the House conferees have agreed to the Senate amendments carrying those items.

The principal amounts on which the Senate receded were $32,000 in Senate amendment No. 2 in regard to public information, an item of $261,666.67 for the State Department, and a further item of $200,000 that the Senate added to the appropriation for the American Mission to Negotiate Peace.

The Senate receded also to the extent of $25,000 on the Secret Service appropriation and on $1,000,000 for the appropriation for advertising in the Bureau of War Risk Insurance; also $31,000 for Coast Guard telephone lines, $55,000 for the purchase of scales in the Customs Service, $200,000 on the Aqueduct Bridge, which was in excess of the limit of cost as fixed by Congress, $1,000,000 having been fixed as the limit of cost, and that amount having already been appropriated; $35,000 for the bridge at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and $21,688 for the Hydrographic Office in the way of increased pay.

The Senate also receded to the extent of $11,000,000 on the appropriation for the Alaskan Railroad, $25,000 of the appropriation to exterminate the Japanese beetle, and $35,000 for the Coast and Geodetic Survey for increased compensation.

For the industrial conference the Senate carried an appropriation of $35,000. That appropriation was made on the theory that that conference would remain in session for a considerable period of time, but it has practically ended. At the time we agreed with the Senate conferees the committee did not know exactly what the expenses would be. I have since been told by Mr. Gompers, of the Department of Labor, that the expenses will be something between $12,500 and $15,000, which can be taken care of when the next deficiency bill is considered.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. I notice that the Senate, in amendment 31, voted an item of $1,000,000 for advertising for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the Bureau of War Risk Insurance have any money at this time for advertising, and, if so, does the gentleman know the amount?

Mr. GOOD. I think the Bureau of War Risk Insurance would not be authorized by law to conduct an advertising propaganda such as is proposed. If they have some equipment to sell or something of that kind, they can advertise it, but the proposition to advertise for insurance which they proposed was another problem, and one on the propriety of which I think there is a great deal of question, but I think they have no authority to use any appropriation for such purpose.

Mr. RAYBURN. Has there been an appropriation for advertising for the Bureau of War Risk Insurance?

Mr. GOOD. There has not.

Mr. RAYBURN. Have they any money available that they are using for that purpose?

Mr. GOOD. Not that I know of. I am sure they have none.

Mr. RAYBURN. Then is it the idea of the House Committee on Appropriations that they are not going to allow any money for advertising?

Mr. GOOD. That has been the policy. The committee felt that it would be very dangerous to enter upon the program outlined by the director. Yet we have high respect for the ability of the director and gave full consideration to his estimates for such appropriation.

Mr. HUSTED. I should like to inquire to what extent, if any, the appropriations for the Patent Office will relieve the conditions which exist there? I am advised that they are very short of help; that the issuance of patents is being delayed because they have not the men to make their searches, and that they need more money.

Mr. GOOD. I have already stated in reply to a question asked by a gentleman on the other side of the aisle that we gave the Commissioner of Patents every penny he asked for when he appeared before the committee. Now for some reason, after we gave him all he asked for, he went before the Senate committee and asked for an additional force not authorized by law.

Mr. NOLAN. I did not understand the question asked by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HUSTED].

Mr. HUSTED. I want to know how much more money he asked for.

Mr. GOOD. We gave him all that he asked for in the House.

Mr. HUSTED. How much in the Senate?

Mr. GOOD. The amount he asked for that purpose was $7,333.34.

Mr. HUSTED. But he did not ask for that before the House committee?

Mr. GOOD. He did not.

Mr. WHALEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. WHALEY. I notice that on page 23 of the bill the Senate struck out an item for the Naval Establishment, including, among other things, construction and repair of vessels.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. WHALEY. In the RECORD this morning I see that the chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, in answer to a question of Senator SWANSON, stated:

This item will be taken care of in the next deficiency bill.

Why is it not taken care of in this deficiency bill, when the Secretary of the Navy and the Assistant Secretary appeared before the committee and stated that the repairs on ships were very much behind, and that the only thing that was keeping them from making the repairs in all the navy yards was that they are discharging men, and have discharged 35 per cent of their force?

Mr. GOOD. I do not know of any warrant for the statement that that item would be taken care of in the next deficiency bill. So far as I know, this ends it for this fiscal year. At least, I hope so. The House put in an item on this bill because the Assistant Secretary of the Navy appeared before the committee, as did several officers of the Navy, and made statements which led the committee to believe that a condition exists with regard to the repair of some of the vessels that ought to be corrected. The Secretary of the Navy also wrote the committee to this effect. The House provision authorizes the use of $9,300,000 from another appropriation. The House felt that these vessels should be repaired as soon as possible, but the Senate would not agree to this plan. There has been considerable opposition all along to the item. We might as well be frank about it. Too many have urged the appropriation from the standpoint that something must be found as work for these men so that they would not be discharged. The facts are that when the war broke out the navy yard had to bring in mechanics and near mechanics and some men who never were mechanics and never will be mechanics but are carried on the roll with the pay of mechanics. Now, if we are going to get down to an economy program, to a business program, this deadwood must be eliminated. Of course, there is going to be wholesale discharges of men that are not mechanics, that have brought the efficiency of the yard down to about 65 per cent of the prewar efficiency; these men ought to go and find some other employment so that the men who are mechanics can return to their record of efficient service.

Mr. WHALEY. Did not the Assistant Secretary of the Navy, who appeared before the Appropriations Committee, state that the United States ships are tied up and can not be repaired because of the lack of funds to do the work?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and it was on his statement and that of officers in the Navy that the House Committee on Appropriations reported out the appropriation and it went through the House, but the Senate conferees absolutely refused to agree to that item, and with some force have presented argument whereby the House conferees were willing to recede.

Mr. WHALEY. Did not the Assistant Secretary of the Navy and naval officers who appeared before the committee state that when the ships are repaired in two years from now it will be a great deal more expensive because of lack of repair at the present time?

Mr. GOOD. Yes; that was their contention, but let me say that it is barely possible that the repairs will be made within the present appropriation, because bringing in this deadwood that I have referred to has so reduced the efficiency of the real mechanics that even the efficienct man is not giving more than two-thirds of a day's work for a full day's pay. Now, by removing the inefficient you will secure practically as much labor in units of labor as you would with all the employees, and so no harm will be done.

Mr. TOWNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. In the original bill as it passed the House there was an authorization to use $64,000 for the purpose of carrying on the schools on military reservations. I notice that the Senate amendment struck out that provision.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; and the House receded from the disagreement to the Senate amendment with an amendment carrying $45,000.

Mr. TOWNER. So that the House in reality was able to save $45,000.

Mr. GOOD. There was strong objection to it on the part of the Senate conferees, on the theory that we have at the Army posts, they say, a similar condition, and this was starting a new plan of education for the children at the Army posts. It seemed to the House conferees that the two were not comparable; that at these places like Old Hickory and Nitro where the Government has built school buildings and there is no property that is subject to taxation for the support of the schools except Government property, and that the children who attend the schools are children of the men who are guarding Government property—that they ought to be protected. We were only able to get $45,000 for the purpose.

Mr. TOWNER. And in a great many cases these children live many miles from the school facilities.

Mr. GOOD. That is true.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. I will.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. In the statement I read the other day was the statement that there were hundreds of millions of timber destroyed by fire each year. I notice in amendment No. 66 there is an increase of $450,000, and $160,000 for protection of timber belonging to the public, making $610,000.

Mr. GOOD. The House bill carried $2,500,000.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. The Senate increased it $450,000. What evidence did the Senate produce that showed a necessity for so large an increase?

Mr. GOOD. The money has been spent since the House passed the bill. We have had terrific forest fires on the forest reserves and it has done a great deal of damage, and all we have appropriated has been practically spent.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvnia. The item of $160,000 is an entirely new item.

Mr. GOOD. That is on the public lands as distinguished from forest reserves.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Is this the first time that we have appropriated money to extinguish fires on the public land?

Mr. GOOD. Oh, no; it has been carried for years. We have protected the timber on the public lands as well as the forest reserves.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. In protecting private lands they have the right to go on the public lands, and vice versa.

Mr. GOOD. Yes; they work in harmony with each other. Mr. Speaker, there is one other item I should refer to, and that is the item of $15,681,350, which was put on for Air Service. The House conferees were mindful of the recent action of the House on that subject. It was also mindful of the fact that it was not a deficiency. We did not feel that we ought to invade the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs and take up that question, a matter that was not a deficiency, and it was admitted that there would be no deficiency. There has been so much criticism of that service, and the House has so recently expressed itself on it, and because of these facts the House conferees did not feel that they should bring back to the House a proposition which it has recently acted upon, and therefore the Senate very reluctantly yielded.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. BEE. The elimination of this appropriation is not fatal to the Air Service—the Military Affairs Committee can still act.

Mr. GOOD. No; the military bill carried $25,000,000, and the Navy bill carried a like sum for Air Service. Fifty million dollars has been appropriated all told for the Air Service for the year, and the Post Office bill carried an additional item.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Referring to amendment 56 in reference to the Alaskan Railroad—I have been detained in my committee and have just come upon the floor of the House—we passed an authorization of $17,000,000 I believe in the House.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. And the Senate had previously included an item of $17,000,000.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. I see that it is cut to $6,000,000.

Mr. GOOD. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. What is the philosophy of the cut?

Mr. GOOD. This is a deficiency bill. The statement of the Secretary of the Interior was to the effect that it would not require more than $6,000,000 for the prosecution of the work on the Alaskan railroads for the balance of this fiscal year. The sundry civil appropriation bill will carry the appropriation for the work for the next fiscal year.

Mr. MILLER. Is that in harmony with the statement of the Secretary of the Interior before the House committee and Senate committee?

Mr. GOOD. It is in harmony with the letter that the Secretary wrote to me, that he would need only $6,000,000 for this year.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division, just for the purpose of seeing how many Members are present.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 53, noes 0.

So the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GOOD, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll of committees for Calendar Wednesday.

The Clerk called the Committee on Military Affairs.

DETACHED SERVICE OF OFFICERS OF REGULAR ARMY.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs, I call up the bill H. R. 7752, relating to detached service of officers of the Regular Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California calls up the bill H. R. 7752. This bill is on the Union Calendar. The House will automatically resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] will take the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7752, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, after the termination of the emergency incident to the war with Germany and Austria-Hungary, in the construction of any law relating to detached service of the officers of the Regular Army, all service performed by such officers during the said emergency shall be regarded as service with troops or organizations thereof.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, this bill is intended to take care of what is known as the Manchu law. In 1912 Congress passed an act which provided that all officers in the Army would have to return to service with troops after having been in the staff bureaus here in Washington for a period of four years. Up to that time it had been customary to retain officers in the bureaus for a considerable period of time. In fact, there were at that time officers in the bureaus who had been here for 12 and 16 years. They had not been back with the line troops during all that time. Congress, therefore, decided that it was advisable to send officers of the line back to their units at least every two years out of six.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question for information?

Mr. KAHN. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Under this bill, if it becomes a law, officers who have been holding down what is known as cushion-chair jobs in Washington for two years past, during the present war, who would otherwise come within the provisions of the law to which the gentleman refers, would then escape the requirement of returning to their troops. In other words, they need not then return to their troops for two years' service before being detached?

Mr. KAHN. Of course, the gentleman is probably not aware that we have two classes of officers in the bureaus. Some of them are permanently attached to certain departments and could not be sent back to the line. Others, again, are line officers who are detailed to Washington to do some certain work in the different bureaus. During the war a peculiar condition arose. Line officers were detailed to Washington for a period of time, and after arriving here they might have remained at the bureau for seven or eight days and might then be detailed back again to train soldiers for the war. They were entitled to credit for those days that they put in at the bureau in their account of service in the Military Establishment.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not think the gentleman quite caught my question. Under this bill, if it becomes a law, officers who have never seen service with troops, who for two years have held down cushion-chair positions here in Washington, will fulfill the requirements of the law spoken of by the gentleman.

Mr. KAHN. If there be any such.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, there are many such officers, are there not?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think there are.

Mr. BLANTON. If there are, does the gentleman from California believe that they should escape the provisions of the law of the land?

Mr. KAHN. There are so few of the kind of officers to which the gentleman refers——

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I happen to know of a few from my own State, who have never seen service with troops, who are holding down such positions here.

Mr. KAHN. They are probably not regular line officers. They probably have a permanent status in the bureaus and could not be sent to the line.

Mr. BLANTON. But the object of the law to which the gentleman from California refers was to make this class of officers see service with the troops at some time, was it not?

Mr. KAHN. No.

Mr. BLANTON. What is the object of it?

Mr. KAHN. Only line officers. The gentleman does not seem to draw the distinction. There are line officers and there are staff officers. The staff is composed of the Quartermaster's Department, the Judge Advocate's Department, the Engineer Department, and a few other departments. Officers are permanently in some of those staff divisions. They could not be sent to the line at all. They have the right to remain here in Washington, but there is a law which requires officers to be detailed from the line to those bureaus, and those are the men who would be compelled to go back after serving four years in the bureau.

And it is on account of the fact that line officers, men who command troops, have been sent to the department here to do work during the war and then sent back again to troops almost immediately that this is deemed advisable and necessary.

Mr. BLANTON. Should not this bill be limited to line officers? It does not say line officers. It says all officers.

Mr. KAHN. I do not think it is necessary to put in the words "line officers," because the law itself originally provides for detail of line officers; that is the original law. The other officers, staff officers, can not be detailed to the line, but the line officers can be detailed to the staff. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, after the termination of the emergency incident to the war with Germany and Austria-Hungary, in the construction of any law relating to detached service of the officers of the Regular Army, all service performed by such officers during the said emergency shall be regarded as service with troops or organizations thereof.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee having had under consideration the bill H. R. 7752, had directed him to report the same back without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 54, noes 2.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, there are four additional bills on the Union Calendar, and by direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I call them up in this order: H. R. 8314, a bill to provide for the training of officers of the Army in aeronautic engineering and the issue of equipment and materials therefor; H. R. 2980, a bill to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States; H. R. 9112, a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to loan Army rifles to posts of the American Legion; and the bill H. R. 1216, a bill to amend an act entitled "An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States," approved August 27, 1888, as amended March 2, 1889.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the bill which was to provide for the increased efficiency of the Army anything to do with the universal military training or involve that service?

Mr. KAHN. It does not.

The SPEAKER. The House automatically resolves itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the four bills in the order as presented by the gentleman from California.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman from California yield?

Mr. KAHN. I will.

Mr. HARRISON. Will these four bills conclude all the bills the gentleman expected to call up?

Mr. KAHN. I imagine that will take up the greater part of the afternoon; but if the afternoon is not taken up by these bills, I still have some 8 or 10 bills which I hope to be able to get before the House.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he expects to call up a bill which is a matter of great importance, undertaking to dispose of these automobiles and trucks that are now being exposed to the weather and deteriorating at these various camps and places?

Mr. KAHN. I will say to the gentleman that I did not intend to call up that bill this afternoon, because there has been some controversy about the matter. It was the hope of the Committee on Military Affairs to bring to the attention of the House bills that should be passed without any considerable discussion.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Do any of these bills to which the gentleman refers have anything to do with the bringing of the bodies of soldiers back to this country?

Mr. KAHN. No; they have not. I will say to my friend from Virginia there is some controversy about the disposition of automobiles, and especially passenger automobiles, to various State highway commissions for building roads in the States. The Special Committee on Expenditures for the War that has been investigating that particular branch of the War Department work is going to propose some legislation in the matter. The Committee on Military Affairs will have next Wednesday again, and we will still have ample time to bring up the bill to which the gentleman refers if it should be necessary.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The bill to which the gentleman just now referred was brought before the Committee on Rules this morning and made in order to be taken up at the convenience of the chairman of the committee, Mr. REAVIS, and that probably will be on Saturday; that is, the transfer to States of automobiles.

Mr. HARRISON. That will be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. KAHN. The bill referred to will come up on Saturday.

Mr. HARRISON. I say that will be entirely satisfactory, as there certainly ought to be some disposition made.

Mr. KAHN. I am thoroughly in accord with the gentleman.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman kindly state what is the controversy with regard to these automobiles?

Mr. KAHN. Well, it seems that all motor vehicles are included in the legislation. I will frankly state that probably the passenger automobiles ought to be disposed of. It was not thought desirable to give the road commissioners automobiles to ride around in, so that the committee felt that the matter ought to be looked into.

Mr. GALLAGHER. That will come up next Saturday?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that all this discussion is out of order. I desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. It is by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. Where a gentleman has called up four different bills to be considered on Calendar Wednesday, under the rule is he entitled to have two hours' general debate in the committee on each bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair was going to put the question for unanimous consent that the committee should go into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the four bills. But the Chair hardly thinks under the rule we have a right to consider more than one bill. However, the Chair was going to put it as a matter of unanimous consent, in order to save continual rising, that the House should go into committee to consider the four bills.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, after that request I would like to ask the gentleman from California, the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, that if among the measures which he has called up there may not be one, or possibly more, to which we might devote more than two hours of discussion in favor of or two hours of discussion in opposing it?

Mr. KAHN. Naturally, I am of the opinion that the merits of the bills will be so apparent to the Members when they are explained that there will be practically no discussion on the bills themselves. I think there is not a single one of the four bills that would consume a full hour of discussion.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WALSH. Still further reserving the right to object——

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I do not understand there has been a unanimous request submitted to the House.

Mr. WALSH. The Chair submitted one.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it not in order for the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] on Calendar Wednesday to move to go into Committee of the Whole to consider such bills as there are on the calendar?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. BLANTON. Such procedure has been followed before.

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I was hoping that I could save time. I now withdraw the request and ask to take up the bill H. R. 8314.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that he make the request to include the four bills. I do not think there would be objection. I suggest that the gentleman should couple with that request that there should not be to exceed two hours' debate on all the bills, because otherwise, it seems to me, there would technically be two hours of debate on each bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would think so at first blush.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, under the rule they have the right to two hours' debate on any bill on Calendar Wednesday. There can not be any two ways about that. Whether there will be two hours if we go into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union on several bills, I do not know.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I think it can be done by unanimous consent. Mr. CANNON once said that you could put an elephant through the House by unanimous consent. I do not go quite that far.

Mr. LONGWORTH. A Republican elephant this year!

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the four bills be considered, and that not over two hours' general debate be used in the consideration of the four bills.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the House go into the Committee of the Whole on the four bills, which the Chair has already recited, and that not over two hours be consumed on the bills.

Mr. KAHN. Not over half an hour on each bill.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to know on which bill the debate would be permitted.

Mr. KAHN. On all four.

Mr. DOWELL. Then these four bills will be considered in the committee at one time?

Mr. KAHN. One after another.

Mr. DOWELL. Suppose the debate of one hour is exhausted on one bill, and then you desire to take up another one, with the time for debate exhausted there would be no opportunity to discuss the other bills unless they are all considered at the same time?

Mr. KAHN. They could be considered under the five-minute rule. As I said to the House before the gentleman was in, I do not think that there will be any considerable debate on the bills themselves. They were all brought out with a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs. There is no difference of opinion on them.

Mr. DOWELL. I was making inquiry to ascertain what bills.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman in submitting his request suggested that there would be one-half hour on each bill. Does he withdraw that request?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to consider the four bills mentioned, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

AERONAUTIC ENGINEERING.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of the consideration of bills on the Union Calendar whose titles were announced by the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN]. The Clerk will report the first bill, H. R. 8314.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8314) to provide for the training of officers of the Army in aeronautic engineering and the issue of equipment and materials therefor.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to detail such officers of the Army as he may select, not exceeding 25 at any one time, to attend and pursue courses of aeronautic engineering or associate study at such schools, colleges, and universities as he may select.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is authorized to pay tuition for the officers so detailed and to provide them with necessary textbooks and technical supplies from any moneys available for the Air Service of the Army not otherwise specifically appropriated, and he is authorized to furnish to institutions to which officers are so detailed such equipment and material belonging to the War Department for use in connection with courses in aeronautic engineering as he may deem advisable, subject to such rules for use, compensation for use, accounting, report, and the return he may prescribe.

Also the following committee amendment was read:

On page 2, line 7, after the word "return," insert the word "as."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is recognized.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to explain the bill to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, the science of aeronautical engineering is very, very new in this country, and the Air Service needs such expert advice very badly. This bill is designed to enable the Secretary of War to send such officers as he may deem necessary, not exceeding 25, to some school where they can receive this education which is so badly needed in this country. I think the House realizes the need of the bill, and I hardly think it is necessary to say very much in favor of it.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. It seems that he can select 100 places for these 25 officers to be trained. It may be 25, 25, 25, and 25. Has the gentleman considered the wisdom of letting the Secretary of War select one university—it might be patterned after West Point, so far as that is concerned, although we would not pay for it—rather than pick out universities all over the country and make it a matter of favoritism and perhaps not a matter of wisdom?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I hardly think the gentleman's fears are well based. I have perfect confidence that the Secretary of War will select any school that is properly qualified to go ahead with the courses necessary.

Mr. CANNON. More than one?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. There are very few schools in the country that are equipped to do this work. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in Boston, is one of the very few schools; there are possibly two or three at the outside of the State universities that are prepared to do this work.

Mr. CANNON. Are the State universities prepared?

Mr. KAHN. I think the University of Illinois is one of the exceptionally well-equipped universities that might be willing to undertake this work.

Mr. CANNON. We have 48 State universities.

Mr. KAHN. There are very few of them that could do this work. I think possibly 5 out of all the 48 would be able to do it. Five would be a maximum.

Mr. CANNON. Would the gentleman be willing to limit it to not exceeding five?

Mr. KAHN. I would. I would have no objection.

Mr. CANNON. You know we all have State universities, and we all have the technical schools, and the Government furnishes the outfit. It seems to me while this is a very important service, and I do not object to the training of the 25 officers, it would be better to have one or two well-equipped schools "away up in G" than to settle it as a matter of favoritism. Secretaries of War change. One Secretary of War may be a very wise man, and another not a very wise man. There might be pressure brought to bear. I think I would like to have the Illinois University made one, and then there is Wisconsin and California, Leland Stanford, taking it all over the country. I think we had better have one well-equipped university located where it is healthy for this important training.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, the school that would undoubtedly be named would be the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in Boston.

Mr. CANNON. Is that the best equipped of all of them?

Mr. KAHN. Yes; I understand so. Even the graduates from West Point are frequently sent to that particular school for one year after their graduation to take a postgraduate course, and I understand from the War Department that it is very desirable to enable that school to do the work provided by this legislation.

Mr. CANNON. Well, if that is so I would concentrate it in Boston.

Mr. KAHN. I have no objection to an amendment suggested by the gentleman that it be limited to not more than five schools. As I understood from the Secretary, they certainly have not more than two or three schools at the utmost where they could do this work.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The bill provides that there can not be over 25. Probably there will not be over five.

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If there are 10, so much the better. They will be qualified to educate those that the Secretary of War sends to them, and unquestionably if they provide that course they will expect more, and the more we get the better we are off.

Mr. CANNON. I quite agree with the gentleman. I would make it 1 if there are only 25 officers. There is one institution that stands so high and is so well equipped and so able that even after the West Point course is taken they send them down there for a year.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the gentleman will permit, I think the idea is to make some of these men specialists in certain branches of the work. Some of these institutions have a course in one thing where they excel, and another has a course in something else in which they excel. The idea is to specialize these men in institutions where they can get exactly the kind of instruction they are looking for, and one institution might not fill the bill.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. I want to ask one question for information. It seems to me the language is a little bit ambiguous. It says, "at any one time." What does "any one time" mean? Any day or any year?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It means that there should not be more than 25 under such tuition at the colleges at one time.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it not true that the Massachusetts Institute of Technology gave ground-school instruction to many of our Army and Navy student aviators during the war?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I understand so.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. FOCHT. I would like to ask the gentleman if there is anything in the bill to prevent the Secretary of War from sending all these students over to England for instruction? What is his intention? What is the gentleman's idea of sending them out of the country?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think from the way the bill is worded he would not do it at all.

Mr. FOCHT. He could do it, could he not?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not think he could.

Mr. FOCHT. What does the gentleman think of the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] that we have this all done at one college, and done properly.

Mr. BEE. Just one moment. In answer to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois to have it at one school, this thought occurred to me. It might be that it would be necessary to take into consideration climatic conditions in the training of these officers in different branches of the work and in different parts of the country. While a man could be trained in Massachusetts, that training might not be so useful as if he were trained under the climatic conditions of California, for example. Is not that right?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think that is right.

Mr. KAHN. The testimony before the committee shows that in this special technical work it is desirable to have only five or six students in any one class. To have as many as 25 students in a class the institutions would not be able to furnish the facilities required for the proper education of the young men, and for that reason we thought it desirable to have three or four or five universities doing this work.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. FESS. I think the suggestion of putting them all at one place is ill advised, owing to the type of equipment as well as the character of the work that must be done. The Massachusetts Institute of Technology, as every one knows, is very amply equipped, having done a good deal of the work during the war. The Carnegie Tech, at Pittsburgh, is also very amply equipped. There are two and probably three State universities that were used very largely during the war, namely, the Illinois State University and the Ohio State University, and I think the University of California. The Government concentrated very largely in the training of aviators at those three places.

Mr. MILLER. Yes; and I wish to include for the information of the gentleman, the University of the State of Washington.

Mr. FESS. Yes. So that I think if the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs and the gentlemen in charge of the bill are going to yield to a limit, I would not think it wise to yield to one. I think it would be wise to have at least four or five or six, because we have got the equipment now.

Mr. LAYTON. According to the arguments that have been made here, there are only about two or three universities that are equipped for this fine work. There are 25 officers to be trained. The logic of the situation is that 15 of them will receive first-class training, while 10 will receive inferior training.

Mr. CRAGO. Oh, no.

Mr. LAYTON. Why not? That is the logic from the statements that have been made.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The Secretary of War ought to be relied upon to use good judgment.

Mr. LAYTON. I am assuming that they do not put more than five in each class, as has been stated.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is not in the bill at all.

Mr. LAYTON. No.

Mr. CANNON. I will be very glad if the gentleman will accept an amendment providing that not more than five places shall be selected, and that they shall all be confined to the United States. Otherwise, if they are scattered all over the country, and if some of these officers are sent to foreign countries, you will have their mileage to pay.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Say there are five of them in this country to-day. If there are five more that can qualify, let us allow them to qualify. I hope Iowa will qualify to take the young men of Iowa.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. And it will be a good thing if they do.

Mr. CANNON. There it comes now, the frank avowal of the gentleman. We have got to select these places and pay for this training, and when we scatter these officers over the United States or send them abroad, we have got to pay their mileage and support them.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There can not be more than 25 at any one time under the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Well, 25——

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That will not support a university.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] refers to 25, the total number to be trained at any one time.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely, 25 men to be trained, but he wants one place to train them in Iowa, and I want one in Illinois.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. You have got one.

Mr. CANNON. They want two in California.

Mr. LAYTON. We will take one in Delaware.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I am willing to limit the number to five places in the United States.

Mr. CRAGO. I would not do that.

Mr. BEE. Have we not got to this point, where we have got to trust somebody?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BEE. When you put in a limitation that there shall not be more than 5, if there are 10 of these schools that can do the work splendidly, what right has this Congress to put a limitation of that sort in the bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. None.

Mr. BEE. Simply because we are afraid somebody will do wrong somewhere.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No right at all.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois to whose judgment we bow and for whom we all have the most profound affection; but we ought not to limit the number of these institutions to five, six, or eight.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think it would be very unwise to yield to that suggestion.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman asks, what right have we to do this? The right to protect the Treasury of the United States, the right to prevent favoritism, the right to prevent embarrassing every Member of Congress and others who are not Members of Congress. Oh, my university wants it, your university wants it, the other university wants it. They all want to be equipped and ready. There is competition all around. If gentlemen have read Charles O'Malley they remember Mickey Free. The story is not exactly on all fours; but if gentlemen will allow me, Mickey Free was Charles O'Malley's servant during the Napoleonic wars. He was a very good servant. Mickey's father died, and the captain gave him the wherewithal for masses to get his father out of purgatory. When Mickey was shaving Capt. O'Malley one morning, the captain said, "How is your father?" "Well, he is nearly out." "Have you heard from him lately?" "Yes; I saw Father So-and-so yesterday, and he said that he was down night before last, getting Mrs. So-and-so out of purgatory, and that he saw my father." "Was he out?" "No; but his Reverence said he was nearly out, that one and sixpence would get him out." "Where was he?" "Caught betwixt the door and the jamb. And," said he, "Captain, the £1 6d. that you gave me to get him out I put it back in my pocket, because I knew that if he was betwixt the door and the jamb there was naught betwixt hell and Connaught that could keep him from getting out." [Laughter.]

That is a little homely story, but I have served in this House long enough to see innocent little things and worthy things creep in, and then afterwards nothing could keep them out. This is a worthy thing, and I am for it, but with this vast number of State universities and other universities scattered all over the country they will all want to be equipped and paid, and even if there are only 25 officers at a time to be trained, 25 one month or 25 in three months, the number will reach a large total, and you will run up into very large expenditures.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman speaks of favoritism. His amendment would bring that about.

Mr. CANNON. Would it?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Why, certainly. If there were six universities, and he could select only five, there would have to be some favoritism. If these universities are equipped, they should be recognized, and that is all there is to it. I am willing to trust some one to do the work. I am willing to trust the Secretary of War.

Mr. CANNON. I have lost my trust in some of the Secretaries of War.

Mr. BEE. If there were a thousand of them to be trained at one time, that would be a different thing, but you have only got 25, and it is a special course, and I think somebody might be trusted about it.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly, and it is in the bill.

Mr. LAYTON. It is in the bill that the Secretary of War may put them in such schools, colleges, and universities as he may select. He might put them in inferior places.

Mr. FESS. He would not do that.

Mr. CRAGO. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois, I think he is taking the wrong attitude toward this bill. I think we ought to encourage all these universities to establish this course, as they have done in the splendid University of Illinois. Dr. Kinley, the acting president of that university, tells me that they have more than 100 young men there who are very anxious to take this course in aeronautic engineering, but they are not equipped to give it; that is, they have not the material that they should have, because the Government has this material. The Government might as well use it, and I hope that the Secretary will select these 25 schools.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield, and I thank him for his statement? I want to suggest to him that these appropriations will be made, and whereas we maintain West Point and the Naval Academy, other branches of the service will come in, and this will result in the spending of millions of dollars.

Mr. CRAGO. I think that this will not provide for any material on the part of the Government which the Government does not already have. I do not see what other purpose it would be put to. We have the material, and instead of having it in storage and deteriorating we will have it put to a proper use in the universities.

Mr. CANNON. Have we any aeroplanes?

Mr. CRAGO. We have thousands of them; we did not get them until rather late.

Mr. CANNON. I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania; he has made a stronger speech for the amendment than I have.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAGO. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. The arguments on the floor assume the fact that the Secretary of War is going to appoint only 25 students to attend these universities. I want to call attention to the phraseology of the bill, and under a reasonable construction of it the Secretary of War could appoint innumerable men so long as he did not appoint more then 25 at any one time. Under the wording of the bill it says "he hereby is authorized to detail such officers of the Army as he may select, not exceeding 25 at at any one time." That is, he shall not detail more than 25 at one particular time, but he may appoint 25 to-day, 25 to-morrow, 25 next week, and 25 next month.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield? Of course, he will only detail those officers to take a complete course in the particular study that the officer is detailed to take. It would take probably three months or six months in one university to complete the course.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from California is a past grand master in placing proper construction on the English language, and he knows that the proper construction of this language means just what it says, that the Secretary of War is not limited to 25 so long as he appoints only 25 at one time.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. To attend the school at any one time.

Mr. BLANTON. There is nothing in the bill that says that these officers must take a particular course at any particular time.

Mr. KAHN. The Secretary of War would be committing a foolish act if he appointed 25 men for a week's course.

Mr. BLANTON. The universities open at different dates, different weeks, and different months. The Secretary of War has a way of placing his own construction on the language of bills, consistent, however, with the language used.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think the intent of this bill is very plain.

Mr. BLANTON. You ought to strike out the word "such" and put "twenty-five" in place of it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Can the gentleman state whether or not the committee or the War Department has given any attention to establishing a school of this kind at West Point?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. It is highly impracticable to do that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I did not quite understand the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not think it would be practicable to do it at the present time. What we need is immediate action, and that will take time.

Mr. FESS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. FESS. The fear expressed by the gentleman from Illinois that it would involve a great appropriation, I think, is without foundation. The Government would have entailed on it the duty of paying tuition, which would not be much at the most, and also for the officers detailed, which is already done now in many institutions under the law. The Government provides for military instruction in many of the universities. Of course, his work would not be like this. This provides for textbooks and supplies. Many of the institutions already have technical supplies for aeronautic work. I notice it says that the material and equipment which the department now has may be loaned to the university for the work, so that that will not entail an additional expense. I think the suggestion made a while ago that the students should be sent to the institution best fitted for that particular work should be kept open.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. How many officers is it intended to detail to take this course?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Not exceeding 25 at any one time. As many as they can educate, but not more than 25 at one time shall be in attendance at the schools.

Mr. ANDERSON. The bill does not seem to carry out that proposition.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. I note the language of the bill provides that the money for this purpose is to be appropriated or to be used from any money available for the Air Service of the Army not otherwise specifically appropriated. Does that mean that any lump-sum appropriation for the Air Service will be used for this purpose without any special authority?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. No. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. When the Air Service comes before the Committee on Military Affairs for its appropriation it has the entire amount that is asked for segregated into various items. The officers state how much they need for each particular item. So it is not a lump sum in any way.

Mr. DOWELL. But in the appropriation it is a lump sum very frequently. At least in every appropriation there is a lump sum for aviation.

Mr. KAHN. But the paragraph which carries the lump sum is divided into numerous items carried in the totals.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman mean that in all the appropriations for aviation Congress has specifically stated for what purpose the money is to be used?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, yes; because if they did not do that they could use the money for any purpose outside of the paragraph.

Mr. DOWELL. Then may I inquire why it is put into this bill that they may use money that is not specifically appropriated? How will there be any money for aviation that has not been specifically appropriated?

Mr. KAHN. It frequently happens that in the segregation of the lump sum into these smaller items there is a surplus in one of the items and a deficiency in another, and so they use the surplus from one item to make up the deficiency in the other.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman mean that when Congress makes an appropriation for one specific purpose the department may use that for another purpose not appropriated for?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; not for another purpose not appropriated for, but for a purpose appropriated for. If the amount for that particular purpose should fall short of the amount required for that specific purpose, and there is another amount appropriated for another specific purpose, and they have a surplus for that other specific purpose, they can use that surplus to make up the deficiency in the other.

Mr. DOWELL. One other question: Would it not be much preferable if this part of the bill is left out, so that the department could come to Congress for a specific appropriation? Then Congress would know exactly what is being paid for this service.

Mr. KAHN. I do not think that is necessary. In the first place, I do not think any sum of money running into considerable amounts would be used for this purpose, and I think the language of the bill will take care of it very satisfactorily.

Mr. DOWELL. Would the gentleman object to an amendment striking out that feature and requiring this to come through appropriations?

Mr. KAHN. I do not think it is necessary. Of course, I would accept whatever the House does; but personally I do not see the necessity for striking it out.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Iowa yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Do I understand that there are persons in aeronautic engineering who know more about the subject than people do in the Army?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. There might be and there might not. I do not know. There may be some very fine aeronautic engineers in the Army, and I presume there are. There are some very bright men along that line.

Mr. WALSH. How does it happen that anywhere there are men who are skilled and versed in aeronautic engineering and who know more about it than the people in the Army do?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. They may not be available; I do not know. There may be some men outside of the Army who are available.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. Of course, aeronautics is practically a new science. There are certain men in some of the universities, and especially those universities that have a highly trained special technical staff, who give these matters their constant attention, and who become exceedingly skilled in their particular branches of the art.

Mr. WALSH. That is, book knowledge.

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no; they have the machinery right in the university and they are training young men.

Mr. WALSH. How many aeroplanes has the Massachusetts Institute of Technology got in service?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know. I do not know whether they have any.

Mr. WALSH. How many aeroplanes has any of these institutions got?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know that they have any, but they probably have aeroplane parts, especially motors, upon which they are specializing, and they can give instructions with reference to them that no Army officer could give. For instance, take the question of motors——

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think that we have men in the Air Service of the Army, or ought to have, who are equipped to give instructions to these people who are going to teach these men covered by this bill?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. We have no college at all teaching it in the Army.

Mr. WALSH. Take the officers who are flying around here and making cross-country flights, doing this stunt flying, and taking care of aeroplanes and building engines, where are they getting their instructions?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is instruction in flying and it is an absolutely different proposition.

Mr. WALSH. Before a man knows how to fly he has to know how to start his engine, and if something happens to his engine and it stops he has got to know a little something about it in order to know how to start it again, or the mechanician has who goes along with him.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Do not they all have that kind of men?

Mr. KAHN. No. When a man flies in a pursuit plane he flies alone; and when the machine lights on the ground, then the mechanicians go out and take the machine and bring it to the hangar and look it over.

Mr. WALSH. I will ask the distinguished gentleman from California this question: Assume that the war had continued for a couple of years, would we have been compelled to wait until we sent these men to these universities before we could send them over there to the war?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no. They went to flying schools.

Mr. WALSH. Where they were taught aeronautic engineering, were they not?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. Then, we were going to send a lot of men over there with no knowledge of that subject?

Mr. KAHN. Oh, they have knowledge enough to learn how to fly, just as a chauffeur knows how to drive an automobile, although he may not have much technical knowledge about the motor in the automobile.

Mr. WALSH. Then, when peace comes we have got to send them all to college. They were good enough to go and fly over there during the war, but when the war is over we have to send them to universities and spend a lot of money for tuition. I would like to know if there are any men in the Army at the present time, in the Air Service, who are competent to give this instruction, who have the parts, who have the experience, who can give this instruction to these men?

Mr. KAHN. Evidently not, because the War Department has asked for this legislation. If they had the men who could give the instruction in the Army, they probably would not be here with this bill.

Mr. HUSTED. Is it not possibly true that if these men who participated in this transcontinental flight had had more thorough instruction in ground schools there might have been fewer accidents in that race?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The trouble is that the gentleman does not seem to be able to differentiate between the science of aeronautical engineering and the science of flying. They are two separate propositions.

Mr. HUSTED. They are two separate propositions; but is not this true, that in order for a man to fly safely he must have this highly technical ground training in advance to his flying training?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the House divided on?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. DOWELL. In connection with the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] about the expenditure for these various institutions, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the language of the bill—

> And he is authorized to furnish to institutions to which officers are so detailed such equipment and material belonging to the War Department for use in connection with courses in aeronautic engineering—

And so forth.

Does not that permit the Secretary of War to purchase anything he desires and equip these institutions for the purpose of educating these students?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I do not think so.

Mr. DOWELL. If the War Department has the materials it has the authority under this bill to turn them over, and if they have authority to purchase them because they might need them in such institutions, will not this language permit the War Department to purchase equipment for these institutions?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I think the gentleman's fears are absolutely baseless. The intent is to furnish the things that the War Department at present owns.

Mr. DOWELL. But it does not state that; if it did, all right.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. "Belonging to" is perfectly plain.

Mr. DOWELL. "Belonging to the War Department," but the War Department can purchase any of this equipment and will then own it, and may then turn it over to the institutions.

Mr. WELLING. If the gentleman will permit a suggestion. They only furnish the use of the equipment "subject to such rules for use, compensation, accounting, and the return as they may prescribe."

Mr. DOWELL. That does not qualify it at all. This language, it seems to me, may permit the department to purchase this equipment and then turn it over to these institutions.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is wrong. I have absolute confidence in the Secretary of War and in his purpose to carry out the intent of the bill.

Mr. DOWELL. But why not put in the bill what the committee have stated they desire?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Well, if the gentleman wants to do so he may make an amendment to put in the word "now."

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Certainly.

Mr. KAHN. Suppose next week an invention should be made of a new kind of motor used in aeronautics. Does not the gentleman think that the War Department should be permitted to buy that, and if necessary furnish one of the machines to a college, so that the students can learn the very latest thing pertaining to aeronautics?

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman is now stating exactly what the gentleman from Illinois claimed a while ago, that the department may purchase any amount of equipment and turn it over to these institutions.

Mr. KAHN. Well, I have no idea it will run into any great amount of money.

Mr. DOWELL. But if it is unlimited it may run into any sum.

Mr. KAHN. How is the gentleman going to limit it? Is he going to forbid the War Department buying, as I say, a new invention that may possibly save many lives and prevent these universities from getting the very latest thing in aeronautics?

Mr. DOWELL. That is not what I am suggesting. I do not want the department to be unlimited in equipping these institutions. There ought to be some limit somewhere, and the statement of the chairman of the committee just now indicates clearly that the language of this is intended not to limit the department.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If the gentleman will permit, in reply to the gentleman who has just spoken, by the insertion of "at this time" after the words "War Department," page 2, line 4, there would be no question as to what equipment is to be furnished, and, if agreeable to the chairman, I shall offer an amendment to that when we reach it.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I will.

Mr. FAIRCHILD. This colloquy has developed the fact that some of the Members think that the Government is to furnish the student and pay the tuition and furnish the material, and now very naturally the question arises as to what the college will furnish, and that is a legitimate question. This aeronautical engineering in its highest phases requires the best mathematical talent that the country has, and no one in this country outside of university heads are expert mathematicians.

It requires the highest knowledge of chemistry that can be found anywhere. You must go to the universities for that knowledge. Your physicists, who understand and, through laboratory methods, determine the breaking strength of material, are to be found in the universities alone. The limitations would be necessary, so far as expenses are concerned, on the amount of money which we appropriate. This is the most economical way in which we can lay a basis for efficient aeronautics in this country.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. The gentleman is right.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, authorized to detail such officers of the Army as he may select, not exceeding 25 at any one time, to attend, and pursue courses of aeronautic engineering or associate study at such schools, colleges, and universities as he may select.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment that I would like to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following:

After the word "select", on page 1, line 4, strike out "not exceeding 25 at any one time," and at the end of line 7 strike out the period and insert a colon, and add the following language: "Provided, That not more than 25 shall be on such detail at any one time."

Mr. HULL of Iowa. That is acceptable.

Mr. KAHN. We have no objection to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLACK: Page 1, line 4, after the word "select" strike out the words "not exceeding 25 at any one time," and at the end of line 7, after the word "select" strike out the period and insert a colon, and the following language: "Provided, That not more than 25 shall be on such detail at any one time."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BLANTON: Page 1, line 7, strike out "schools, colleges, and universities," and insert in lieu thereof the word "schools."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] was eminently correct when he called attention to the fact that under this bill much money could be wasted by equipping various schools and colleges and universities to train 25 men in a certain line. These 25 men could properly form only one class, and certainly could be trained at one institution. And I think we ought not to provide equipment, if we provide it at all, for more than one school, because there could not be more than one class, or should not be more than one class, because 25 would make a good class. And we have just adopted an amendment that prevents more than 25 being designated. I think this amendment ought to be adopted in line with the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois that there should be one school selected and not have probably 10 or 15, or even 3 or 4, schools or colleges equipped at different places over the United States.

Mr. LAYTON. If the gentleman thinks there should be one school, does he not think that the bill should prescribe that school?

Mr. BLANTON. I would be willing to vote to prescribe it, but I am willing to leave it to the Secretary of War. He would probably know the best school, and I am willing to leave it to his judgment; but certainly we ought not to leave it to his discretion to equip schools and colleges and universities from one side of the land to the other to only train 25 men in one line of endeavor or pursuit.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that the splendid argument made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. FAIRFIELD] showing that universities can give this information is a sufficient answer to the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], who wants it limited to one school.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is authorized to pay tuition for the officers so detailed and to provide them with necessary textbooks and technical supplies from any moneys available for the Air Service of the Army not otherwise specifically appropriated, and he is authorized to furnish to institutions to which officers are so detailed such equipment and material belonging to the War Department for use in connection with courses in aeronautic engineering as he may deem advisable, subject to such rules for use, compensation for use, accounting, report, and the return he may prescribe.

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Line 7, page 2, after the word "return," insert the word "as."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to section 2. I move to strike out the section.

Now, let us analyze section 2 for a moment. It says:

That the Secretary of War is authorized to pay tuition for the officers so detailed and to provide them with necessary textbooks and technical supplies—from any moneys available for the Air Service of the Army not otherwise specifically appropriated, and he is authorized to furnish to institutions to which officers shall be detailed such equipment and material belonging to the War Department for use in connection with courses in aeronautic engineering as he may deem advisable, subject to such rules for use, compensation for use, accounting, report, and the return as he may prescribe.

How?

Now, I withdraw the amendment to strike out the section and will offer one in its place:

That the Secretary of War is authorized to pay tuition for officers so detailed and to provide them with necessary textbooks and technical supplies for their instruction.

Now, I move to strike out at the end of "supplies" and insert "for their instruction," and strike out all in section 2, including the word "from," to the end of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the original amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will report the amendment that is now offered.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON: Page 1, line 10, after the word "supplies," insert "for their instruction," and strike out the words "from any," in line 10, and all the balance of the section.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted. What does it do? It is legislation and makes available, if this bill is enacted, without further appropriation money from any appropriations that may be made for the Air Service. Under our practice we appropriate for each fiscal year, but this is a permanent continuing appropriation, made so by this bill. I think it is vital that it should be amended as I have suggested. [Applause.]

Nobody has ever heard me open my mouth about the $700,000,000 plus that has been expended on flying machines, and then we had to buy our machines of France. I think I am correct in that, am I not?

Mr. KAHN. We bought from France and England. We also manufactured many in this country.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; but I am told that never one machine flew in actual service that was manufactured in this country. I have been told so.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman has been misinformed.

Mr. CANNON. How many did fly?

Mr. KAHN. Thousands.

Mr. CANNON. Thousands flew in France?

Mr. KAHN. That were manufactured in this country; yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. That were manufactured in this country?

Mr. KAHN. Yes, sir. All the machines that we had to have for the training of flyers were manufactured in this country.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, I am speaking of flying in war, in France.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There were 15 or 18.

Mr. KAHN. I do not know how many got to the other side.

Mr. CANNON. I am corrected; there were 18 machines from this $700,000,000 plus, expended for the construction of machines in the United States, that actually flew in France. My friend from California [Mr. KAHN] says there were thousands and thousands and thousands used in the United States for flying purposes. And yet not one of those machines was used in actual flying in war in France. It is an open secret that our people——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. KAHN. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman's time be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I am not here to say who had these contracts to construct the machines and who had these contracts to construct the engines; but it was an enormous amount of money to pay, and we wanted to show the American genius, as I understand it—let somebody correct me if I am wrong—our efficiency, our capacity. We wanted to show, after Great Britain and France had manufactured their machines that were flying in actual warfare, that we could do better than they, and your $700,000,000 plus is gone.

Now, I do not want this or any other branch of the service to have a permanent continuing appropriation. I suppose I could not defeat this bill if I were to try, but if it can not be defeated I want this service to come to Congress on an estimate every year that the money is asked for for this appropriation.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman stated, when we began to discuss the bill, that he favored the bill. Now he says he wants the bill defeated.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no. I say I suppose my vote would not defeat it. But I was not informed when I commenced asking questions about this bill. I did not know what it contained. I did not know that a great committee of this House had reported here a permanent continuing appropriation for this service, that will grow and ramify through the years to come without ever Congress making an appropriation for it, because it will make available all the money that is appropriated, or any part of it, for aeronautics for the education at God knows how many universities and schools of 25 students at a time, and next day, I suppose 25 more, and so on, and so on.

But let that be as it may, this amendment that I have offered, in my judgment, ought to be agreed to, so that they will not have a permanent appropriation. There is permanent provision made for the payment of the interest on the public debt, toward the support of agricultural colleges, and a few other things.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. SHERWOOD. What will become of these men when they are educated? We have got no use for them. There is no demand among the people for such legislation as this.

Mr. FOCHT. There will be no more war.

Mr. CANNON. That may be true. I would be willing to vote against the bill entirely, but I think perhaps the sense of the committee is that in the interest of private schools or public schools or universities they will compete for this service, and that all of them will have it in the end. I do not know that I could defeat the bill if I would, but I appeal to this committee to adopt the amendment that cuts out the permanent appropriation. Let them come every year and get their appropriation. [Applause.]

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the amendment. May I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be again reported?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CANNON: Page 1, line 10, after the word "supplies," insert "for their instruction" and strike out the remainder of the section.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether or not this amendment is exactly in the form it should be, but I suggested some time ago to strike out "any moneys available for the Air Service of the Army not otherwise specifically appropriated." Now, it does seem to me that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] is correct; we should not approve a bill that gives to the War Department absolute authority to spend this money without consulting Congress. This is continuing legislation. Just a few days ago, by an almost unanimous vote, we passed a budget bill that had for its purpose the compelling of all these departments to come before Congress every year to ask appropriations for certain specific sums for certain specific purposes. If the budget legislation is to be effective, Congress should not enact legislation such as this. If we are going to economize in the expenditure of money we should not adopt legislation that permits the department to proceed to spend money without even making a report to Congress.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. What is in the gentleman's mind as to how much money this will take?

Mr. DOWELL. I do not know.

Mr. MILLER. Well, then, if the gentleman does not know——

Mr. DOWELL. What I do say is that Congress ought to know what the annual expenditures are.

Mr. LAYTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. Whatever may be your thought in respect to the money available for the Air Service of the Army, you are not in favor of preventing the War Department from utilizing its equipment?

Mr. DOWELL. No; I doubt if that part of the amendment should be adopted. My purpose is to compel the department to come to Congress for an annual appropriation for this, just as they do for every other appropriation they require.

Mr. WELLING. Will the gentleman explain just how the Cannon amendment accomplishes that?

Mr. DOWELL. I doubt if that part of the Cannon amendment which strikes out the remainder of the bill is proper. I think it should be amended, however. But I am now referring only to the part of the bill providing for the expenditure by the department for this purpose without consulting Congress.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWELL. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. KAHN. The money that can be expended for this purpose is for textbooks and supplies.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not care what it is for.

Mr. KAHN. Does the gentleman think they will expend millions of dollars for a few textbooks?

Mr. DOWELL. I do not care whether it is millions or thousands or hundreds. Every department ought to come to Congress for every amount it is permitted to expend, and if we are to have any sort of economy in this Government, they should be required to come here for the money they need.

Mr. CRAGO. For the present year they could only use such unexpended balances as they have.

Mr. DOWELL. Yes.

Mr. CRAGO. Now, next year, whether they make their estimate through the budget system or directly to our committees, as they do now, they would estimate so much for this purpose.

Mr. DOWELL. If they do, why not leave out this provision, so that they will be required to do that?

Mr. CRAGO. This does not appropriate any money.

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly it does.

Mr. CRAGO. Only for the present year.

Mr. DOWELL. It does it for all time.

Mr. CRAGO. No.

Mr. DOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. CRAGO. We will have every year before us an estimate from the Military Committee or the budget committee as to what is required.

Mr. DOWELL. And every dollar appropriated for the Aviation Service that is not specifically appropriated may be used for this purpose not only for this year but for every other year that this law is in existence.

Mr. CRAGO. But if we put a provision in our appropriation bill for this particular purpose, that would be the limit of it.

Mr. DOWELL. No; it would not be the limit of it. Congress can appropriate specifically for this purpose, but if this law is enacted as it is now, if there is any money for the Aviation Service that is not otherwise specifically appropriated, notwithstanding Congress appropriates specifically under the budget system, this law will permit the use of any money that has not been specifically appropriated, and it can be used for this purpose.

Mr. CRAGO. I do not think there is much danger of their using any more than is specifically appropriated.

Mr. DOWELL. I do not care whether the gentleman thinks there is danger or not. Congress should not throw the door wide open, and then afterwards say to the officials that they should not have expended it. Congress can limit it now and call attention to the fact that they should come to Congress for the appropriation required.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers a substitute, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. CANNON: Page 1, strike out the word "any," in line 10 and line 1, on page 2, and in line 2, on page 2, to and including the word "appropriated," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "from such appropriations as may be made from time to time by Congress for such purposes."

Mr. CANNON. If I may, I will withdraw my amendment and accept the gentleman's amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not wish to argue the proposition at all. The whole question is one of Congress retaining its right to control the appropriations and to appropriate for specific purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JONES of Texas: Page 2, line 2, after the word "appropriated," strike out the remaining portion of line 2 and all of lines 3, 4, and 5, and in line 6 down to and including the word "advisable."

Mr. CANNON. What is it proposed to strike out.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Clerk report the section as it will read if amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War is authorized to pay tuition for the officers so detailed and to provide them with necessary textbooks and technical supplies from such appropriations as may be made from time to time by Congress for such purposes, subject to such rules for use, compensation for use, accounting, report, and the return as he may prescribe.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California moves that all debate on this amendment and amendments thereto close in five minutes.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DOWELL) there were 45 ayes and 1 no.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the word "furnish" and insert in lieu thereof the word "loan."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 2, strike out the word "furnish" and insert the word "loan."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON] would like to have two minutes, and I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for that time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from California to the fact that on his own motion all debate is closed.

Mr. KAHN. But it is not in connection with any amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WATSON] may address the committee for two minutes out of order. Is there objection?

Mr. DOWELL. It is not on this bill?

Mr. CANNON. It relates to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I asked for this time in order to verify a statement made by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I have a report submitted by Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate, on "Aircraft Production in the United States." I read from the report:

July 24, 1917, Congress appropriated $640,000,000 to carry out the aircraft program. This fund has been, either by actual expenditure or by commitments, exhausted. A further appropriation of $884,304,758 has been found necessary.

(b) We have not a single American-made chasse (or plane of attack) upon the battle front.

(c) We have not a single American-made heavy bombing plane upon the battle front.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside, with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 46, noes 0.

So the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

INCREASING EFFICIENCY OF MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (H. R. 2980) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1110, Revised Statutes, and the first proviso of section 12 of the act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provision for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, be, and the same hereby are, repealed.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has 18 minutes remaining, and there is one hour left beside that, to be controlled by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

Mr. WALSH. There has to be somebody opposed to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Unless some one opposed to the bill desires the time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I have asked for this time in general debate to call attention, in view of the present emergency, to the proposed legislation, introduced in the House by me yesterday, being the following bill:

[66th Cong., 1st sess. H. R. 10235. In the House of Representatives, Oct. 28, 1919. Mr. BLANTON introduced the following bill, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed.]

A bill to safeguard the transmission of interstate traffic and United States mails, to punish unlawful conspiracies, to protect citizens in their right to labor and to punish unlawful interference therewith, and to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States, and to prohibit the use of mails in furtherance of such acts, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for two or more persons to enter into any combination or agreement (1) to prevent, hinder, or restrain any other person from seeking and engaging in work of any kind for railroads or boats carrying United States mails or engaged in interstate traffic; or (2) to prevent, hinder, or restrain the movement of United States mail, or of persons or commodities in boats or over lines of railroad engaged in interstate traffic; or (3) to prevent, hinder, or restrain the movement of trains or boats carrying United States mails or trains on railroads engaged in interstate traffic. Persons so combining and agreeing shall be deemed guilty of a conspiracy and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 and by imprisonment not exceeding two years: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to deny to employees the right to quit work at their option, after giving 30 days' notice of such intention.

SEC. 2. That it shall be unlawful for two or more persons to enter into any combination or agreement (1) to prevent, hinder, or restrain any other person from seeking and engaging in work connected with the mining of coal, upon which the public or railroads and boats engaged in carrying the United States mail rely for fuel; or (2) to prevent, hinder, or restrain the movement of such coal. Persons so combining and agreeing shall be deemed guilty of a conspiracy, and shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 and by imprisonment not exceeding two years: Provided, That nothing herein shall be construed to deny employees the right to quit work at their option after giving 30 days' notice of such intention.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person (1) to advocate or advise the overthrow, or to write, or knowingly to print, publish, utter, sell, or distribute any document, book or circular, paper, journal, or other written or printed communication, in or by which there is advised the overthrow, by force or violence, of the Government of the United States; or (2) to advocate resistance by force or violence to the Constitution and Government of the United States, or by force or violence to prevent, hinder, or delay or attempt to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States; (3) to display or exhibit any flag, banner, or emblem intended to promote or incite the overthrow, by force or violence, the Government of the United States, or resistance to its laws; (4) to transmit or attempt to transmit through the United States mails any of the seditious communications mentioned herein, all of which are declared to be nonmailable; (5) to import or cause to be imported into the United States any matter declared to be nonmailable. That any person who shall violate any of the provisions of section 3 of this act shall be deemed guilty of sedition and punished by a fine not exceeding $10,000 and by imprisonment not exceeding 20 years, and if an alien, shall be, upon the expiration of sentence, deported from and forever barred from reentering the United States.

All laws or parts of laws in conflict with this act are, to the extent of such conflict, hereby repealed, this act being cumulative.

Mr. Chairman, I do desire to take but a few more minutes to call the attention of the House and country to another matter.

It will be remembered that on Flag Day, Saturday, June 14, 1919, Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, together with a delegation of said federation coming to Washington from the Atlantic City convention, conducted a big parade in Washington even to the doors of the Capitol Building, protesting against prohibition and in favor of beer. In the Washington Post of that morning, under the head of "Special Notices," appeared the following:

All members of the Bricklayers' Union No. 1, District of Columbia, are ordered to meet at Union Station, June 14, 1919, at 1.30 o'clock sharp. Failing to appear they shall be fined according to article 24, section 10.

M. A. WOLFE,
Recording Secretary.

And, Mr. Chairman, I am told that all members of every labor union in Washington were so ordered to appear and march in said parade, under penalty of being fined if they refused. Yesterday in the city of Washington there was another parade in Washington by labor unions in honor of Mr. Samuel Gompers, in which parade the papers tell us from 30,000 to 40,000 members of unions marched. I am informed by a member of one of the organizations which marched in that parade that every man and woman who belonged to a union in Washington was forced to march in that parade yesterday or be fined $5 if they did not enter the parade.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Fined by whom?

Mr. BLANTON. By the union. Five dollars. In other words, it was made compulsory upon them by regulations of the union that they would be fined if they did not join the parade. Now, I think no American citizen, no man or woman in America, should be forced to enter any kind of a parade against their wish and will. If they wanted to do honor to Mr. Gompers by marching in a public parade, they had a perfect right to do so, and I would say nothing against it, but they should not be forced to do it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANTON. And it is autocracy that forced them to join a parade when they may not have wanted to do so and when the money would be taken out of their pockets if they did not join. I desire to enter my protest against that practice of fining an American man and an American woman if they do not do something that unions command them to do. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I just wanted to ask the gentleman if Congress had any jurisdiction to legislate on the question of admission or attendance upon parades?

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no; but I want to say——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. I would have answered the gentleman from Alabama very satisfactorily if my time had not expired.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman from Alabama use some of his time?

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have asked for these two minutes in order that I might have a short resolution read from the Clerk's desk, passed by the American Legion, Youngstown Post, No. 15. Mr. Chairman and Members of Congress, I want to congratulate this post on the splendid sentiment they express in these resolutions. I indorse it in truth and spirit, because it is American and comes from the heart of those brave men who followed our flag into a foreign land in order that Christian civilization and liberty might be preserved, and they are now ready to give their all to preserve our sacred institutions from those who are seeking to destroy our Government at this hour.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

YOUNGSTOWN POST, NO. 15, AMERICAN LEGION,
October 26, 1919.

Be it resolved, That we, the members of Youngstown Post, No. 15, American Legion, Youngstown, Ohio, do hereby declare our unalterable opposition to all bolshevistic, anarchistic, nihilistic, I. W. W., or soviet forms of government, and to all individuals or groups of individuals whose avowed purpose it is to overthrow the Government of the United States or to undermine or imperil its democratic institutions and traditions; and we do solemnly resolve that no flag or other symbol of the spirit of anarchy and destruction shall ever be raised in this city, State, or country to supplant the flag for which we fought; and we do further solemnly pledge ourselves to support and defend the principles of democratic government and to suppress with all the forces at our command any attempts of any character whatsoever to impair, impede, overthrow, or destroy those principles.

JOHN D. ROBERTSON,
Post Commander.
ARTHUR C. SCHAFER,
Acting Post Adjutant.

[Applause.]

Mr. DENT. Mr. Chairman, I have no requests for further time on this side, and I yield back the balance of my time to the gentleman from California.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not yield the time.

Mr. DENT. I will ask the gentleman from California to utilize my time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I altogether now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has 17 minutes in his own right and the gentleman from Alabama has 58 minutes.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York [Mr. MACGREGOR] 15 minutes. [Applause.]

Mr. MACGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I think that we all are appalled by the situation in which our country is placed at this time, and I think it very fitting in connection with the bills which are before us to-day that we should pause a moment and give expression to our feeling with reference to the disturbances in our Nation at the present time.

We have come to a crisis in the history of civilization, and the manner in which it is met will determine as to whether we will go forward in the upward progress of man toward the realization of the dream of mankind—a state of society in which the human relationship shall be such that all men shall enjoy happiness and contentment, or whether we shall revert to a state of barbarism.

The civilization that has been built up within a comparatively short time is a delicate structure and depends for its existence upon an acquiescence by the great majority to a relationship founded upon law and not upon force. [Applause.]

It is probably inconceivable to those who are not familiar with the history of the past that our civilization can be overthrown, but even a casual student of the past knows that it has been the frequent fate of mankind to ascend and then to abruptly descend. The examples are many. Egypt, with its flourishing cities and a high state of civilization, endured for several thousand years and then died; Greece, with all its intellectual development, faded away. Then the Roman Empire rose to great heights and fell. If a Roman citizen in the year 1 A. D. had been asked if it was possible for the world to return to a state of barbarism, he probably would have said that human imagination could not conceive that all of the learning and culture of his time could be swept away, and that the mind of man could revert to that of a savage.

The final extinction of the Roman Empire of the West is fixed at the year 476 A. D., and the civilized world was plunged into that period known as the "Dark Ages."

Guizot, in his History of Civilization, tells us that in the seventh century men's minds were so crude and undeveloped that there was no one of sufficient intellectual development that he could commit to writing the history of his times for the benefit of the future. He says that in the eighth century "All remains of Roman civilization had disappeared, even to its very language—all became buried in complete barbarism." He further says:

> The fall of the empire, its disorders and miseries, the dissolution of social relations and ties, the occupations and sufferings of personal interests, the impossibility of permanent labor, of tranquil leisure, such were the true causes of the moral as well as the political decay and of the darkness which enveloped the human mind.
>
> If we considered it in its entirety, the history of the human mind in modern Europe from the fifth century to our own days, we should find, I think, that the seventh century is the lowest point to which it descended.

The upward progress began then, but it was slow and painful. Nearly a thousand years elapsed before the basis of the present civilization was reached. Guizot fixes the time of the commencement of our civilization at the time of the disappearance of the feudal system, and that was the year 1600. Assuming that he is correct, and there is no better authority, the civilization, upon the stability of which we have prided ourselves, is but 300 years' duration

The last century has been a wonderful chapter in human history. The world, especially in our own Nation, has gone forward by leaps and bounds.

The brain of man has developed to such an extent that he has been able to subdue and bring to his use and enjoyment the forces of nature; he has turned to his use the minerals, the coal, the oil, the gases that were hidden by a beneficent Creator in the bowels of the earth; he has subdued the seas and used them as a highway; he has turned water into a means of locomotion and of power; he has seized from the air the unseen electric forces and compelled them to furnish energy, heat, and light; he has overcome the natural laws of gravitation and navigates the air; he has taken the very waves of the air as a vehicle for the conveying of thought. After these wonderful accomplishments are we to confess that we are unable to cope with the problem of adjusting the relations between man and man to the end that we shall go forward and not backward?

Within half a century we have developed a great industrial system. The little shop, with employer and employee working side by side, in intimate and personal contact, has practically disappeared, and the advent of machinery and the harnessing of the forces of nature has resulted in the organization of great centers of industry, with bodies of men united in corporations, taking the place of the individual employer, and an immense army of mechanics and workingmen doing the manual labor, constituting an employee group.

This combination of effort and organization of resources has resulted in an increase in production which has made the last half of the nineteenth century and the first two decades of the twentieth the most remarkable wealth-producing epoch the world has ever seen. If the grouping of employers into corporations and employees into unions had proceeded along lines of mutual and harmonious cooperation this epoch would have been the time of fulfillment of the brightest dreams of humanity, and our civilization would have been so strong and enduring that neither foreign propaganda nor domestic intrigue would have been able to shake its mighty foundation.

Unfortunately, however, the two groups proceeded along lines directly opposite, and the result is that to-day the thoughtful observer can not fail to be alarmed when he sees upon every side, in every section of the country and in every industrial center especially, an apparently unyielding determination of the two groups that dominate the industrial life of the country to engage in a titanic struggle which will, unless forestalled, shake the pillars of society, undermine the entire structure of our own Government, and threaten the very existence of world civilization.

This wonderful modern civilization—the product of the hopes and endeavors of mankind for centuries, consecrated by the blood of millions of heroes upon hundreds of battle fields where liberty was fought for—may be utterly destroyed by a frenzied mob and go down in an orgy of unbridled passion if we do not meet the issue that now confronts us with firm and unyielding purpose and determination that "government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

The present evil of the dispute between capital and labor is more impressive than usual in that it directly affects every man, woman, and child in the United States. A strike in the coal industry would paralyze every industry in the country; it would cripple transportation; and, added to the horrors of a nation-wide stagnation of industry, it would mean infinite misery and suffering in every home in our land.

Under these circumstances, our duty is obvious and imperative.

If any foreign power were to blockade our ports so that we could not import coal, if necessary, we would at once declare war upon that power and use all the armed might of our country to break the blockade.

If any corporation in this country tries by any means to keep our citizens from obtaining coal or any product of nature that is needful for human wants, the same Government should use its laws and its armed forces to break that corporation's hold upon the supply; and if any body of laboring men should seek by strike and violence to keep our people from being supplied with this necessity of our existence, they should be treated equally as enemies to the country and every Federal force of law or arms should be promptly used against them.

I sincerely trust that the Members of this House will stand resolutely and firmly behind the President in upholding the Government and maintaining the inalienable right of all of the people to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" and avert the anarchy and social disorder that will be the prelude to our return to the darkness from which we have so recently emerged. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I will.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman think any further legislation is necessary in order to cope with the situation now existing?

Mr. MACGREGOR. I do not think so; but I believe there should be an expression upon the part of the Congress that it intends to stand firmly behind the executive department of this Government in seeing to it that peace and order are maintained. [Applause.]

Mr. KNUTSON. Perhaps my friend means a declaration would perhaps spur the administration to action?

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will yield, the administration has already acted. I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota. There is now before this House a concurrent resolution, introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], asking that the position of the President be sustained; so the responsibility is here and not on the administration.

Mr. KNUTSON. He has not acted. Words are not action.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, a short time ago I had occasion to make a few remarks on the floor of the House referring to certain operations in a place in the House Office Building, on the second floor, known as the House Office Restaurant. I at that time advocated the abolishment of that restaurant. I have no desire to pose as a hero, but I have received so many very fine compliments for bringing up that matter on the floor of the House from various Members who are interested in that proposition that a few words upon that subject may not be amiss at the present time, and this afternoon in the presence of the full membership which is here, which is rarely the case, I have asked for time in order that I might have 10 minutes to present this matter. I have no desire to make any comment upon the restaurant in the Capitol Building. Far be it from me to speak on that subject. Of course many are interested in that project. We are interested more to see——

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KING. I will yield.

Mr. FOCHT. If the gentleman is proceeding along that line, I will ask him if he does not think that all the Members who patronize either of those restaurants are martyrs?

Mr. KING. I was just going to present one point concerning the House Restaurant below, which I do not care to dilate upon at this time. There is one reform that ought to be carried out in the restaurant below, and I think it ought to be made mandatory, and that is the elimination of the rats. [Laughter.] Now, I will dilate upon that at some future time. They are a very peculiar species of rats——

A MEMBER. What about the cockroaches?

Mr. KING. That is another subject concerning the restaurant below. But these rats have been here a long time. Gentlemen have to go home and be reelected by their constituents every two years. Members may come and Members may go, but the rats in the restaurant downstairs go on forever. [Laughter.]

Passing that question up for a few moments, in referring to the other restaurant, I want to say that there has been a good deal of propaganda since those remarks were made, not by Members of the House but by certain gentlemen who make a living in some way or other around the purviews of the Capitol and in the corridors of the House Office Building, to the effect that the poor manager is not making any money, but that he loses money every day he keeps the doors of the restaurant open.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I would like to ask the gentleman who has charge of the restaurant down there?

Mr. KING. It is impossible to ascertain who it is. It is some shadowy, ghost-like individual. I have not been able to put my hands upon him yet. If any of the Members have information on that subject, I will be glad to receive it. For the purpose of offsetting this propaganda to which I have referred, I thought I would make a specific investigation, something that the membership could rely upon, and which could be put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

COST OF FOODSTUFFS IN HOUSE RESTAURANT.

On October 11, 1919, a plate of boiled corned beef and cabbage was purchased at the House Office Restaurant for 50 cents, and a lettuce-chicken sandwich for 35 cents, both prices prevailing that day.

In order to get the actual cost of the materials used in both the plate of corned beef and cabbage and lettuce-chicken sandwich, the component parts were weighed on an apothecary's scales at 1.25 p. m.—within an hour after purchase—at the drug store of H. E. Sprucebank, 201 Second Street SE., Washington, D. C. Because market prices of the various objects were given in avoirdupois weight, the figures were reckoned in avoirdupois. The wholesale prices of the articles were obtained from prominent firms and the actual cost of the materials thus computed.

The corned beef and cabbage, which sold for 50 cents an order, was found to contain 8.05 cents' worth of material at current market prices.

The lettuce-chicken sandwich, which sold for 35 cents, was found to contain 4.58 cents' worth of material at current market prices.

Corned beef and cabbage (including bread and butter).

Cost:	Cents.
Corned beef—2 ounces 4 drams 40 grains apothecaries' weight, or 2 ounces 14.4 drams avoirdupois, at 30 cents per pound (price from T. H. Keane & Co.)	5.43
Cabbage—3 ounces cabbage, apothecaries' weight, or 3 ounces 5.76 drams avoirdupois, at 3 cents per pound (price, Golden & Co.)	.63
Bread—1⅓ ounces apothecaries' weight, or 1 ounce 10.88 drams bread, at 7 cents for 12-ounce loaf, avoirdupois (price, Corby Baking Co.)	.98
Butter—1 dram 40 grains apothecaries' weight, or 3.728 drams avoirdupois weight, at 70 cents per pound (price, Golden & Co.)	1.01
Total cost of materials	8.05
100 per cent for handling	8.05
Net cost of serving	16.10
Selling price	50.00

Net profit, 34 cents, or approximately 212 per cent.

At above price 3 pounds of corned beef and cabbage for a workingman's family dinner would cost $3.

Now, as to the more important item of the sandwich, I will say to the Members that I endeavored to preserve the sandwich that I might exhibit it on the floor of the House, so that the Members could get the dimensions of it as I talked about it, but, unfortunately, I could not get the floor soon enough, and the sandwich began to get rather muscular, and the cockroaches were accumulating and mobilizing in three or four regiments outside of the door, and I had to throw it out of the window. [Laughter.] However, it might have been seen by some of the Members of the House with the naked eye, but Members on the back seat would have been deprived of the exhibition.

Now, here is what I have gathered as to the chicken-lettuce sandwich:

Lettuce-chicken sandwich.

Cost:	Cents.
Chicken—5 drams 30 grains apothecaries', or 12.336 drams avoirdupois, at 45 cents per pound (price, Golden & Co.)	2.16
Lettuce—5 drams 20 grains apothecaries', or 11.968 drams avoirdupois, at 6 cents per pound (price, Golden & Co.)	.28
Butter—1 dram 40 grains apothecaries', or 3.728 drams avoirdupois, at 70 cents per pound (price, Golden & Co.)	1.01
Bread—1 ounce 5 drams 50 grains apothecaries', or 1 ounce 15.04 drams avoirdupois, at 7 cents for 12-ounce loaf (price, Corby Baking Co.)	1.13
Total cost materials	4.58
100 per cent for handling	4.58
Net cost of serving	9.16
Selling price	35.00

Profit, 25.84 cents, or more than 250 per cent.

At the above rate one 3-pound chicken would make 70 sandwiches, which would sell for $24.50. So there you are, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I will.

Mr. SEARS. I think the gentleman's remarks are very interesting, and I believe really something should be done before we let the secretaries pay these outrageous prices; but as good people contend, while I do not indorse it, that when you place anything in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD it is buried, I suggest to the gentleman that he refer these remarks to the steering committee on his side and also on this side, and to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, so that we can get some action.

Mr. KING. If we could get the cooperation only of the steering committee on the other side, we could do something with it.

Mr. SEARS. Oh, no.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MERRITT].

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Chairman, I think it opportune and important to acquaint the committee with certain facts which have come to my attention through a suit recently decided by a United States court on appeal. The title of the case is The Coronado Coal Co. against The United Mine Workers of America, and it is reported in the Two hundred and fifty-eighth Federal Reporter, page 829.

Most of the facts which I state are contained in the official record of the case in the trial court and in the opinion of the court of appeals, which sustained the judgment of the trial court for $600,000 upon a verdict for the plaintiff.

The United Mine Workers of America has a membership of about 400,000 and frequently has at its disposal several million dollars. The national union, which has its headquarters at Indianapolis, is divided into some 25 districts, more or less, each of which has affiliated with it certain local unions. The districts and local unions are but the agencies of the national union, subject to its control and direction. The national union publishes a weekly journal, which is its official organ, in which it has for many years past been reporting to its membership concerning its various activities. The articles in that journal have an important bearing upon the mental attitude of the employees of our mines toward our Government and Government officials.

For many years the United Mine Workers' Union has been engaged in a nation-wide scheme to prevent the mining of bituminous coal except under union domination. The terrific disturbances witnessed in Colorado, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Alabama, Kentucky, and Arkansas were but steps to carry out this gigantic plan by the elimination of all open-shop production, so that this country would be placed in just such a critical position where the present crisis now places it. If one will read the opinions of some of our Federal courts in cases involving litigation against this union, and particularly that of the Supreme Court in the case of the Hitchman Coal & Coke Co. v. Mitchell (245 U. S., 229), one will gather some idea of the way in which this combination has operated to protect the union mines from the competition of the open-shop mines. By joint conferences with the unionized operators they reach an understanding or agreement that the usual methods of organized labor will be utilized to destroy nonunion competition.

Mr. John L. Lewis, one of the representatives of the United Mine Workers, when attending one of the joint conferences with the operators, referred to the purpose of the conference as follows:

> As I understand it, it is for the purpose of wiping out competition between us as miners first, viewing it from our side of the question; next, for the purpose of wiping out competition as between the operators in these four States. When we have succeeded in that and we have perfected an organization on both sides of the question, then, if I understand the real purpose of this movement, it is that we will jointly declare war on every man outside of this competitive field who will do anything in any way endangering the peace that exists between us. What is necessary to do this? Organize our forces in the competing fields so far as the United Mine Workers are concerned. Go into these outside competing fields and tell your competitors that they have to join this movement, whether they like it or not, and give stability to the coal business of the United States.

At the miners' convention of 1907, Delegate Green, now secretary-treasurer of the United Mine Workers, said:

> Now, something must be done. It is absolutely necessary to protect us against the competition that comes from the unorganized fields east of us.

At the same convention Delegate O'Connor said:

> Through the action of that convention and through our effort last year, we have the nonunion coal practically shut out of Indiana.

In February, 1913, Vice President Hays, in an official statement in the Journal of the United Mine Workers for February 20, 1913, said:

> We will spend every cent in our international treasury, collect a million dollars or more by assessment, and tie up every nonunion mine in the country, if need be, in order to redress the wrongs of the West Virginia miners, and in saying this I express not only my own view, but the views of President White and our entire executive board.

Following this policy of attempting to prevent the operations of nonunion or open-shop mines, the United Mine Workers of America, acting through its district branches, determined in the spring of 1914 to prevent the open-shop operations on the part of the Bache-Denman companies in Sebastian County, Ark. As a result of the activities of the union, all of the destructible property of the company was destroyed, leaving nothing but the coal in the ground. This is but a sample of attacks, amounting almost to civil war, which have confronted nearly every operator who attempted to operate coal mines on an open-shop basis. These attacks have been encouraged, sanctioned, and approved by the national union, and nothing has ever been done by that union or its branches to put any check on such lawlessness and crime arising in connection with its own operations.

As a result of the destruction of these coal-mining properties in Arkansas, a receiver was appointed and brought suit against the national union and district 21, which covered that section of the country, also certain local unions and prominent union men, in the district court of the United States for the western district of Arkansas. The suit was brought under the Sherman antitrust law for over $2,000,000 damages, and after a jury trial and verdict in favor of the plaintiff, in the fall of 1917, judgment was rendered for over $600,000. This judgment was subsequently affirmed by the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in April, 1919, and its final determination will probably rest with the United States Supreme Court.

What is said about this organization is based upon the strong evidence found in the record of this case, and which has an added importance because I understand and believe that it is fairly representative of the conduct and attitude of this organization in all of its industrial battles, and but illustrates the extent to which it has encouraged lawlessness and violence throughout the country and cast the cursed blight of suspicion upon the fairness of our institutions.

The story is not a long one. In the spring of 1914 certain of the coal mines in Sebastian County, Ark., which belonged to the so-called Bache-Denman interests attempted to open up on the open-shop plan. The formal opening of the mines was set for April 4, and in the selection of employees no discrimination was made against members of the union. On Sunday, April 5, a large crowd of union men gathered about the mines and there were some minor disturbances. The company was told that it could not operate the mines under any consideration unless it signed up with the union, and some of the employees were threatened. On Sunday evening a union meeting was held at Hartford, Ark., and the union leaders went around Hartford to the various storekeepers and told them to close their stores on Monday and go out to the mines for a demonstration.

RIOT OF APRIL 6, 1914.

On Monday, April 6, all of the union mines were shut down because the employees were arranging to attend the riot and demonstration against the Bache-Denman mines. About noon crowds gathered from the different sections, amounting in all to 1,200 or 1,500 people, and a meeting was held in front of the local-union hall which lasted an hour or two. The union men intimated that there was to be another Colorado, referring to the civil war which had taken place there. Crowds broke over the ropes and attacked the guards, who had to be sent to the hospital. They invaded the property of the company and hoisted an American flag with a banner bearing the words, "This is a union man's country." They pulled the fires and shut down the mines. The company's employees were beaten up, one of them having his teeth kicked out, which a union miner proudly exhibited. The local physician refused to treat one of the wounded men, saying "He would not treat a G— d—n scab." The employees were obliged to leave the property, and the pumps at the mines being no longer operated, the mines filled with water.

After the riot of April 6 the official journal of the United Mine Workers, which is published at Indianapolis, came out with this statement:

ARKANSAS MINERS DETERMINED—DEMAND UNION CONDITIONS.

FORT SMITH, ARK., April 7.

Unionists to-day have frustrated an attempt of the officials of the Bache-Denman Coal Co.'s mine, at Midland, near here, to strangle their organization and operate under an "open-shop policy." Previous to this decision 200 union men had been employed.

The miners met about a mile from the Mammoth Vein mine, as the mine is known, and held meetings. They were addressed by a number of speakers, including Miss Freda Hogan, daughter of Daniel Hogan, a prominent Socialist. Following the meeting the men formed in line and marched to the mine.

Several clashes marked the efforts of the unionists to persuade the men in the mines to join them. Following a disturbance in which two guards were hurt, the miners joined the unionists, and left the pit. The United States flag was then hoisted from a near-by pole and the crowd departed.

The company has announced its determination to inaugurate the open-shop policy at its six other mines in western Arkansas and eastern Oklahoma next fall. At present they are closed for the summer.

Following this riot a meeting of the international executive board of the United Mine Workers national union was held in Kansas City on May 4, at which time President John P. White said:

The company tried to run the mine on the nonunion basis, and the boys simply marched in on them in a day down there and kicked his Colorado guards out of there and broke their jaws, and put the flag of the United Mine Workers on the top of the tipple and pulled the fires out of the boilers, and that was all there was to it, and the mines have been idle in there ever since.

On May 18 the same President White, addressing the convention of district 21 at Fort Smith, said:

I have known the value and worth of the organization of district 21 for many years. We have watched your struggles with a great deal of pride and satisfaction and have admired you for the splendid fighting qualities that you possessed.

The district organizer, McLaughlin, says that he never heard White express any disapproval of anything that happened, and that no union officers took any steps whatever toward disciplining any union member for taking part in the riot.

On April 8 an injunction was issued out of the Federal court, and on April 15 an attempt was made to start the pumps and prepare for further operation. From that date up to July 17, when the property was finally destroyed, there was a continual series of insults, threats, and intimidation by the union men. The local-union secretary, Charlie Robinson, stated that there would be no trouble until the company began hoisting coal, and then the place would be torn up. He said:

You had better go join the Army. You would be safer in Mexico. * * * You know what they done in Colorado. The same thing will be done here.

On May 20 Pete Stewart, president of district 21, said they were going to have another Colorado there, and that any man that wanted a gun could get one next week; that it was no secret that everybody went armed and that everybody who wanted arms could get them, and that he was taking the responsibility on himself with regard to the guns, and he would advise everybody else to carry one; that the scabs would be put out of there, and he would die before he would see No. 4 mine run on an open-shop basis. Shortly after that Fred Holt, secretary-treasurer of district 21, purchased a large number of rifles and many thousands of cartridges, which were paid for by the officials of district 21. At about this time President Stewart, of district 21, said:

Damn the injunction. The National Government is against us, but the people are with us, and we are going to win. * * * We have got a way. We are not going to let them dig coal.

The Federal Department of Justice sent 50 or 60 marshals to enforce the injunction, but these marshals were boycotted in the village and unable to secure lodgings except in the company's own houses. Men were constantly threatened and attacked. One of the marshals asked the union men if there was going to be trouble, and they replied, "Yes; it will be just like Ludlow, and you had better bury those G— d—n rifles before we go down."

The Journal of the United Mine Workers published July 9, 1914, referring to the attempts of the United States Government to maintain order, said:

We are out to win, and we intend to do so. We have a strong bunch of scabs here. We have scabs from Spadra, Ark., and United States gunmen who have come here from Colorado to guard the Arkansas scabs.

PREPARATIONS FOR BATTLE OF JULY 17.

On July 15 certain of the United States marshals who had been protecting the property were withdrawn, and they state that one of the union miners stated: "We are going to lose a lot of our boys over this, but we can not let any scab stay in this country." The knowledge of the impending attack became general throughout the country. One of the union miners said he "expected everyone to be killed."

The secretary-treasurer of the local union stated to some of the people that they would "let us know in time to get our teams and men away, for they did not want to hurt us." On the evening of July 16 armed brigades marched out to destroy the mines. People in the neighboring town were warned to move away, and a good many of them moved. Merchants were requested to close their stores the following day, July 17, and to take part in the battle. Firearms were distributed by the union officials. Union meetings were held just prior to the attack, at which speeches were made stating that they were going to clean out the scabs. On July 17 the union men in other mines, instead of reporting to their employers, reported to their union on the hills around the mines with rifles and shotguns. About midnight of July 16 the lights in the mine went out, the wires having been cut. About 4 a. m. several bunches of men came along the road and fired about 100 shots in the company's property. Things then remained quiet until about 7 o'clock, when armed men began to sneak around the woods, concealing themselves behind trees, and before long firing upon the company's property began on all sides from several hundred men. One of the tipples was captured and the union men put in a case of dynamite and blew it up. The company's men sought shelter behind the cars and replied to the union fire as best they could. The women and children were moved in between the boilers. About everything inflammable was burned up by the invaders. "Burn her!" "Burn her!" was the cry. Some of the company men who fled were captured by the union men. The president of one of the local unions was seen going toward one of the undestroyed buildings with burning brands in his hands. Bullets came into the camp like hail, according to the testimony of one man. They set fire to the blacksmith shop by lighting some waste. As in Colorado, the men tied white handkerchiefs around their arms as a mark of distinction, so that union men would not shoot members of their own party.

The employees who were captured were taken into the union hall and guarded. The captors admitted that the whole affair had been put through by the union. They stated that they were going over to Jamestown to another open-shop town in a few days and that the union was too strong for open-shop operations in that vicinity. One of the scabs who was captured was deliberately shot through the heart and another was shot dead and afterwards kicked around. Later where one of the scabs had been killed the cabin was found burned down and a number of human bones remained.

About this time Judge Youmans, the district judge, received a letter which was later found to have been written by a prominent member of the local union, and the letter said:

You are notified to comply with the requirements of your office. If such is not complied with very shortly, there is likely to be an unexpected change between your soul and fleshly temple, and you won't know the day or time or by what means such will take place. Still we don't want to act cowardly, but give you a little time to act differently. At any rate, you will have a little time for future preparation for that place called heaven You are weighed in the balance and found wanting. There is a great change soon to happen.

(Signed) FOREWARNED.

This is a barking dog and if teased much longer will bite.

(Signed) PRESIDENT OF COMMITTEE.

The writer of this letter was discovered. He pleaded guilty, received a sentence of three months, and was put on the pension list by the union.

In December of that year the leaders of the unions were indicted for conspiracy in violating the laws of the United States because of disobedienee of the injunction. Eleven of them, being the leading ones, pleaded guilty and were sentenced to pay fines of $8,500, which were paid by the union, and to serve jail sentences ranging from 2 years to 90 days.

In the Journal for July 23 there appeared an editorial entitled "The truth about Hartford, Ark.," which reads as follows:

Attempts on the part of the hired army of the Bache-Denman Co., New Hartford, Ark., to emulate the Colorado gunmen militia brought about an outbreak on the part of the union miners, in which the gunmen were badly worsted. * * * All night Thursday the tents of the miners had been the targets of the hired thugs. Union miners living at a distance heard of the attack. Determined that a massacre like that of Colorado should not be perpetrated upon their friends and relatives, many men marched to the rescue. The sharpshooters were dislodged and followed to their camp. Shots were exchanged all the way. Miners then determined to destroy the enemy's stronghold as a matter of protection for their homes, the only shelter of their families.

We do not advocate force as an argument. We would adjust all of our differences at the council table, if the choice was ours. But when it is necessary to protect our homes, our families from the attacks of hired ruffians who do not spare, as we have learned too well, the mother or the babe, to whom murder and arson are "all in the day's work," we applaud the men—would be glad to personally aid the men to defend their homes even though it be necessary to follow their assailants to the shelter of the company's buildings, their rallying place from which they come forth at night on their work of destruction.

In the Journal for July 30 an article by Eugene V. Debs appeared, as follows:

BRAVO, ARKANSAS COAL DIGGERS.

Hats off to the Arkansas coal miners! They have routed the gunmen and delivered a body blow to the government by assassination. * * * But the miners had heard of West Virginia and Michigan and Colorado and they were not caught napping. They were not so well armed as Bache's red-light gunmen, but what they lacked in physical equipment was more than made up in moral stamina, and when the smoke of battle cleared away several gunmen were found to have bitten the dust and the rest vanished into mist and no trace of them has been found since.

Bravo, ye coal-digging slaves of the pits! * * *

In the case down in Arkansas the scab operator, following the example set by the operators in other States, had his court injunction issued, ordered out his private army of man killers, then sat himself snugly down in his easy chair to wait until the miners, whose labor had enriched him, laid weltering in their own blood.

But this particular operator was foiled. He got his lesson and he will not forget it. When the battle was over his private army was annihilated and his mines and tipples to the value of $200,000 blown up with dynamite, a mass of ruins.

This is the way government by gunmen and assassins should be made to react upon the criminal master class every time they put it in operation.

Brave once more, Arkansas coal diggers. You have set a heroic and inspiring example to the working class of the Nation. * * * Fred W. Holt, secretary of district 21 of the United Mine Workers, testified in court that he had shipped the guns from McAlester, Okla., his home, to the miners in Arkansas "for the purpose of enabling them to protect their wives and children against the outrages of the private armed guards."

All honor to Holt for having shipped the guns to the unarmed miners and for standing up in court like a man and admitting it. If government by gunmen is to prevail, then liberty is dead and the labor movement a farce.

The Arkansas miners have throttled the monster, and I appeal to the miners everywhere to arm themselves and prepare to do the same. They are strictly within their lawful right in arming themselves against lawless invasion and in defense of their homes.

The next assessment that is levied by the United Mine Workers and the Western Federation of Miners should be levied for the raising of a gunmen defense fund for furnishing each member with a high-power rifle and 500 rounds for the protection of their lawful rights, the defense of their wives and children, and for wiping out government by gunmen and assassination in the United States.

In the Journal for November 26 was published an article holding the Federal Government up to contempt and ridicule for its action in connection with these difficulties. The article is, in part, as follows:

TWENTY-SIX MINERS INDICTED.

The most unnecessary Federal grand jury ever assembled by a Federal judge to probe disturbances of a stricken community to-day returned 26 indictments against the members of the United Mine Workers.

The same issue of the Journal published an article entitled "Causes that led up to trouble in Arkansas," which contained the following:

The industrial trouble in Arkansas is more than a fight between employees and employer; more than a conflict between a powerful corporation on one side and a powerful union on the other. It is a battle to a finish to see whether the Federal Government will protect unsound enterprises against the protest of legitimate demands coming from disturbed citizens who have innocently fallen victims to the shortcomings of mismanagement. * * *

The remainder of this article deals with the situation at the Bache-Denman mines and ridicules Government officials.

At the outset of this trouble the attorney for the United Mine Workers says that he was instructed to do what he did in this district and was assured by the president of the district that they would "protect the members of our organization that get into trouble in the Hartford Valley to the last ditch." In accordance with this promise where litigation arose the criminals were defended in court at the expense of the union, and, when convicted, their fines were paid by the union. Financial support or pensions were furnished by the district unions to those who pleaded guilty and were serving terms in jail. Some of them were later reelected to office.

Mr. John P. White was an officer of the United Mine Workers from 1896 until about August, 1917, when he became connected with the Fuel Administration. He was vice president of the United Mine Workers from 1908 to 1909, and was president from 1911 to 1917, covering the periods of the rioting in Colorado and particularly in the rioting and destruction of property in Arkansas.

He testified that at no time during his entire connection with the union had he ever known of any disciplinary action having been taken by any officer of the national organization against any national officer or employee or member of the union or against any district or local officer or employee or against any district or local branch on account of violence or injury to life or property in labor disputes, and that he knew of no instance in which the union had given publicity in the Journal or otherwise to any notice to the members that they would be subjected to any discipline by the union if they participated in such violence. The only approach to such notice was when prior to his presidency he issued a circular in 1908 in connection with the Alabama strike admonishing the members to observe the law.

The United Mine Workers' Journal, the official organ of the national union, now declares that if the Supreme Court does not see fit to reverse the judgment in that case it will find means beyond the law to protect its interests.

This story of the attack on this group of mines in Sebastian County, Ark., illustrates what has happened in many other communities where open-shop operations have been attempted. About this same time unlawful attacks were made on the properties of the Pennsylvania Mining Co. in Johnson County, Ark., which adjoins. Practically every attempt to operate an open-shop mine in the bituminous fields has at one time or another met with a similar kind of attack, carried on by the national union through its district and local branches and its national organizers. At no time has the national union, which, according to the decision of the circuit court of appeals, controls the district and local bodies, ever done anything to check this lawlessness, but, on the contrary, has encouraged, sanctioned, and approved it.

Again and again have the official utterances of this organization attacked the different branches of our State and Federal Government whenever their officers have come into collision with any representative of law and order. In each of its great industrial battles, which in many instances have amounted almost to the dignity of civil war, they have poisoned the minds of their followers with reiteration to the effect that the union representatives were above reproach and were only jailed and otherwise punished because it is a capitalist Government acting as a tool of the employing interests. It makes no difference who the employer was or where the disturbance took place; it was immaterial what State government was operating or whether it was the Federal Government, the officials of this same organization were always present to make the same charges until a large part of its vast membership must have come to believe it so. This is the type of organization and the temper of some of the men who now threaten this great crime against society. To them force is a familiar method of common use.

This attitude toward lawlessness is not a new one, as witness these articles:

Mr. McDonald, a delegate to one of the conventions of the miners, said:

We have had men go to jail. We expect that more of us will go to jail. The penitentiary doors have no terrors for us, so far as that is concerned, and if putting two or three hundred of our men in jail will organize West Virginia, we will send two or three hundred down.

Extract from Mine Workers' Journal, May 21, 1914, article entitled "From Oklahoma," reviewing the difficulties in Colorado and closing as follows:

Why should we dodge the issue and rant about law and order and rights of citizens, when law and order leagues and citizens' alliances are murdering our brothers, desecrating our homes, and burning our wives and children, and are defended in their dastardly deeds by the powers of the State government? And so we have the issue to meet and let us meet it like red-blooded men. We can put down the anarchy of capital only with the same measures employed against us.

Extract from Convention Proceedings, District 21, February 17, 1914:

COLORADO STRIKE.

* * * But I saw there the same thing confronting the striking miners that is found in every State in the Union where a strike is incurred. I saw a tool in the hands of the coal corporations sitting in the governor's chair ready to do the bidding of these companies at their beck and call. I saw this same governor ordering the State militia into the coal fields to shoot down the striker as is customary in these controversies. * * *

Mine Workers' Journal of June 3, 1915, article on Colorado strike, entitled "A spanking—then taffy":

But while they may buy legal procedure against your officials just as they have confessed to buy the militia against the strikers, they can not frighten nor intimidate nor dishearten those international officials. * * *

Extract from Journal, August 18, 1919, page 4:

The mayor of Cleveland, Ohio, suspended 32 policemen for refusing to protect strike breakers. Good—not for the mayor but for the policemen. Let the company evince a desire to settle the strike, and there will be no necessity for strike breakers.

Extract from twentieth annual convention, Indianapolis, 1909, page 880:

* * * And now I want to do an act of justice toward the organizers—one and all of them. No set of men ever worked with more earnestness than the organizers, both international and district, than they did during that strike in Alabama, and they worked under the most dangerous conditions I have ever known of such work being done. For anything I did myself in that strike I have no reason to hang my head. I did the best I could; I went through more danger than any other man in the strike; I did it without complaint, and every time I went to the governor for protection for myself or any other men the answer was, "I will investigate," and the result of his investigation was, instead of giving us protection, that the brutality was worse than before the complaint was made. * * *

Mr. Chairman, I need make no comment on the facts to which I have called the attention of the committee. They speak for themselves, and I think that the committee will agree that they are of importance, particularly at this time, to the people of the United States.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BLAND].

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I feel it is proper at this time to make some remarks on the coal-mining situation, especially in view of the speech that has just been made. I am with the President in his view of the situation that a strike at this time will be a very harmful thing and much to be regretted, but I am not in sympathy with the great amount of sentiment that is being expressed here and elsewhere laying the blame of the situation all upon the coal miners. If you think there is but one side to this question you are mistaken, and I want to give you a few of the facts from the miners' viewpoint.

The statement read into the RECORD the other day by the gentleman from Virginia showing that some miners in West Virginia had been receiving three or four hundred dollars per month in wages is not a fair statement of the earnings of the coal miners. In my judgment, you will find that this represents the earnings of several men drawing it in the name of one man. These are nonunion mines, and I do not know the number of hours per day they work, but I do know the average wage of coal miners in the State of Iowa in the year 1918, which was the year when the peak of production was reached, was $850 per year, and in Indiana it was $1,300 per year. Some earned more; many earned less. In other words, my stenographer draws more than $1,300, and she has no family to keep.

In 1916 the miner was obtaining 64 cents a ton for digging coal. The coal sold at $1.25 f. o. b. at mines. Miners have had two raises since this of 10 cents each, and the present contract is for 84 cents.

The contract made between the miners, the operators, and the Fuel Administration to take effect November 1, 1917, provided for a rate to be paid the miners, a rate to be paid day hands, and also for selling price of coal arbitrarily fixed in the various districts. The entire advances secured by the miners by this contract and from modification of their contract amounted in total to 20 cents per ton for the actual mining of coal, to a somewhat larger raise for the day hands, who constitute 27 per cent of the total of men employed. To reduce this statement to percentages, men who dig coal by hand—pickmen, so called—had their wages increased from 64 cents to 84 cents, machine miners from 52 cents to 72 cents, day hands from $2.98 per day to $5 per day. The pickmen constitute 33 per cent of the total number engaged in the mines of Indiana. The percentage of raise for these men approximates 29 per cent. The machine men constitute 40 per cent, and their raise approximates 38 per cent. The day hands constitute about 27 per cent of the men employed; their raise approximates 68 per cent, or an average for all concerned of about 44 per cent.

In the meantime the prices for coal rose in the same period from about $1.25 per ton f. o. b. the mines to $2.45, the figures set by the Government, or almost 100 per cent. This includes the voluntary wage raise of August, 1917, and the raise provided for by the Fuel Administration to take effect on November 1 of the same year. Since that time the miner has received no increase in wages. In February of this year the Fuel Administration abrogated by proclamation all price restrictions. The effect for a short time was the lowering of selling price to the large buyers, especially the railroads, but never did it have any salutary effect upon the price of coal for the domestic consumer. On the contrary, the lower prices contracted for to the railroads were often made up by enhanced prices demanded from the domestic consumer. In the bulletin issued by the National Coal Operators' Association to-day, October 29, 1919, Indiana coal is quoted as selling at prices ranging from $2.45 per ton to $4 per ton f. o. b. the mines, or on the average of $2.92 per ton, 47 cents above the price fixed by the Fuel Administration. This in spite of the fact that miners are still working at the prices fixed by the Fuel Administration.

The miners claim that the Government, which is a party to the contract, abrogated the contract when it lifted price restrictions; that the operators abrogated the contract when they charged prices above those fixed by the Fuel Administration in the contract; and that the Railroad Administration, which was an agency controlled by the President, abrogated the contract last spring when it went into the open market and demanded and obtained coal at a lower price than the price fixed by the Fuel Administration at the time the miners' wages were fixed.

The miners' officials met the operators on September 26, 1919, five weeks prior to the date set when they demanded a contract to work under. Had the operators met the miners in a conciliatory mood and with the intention of formulating an agreement, there could be no danger of a strike now. From beginning to end of the negotiations at Buffalo, at Philadelphia, and Washington it was made plain to the operators that there were no strings upon the committee representing the miners that were then meeting with them; that these men had the same power as they always had had to formulate an agreement and to report such agreement to a reconvened convention with an affirmative recommendation if it met with their approval. Such has always been the course of negotiation between the miners and the operators, and none knew that better than the operators themselves. You all know that when the miners and the operators met for the purpose of arriving at the adjustment of wages both sides made big demands; both understand that eventually they will find the middle ground somewhere. The miners made their demand for a 60 per cent increase and a six-hour day. The operators simply relied upon the statement that the agreement entered into with the miners was still in effect, and refused to go into negotiation unless the miners agreed to continue to work indefinitely pending settlement. The miners' organization agreed to withdraw all demands and meet the operators and agree upon a wage scale. The operators refused to meet them in a spirit of get together; and I venture the assertion that if the operators and miners had met as they should have met, with a view of arriving at an agreement, the miners' organization would have receded from much of their demand, although they can easily justify an increase of 60 per cent if what the operator is receiving for the coal is any criterion for what the miner should receive in wages.

The miner has to dig about a ton of coal to buy a pound of bacon or a dozen of eggs if they sell as high in the mining districts as they sell here. He can show you where the high cost of living has outstripped the increase of wages paid to him.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Will it interrupt the gentleman to ask him a question?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. BEE. I understand the miner has not received any increase for his work, but that the price of coal has gone up to $5. Has the cost of production increased so as to justify the keeping down of the miner and the increased cost of production?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. I do not think that the miners' 84 cents is in keeping with the increased cost of living, and I do not think that the cost of coal fairly represents a fair division of profits between the miner and the operator. In other words, I think the operator, when he gets $2.92 a ton for his coal and pays the miner 84 cents for digging it, is not giving the miner enough for his labor. I know the price of everything the operator buys about the mine has increased. We can not expect him to work on the same margin that he did when the difference between the mining price was 64 cents and the selling price of coal $1.25. My point is that the operator is bringing the wrath of the coal-consuming public down upon the miner's head when he is only obtaining a 29 per cent increase while the operator has obtained about a 100 per cent increase.

Mr. BEE. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I wanted to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that according to his statement the increase in the miner's wages in his district has amounted to 41 or 42 per cent, whereas in his district the increase in the miner's cost of living is eighty-odd per cent, so that the miner now is really getting 25 or 30 per cent less in the way of bread and meat and shelter and clothing for his labor than he received in 1914.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The increased wage to the miner since 1916 has been only 29 per cent. Day men got an increase of about 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. In my own district the miners have had an increase of 47 per cent on their wages since 1914, and yet they are required to pay for the cost of their living eighty-odd per cent increase.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. The Indianapolis market for Indiana coal for domestic consumption sold in 1916 for $2.75 a ton. The same coal is selling to-day in the same market for $6.50 per ton, and this is prior to the strike flurry. Doubtless prices have been further enhanced since $2.75 to $6.50 will show that the percentage of increase is upwards of 120 per cent. Labor cost is on the increase about 44 per cent, rail rates about 35 per cent. Somewhere between the actual producer of coal and the consumer the difference between 44 per cent and 120 per cent has been absorbed. The difference between 35 per cent increased freight rates and 120 per cent has been absorbed, yet the miners are being held responsible or guilty of attempting to hold up the public. The entire wage raise demanded could be granted without raising the cost of coal to the public one cent and yet leave a comfortable profit to the operator and to the retailer.

In 1917, when the miners accepted the comparatively small wage raise, when compared with the splendid advance accorded the operator in the selling price of coal, they were fully aware that if they had chosen to exercise their economic power, the power to withhold production, they could have secured an advance far more adequate to meet the enhanced cost of living. They never considered using the strike weapon in the face of the enemy. They produced and produced plentifully, believing as they had been promised that when the war was over their fidelity would be rewarded, that they would again be accorded the right they have always exercised to use an economic power for the improvement of their conditions to lessen the distance between the prices of all commodities and especially coal, the production in which they are engaged, and their wages. They do not feel called upon to work indefinitely on a wage that has been admitted by the operators and by the Secretary of Labor as inadequate and unfair, and they realize that to enter into negotiations without setting some period for closing negotiation would mean indefinite postponement with all that that term implies.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes, indeed.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman give us some idea of the conditions under which these miners live?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Yes; I will if I have the time. They work in one of the most dangerous and hazardous occupations known to man. He is surrounded with danger from the time he leaves his home until he returns at night. He ofttimes spends an hour or two on his way to the mine and the same amount of time on the way home, which is not included in his eight hours. His family must be routed out before day to get him ready for the mine, and in some States when he gets home he has to wash in the family wash tub before he can get his supper. He is wet when he comes out of the mine, and his body is black with grease and dirt and grime. Cold, pneumonia, and consumption are prevalent among coal miners by reason of their exposure during inclement weather. I have seen them pass my door with their pit clothes frozen on their bodies to the extent that they rattled when they walked. Many of them work in water half-knee deep and ofttimes in low coal, where they have to double up like jackknives to work. The danger of gas and dust explosions, falling slate and coal, drowning, electrocution, and being mangled with dangerous machinery is always at hand, yet some fellows think the coal miner has a snap. I have lived with them all my life. I have 10,000 of them in my district.

When this war came on they readily agreed to work during the war on a 20-cent increase. In England and elsewhere miners took advantage of the necessities of the hour and demanded great increases, and obtained it. The coal miners of America, when other laboring men were striking, while engaged in Government work even, continued to increase production, fought off the Bolsheviks in their own organization, and stood firm by the Government in the time of stress. They bought Liberty bonds with what savings they had. They subscribed liberally to the Red Cross, Salvation Army, and so forth. Eighty thousand of their boys went to war, and I, for one, am mighty proud of the fact that you can not point to the United Mine Workers of America as traitors or shirkers in the dreadful hour of peril we have just passed; and if those who now are trying to bring the wrath of the coal-consuming public upon the heads of the miners are of the opinion that their demand for increased wages is prompted by any spirit of Bolshevism, with the hope of throwing this Nation into disorder and chaos, they are mistaken. Their patriotic conduct in the past is the best evidence of their good faith now, and I am firmly of the conviction that if the miners' organization is met in a spirit of fair play that they will not be unreasonable.

The President has said, in substance—I do not have his statement at hand—that it will be unlawful for the miners to strike. I hope that it will not be necessary for the miner to strike, and I believe the patriotic coal miner realizes that it would be a dreadful thing for his country, which we know he loves, for a great strike in the coal industry to begin here as we enter the rigors of winter during the reconstruction after this terrible war. As much as I sympathize with the President's statement that there should be no strike at this time, and as much as I admire his courage in trying to promote industrial peace, I can not agree with his statement that the war is over as affecting prohibition and the liquor interests, but that it is still going on when it comes to adjusting the wages of coal miners. Everyone knows that demobilization is almost entirely completed and that the war would have been declared over long ago had it not been for the delay in the ratification of the peace treaty. I can not understand why the delay in ratifying the peace treaty should change the right of the coal miner to demand a fair adjustment of his economic conditions, and I believe that the only solution out of the difficulty is for the operators' organization to meet the miners' organization in a fair, open, candid effort to adjust their difficulties, if possible, so as to insure each of them a fair remuneration out of the profits derived from the sale of coal, which, in my opinion, can be made at a less price than it is now being sold to the consuming public.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana.

There was no objection.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, there were several resolutions of inquiry submitted to the House and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. One of them was in regard to the amount of sugar on hand in the War Department. It was reported favorably, and I have a letter from the Secretary of War showing that he had, on October 15, 1919, 7,151,083 pounds of sugar on hand in the War Department on that day. I ask unanimous consent to print the letter as a part of my remarks.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. That statement was introduced Monday in connection with my speech on the sugar question, and it shows the amount of sugar, 7,000,000 pounds, is just 12,000,000 pounds short of what it takes to finish out this quarter, and they are now going to the liquidation commission and demanding of sugar that ought to go to the consumer 12,000,000 pounds. I received a cablegram this morning stating that they recently sold to Coblentz, Germany, 4,000,000 pounds.

Mr. KAHN. I understand they have done that. But the resolution of inquiry was simply directed to the Secretary of War, requesting him to furnish the House information as to the amount of sugar he had on hand. The Secretary of War has done that.

Then, also, the Secretary of War has furnished a letter showing the amount of candy on hand in the War Department. That letter discloses the fact that they have for domestic use 503,833 pounds; for overseas use, 1,093,027 pounds. Surplus to be sold next week, 5,591,918 pounds, making a total of 7,188,778 pounds.

I ask unanimous consent that that letter also may be inserted in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the documents indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The letters are as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PURCHASE, STORAGE AND TRAFFIC DIVISION,
GENERAL STAFF,
Washington, October 24, 1919.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON MILITARY AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In accordance with the provisions of H. Res. 336, which was referred to this office for report by H. R. reference slip dated October 18, 1919, the following report is submitted:

(a) Sugar in possession of the War Department on hand in the United States October 15, 1919, 7,151,083 pounds.

(b) In addition, there is a certain amount of sugar in possession of the War Department located in the island possessions, Siberia, and Europe. Reliable data as to the amount of this sugar is not at hand, but steps have been taken to secure it at the earliest practicable date.

A supplementary report will be made as soon as the data referred to in (b) above is available.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 25, 1919.

Hon. JULIUS KAHN,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives.

SIR: In connection with House resolution No. 321, introduced by Mr. Fitzgerald on October 4, 1919, calling upon the War Department for information as to the amount of candy held in storage at the time of the armistice, the amount disposed of since, and the amount now in the possession of the Government, I have the honor to hand you herewith the information called for under the headings mentioned above:

	Pounds.
Quantity of candy on hand under control of War Department at time of armistice	1,010,412
Quantity of candy disposed of by the War Department since the signing of the armistice:
Shipped overseas	40,646,066
Sold as surplus	4,214,362
	44,860,428
Quantity of candy now in possession of War Department:
For domestic use	503,833
For overseas use	1,093,027
Surplus to be sold next week	5,591,918
	7,188,778

The preceding figures show that 51,038,794 pounds of candy have been procured since the armistice. Of that amount, 39,636,654 pounds have been used by overseas forces, 1,596,860 pounds are held for the current needs of the Army, and 9,806,280 pounds have already or will be disposed of as surplus. This surplus was caused by the cancellation of requisitions due to the rapid reduction of the Army and the fact that production under contracts which had been entered into to provide for a much larger force could not be terminated on the instant.

It may be necessary to correct this report upon receipt of telegrams giving more recent stock reports. Upon receipt of this information you will be immediately advised.

Very respectfully,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Mr. KNUTSON and Mr. BLAND of Indiana rose.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KAHN. The gentleman from Minnesota was on his feet first, and I yield to him.

Mr. KNUTSON. Has the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs any information as to the price received by the War Department for the 22,000,000 pounds of sugar sold in France?

Mr. KAHN. The chairman of the committee has no information upon that subject. I simply received from the War Department the information that was called for by the resolutions introduced.

Mr. KNUTSON. Will the gentleman permit me to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question? The gentleman is disposing of the time.

Mr. KAHN. I have only a certain amount of time left for discussion on these bills, and I want to give the House the information that the War Department gave me.

Mr. BEE. Why do not gentlemen ask the War Department for this information instead of conducting a propaganda on the floor of the House?

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, the 5,000,000 pounds of candy, most of which is located at Hoboken, was all ordered and purchased since the armistice, was it not?

Mr. KAHN. I do not know anything about that. I simply sent up the resolutions as they were framed by the introducers, and the Secretary of War confined his answers to the questions propounded by the resolutions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD].

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, it happens that there is a bill pending before the committee at this time to repeal the old provision of law that was reenacted in the national-defense act with reference to the appointment of ordnance sergeants. The law at the present time provides that ordnance sergeants shall be selected from sergeants in the line or from sergeants in the Ordnance Department who have had at least eight years' experience in the Army, four years of which shall have been experience as noncommissioned officers. This law has outlived its usefulness. It probably was wise at the time it was enacted, but at this time the Government has on hand a vast amount of ordnance material which requires the attention of more or less well-trained experts, and it is impossible at present for the War Department to find such experts under the limitations of the law that I have just described. In other words, at the present time there are very few men in the Regular Army who have had eight years' experience who are eligible for appointment as ordnance sergeants. That number is made much more limited because of the provision that in addition to the eight years of Army experience four years of that time must have been spent as noncommissioned officers. In the opinion of the War Department, and in the opinion of the committee, this old law should be repealed, so that at the present time the War Department shall be free to choose among men qualified to serve as ordnance sergeants. It is impossible to find enough such men within the limitation of the law. That is all there is about it. I will be glad to answer any questions.

SEVERAL MEMBERS. Vote!

Mr. SANFORD. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. KAHN. Let the bill be read for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no further general debate desired, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. KAHN. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 41, noes 2.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

LOAN OF ARMY RIFLES TO AMERICAN LEGION.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up H. R. 9112, authorizing the Secretary of War to loan Army rifles to posts of the American Legion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California calls up a bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio, Gen. SHERWOOD.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I believe this bill should be amended. When it is in order to do so I propose to offer the following amendment:

After the words "American Legion" add "and to all other organizations of former discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines of the United States Army and Navy."

As the bill stands it discriminates against a very large number of former soldiers. I see to-day, according to the report from the Pension Office, that there are 265,632 veterans of the Civil War still on earth. We have a large number of the Union Veterans' Legion. We have a less number of the Loyal Legion. They are all soldier organizations. We have organized and already have 20,000 of the Private Soldiers' and Sailors' League. I received a newspaper from Detroit this morning, Detroit being the largest automobile manufacturing city in the world, which says that among the automobile manufacturing establishments thousands are joining the Private Soldiers' and Sailors' League. They have already established a magazine called the Red Diamond, and also a newspaper. Then we have the veterans of the war for free Cuba, well organized. I am in favor of giving to all these organizations of these World War soldiers the same privileges.

Mr. SCHALL. And of the Spanish War.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The Grand Army has never had guns and ammunition furnished to it by the Government—not in my section, at least—with which to fire salutes over soldiers' graves. I am in favor of doing something for the soldiers when they are living, and not having mock heroics over their graves. [Applause.]

I think that this amendment will appeal to every Member of the House, and I do not care to occupy any further time. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON].

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I have had a good deal of difficulty in getting rifles and equipment from the War Department for schools in my district. I had a good deal of difficulty in getting these rifles for the Boys' Industrial School, and did not finally succeed in getting all we wanted for those boys to use in their regular drill work. We have there a splendid battalion of boys, and military drill is one of their great delights and one of the attractive features of the school. I was not able to get rifles in sufficient quantity, and we had to give a heavy bond for what we did get.

I had not before been advised that there is a surplus in the War Department of rifles and this kind of supplies. My experience would indicate that there is not a surplus; but if there is a surplus of this material, then it should be furnished to all soldier organizations alike. Of course, I shall not oppose the American Legion getting their share of it, but I do say that if we should not single out the American Legion and say that its members may have these rifles and that other organizations of war veterans shall not have them, that course would involve a principle of inequality and discrimination hateful to all equitable minds. The American Legion is perhaps the largest organization of former soldiers, but there are a number of soldiers' organizations, and as far as I know they are all worthy, and as far as I know all equally worthy. There is the Private Soldiers' and Sailors' Legion; also the World War Veterans. Down in the South it is said there is a separate colored soldiers' organization; but there are a great many posts of the American Legion with exclusively negro members. There are said to be three of these negro posts of the American Legion in Washington. Camps of the Spanish War Veterans and posts of the Grand Army of the Republic, all of these soldier organizations should be put on the same footing as the American Legion. I favor fair treatment for all, and for this reason I shall support the amendment offered by that distinguished former soldier, Gen. SHERWOOD. I insist that if we are to furnish the rifles for this purpose to one soldiers' organization, good faith and the honor of Congress requires that we shall furnish them to all who are equally meritorious.

Mr. KAHN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. KAHN. I thoroughly agree with the gentleman, and I hope the amendment of Gen. SHERWOOD will be adopted.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. That ends the argument, for I take it that the Committee of the Whole will approve the judgment of the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by him, to loan Army rifles to posts of the American Legion for use by them in connection with the funeral ceremonies of deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "rules," insert the word "limitations."

Page 1, line 7, after the word "marines," insert the following: "and for other post ceremonial purposes and uses; and to sell to such posts blank ammunition in suitable amounts for said rifles at cost price, plus cost of packing and transportation."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the words "American Legion," insert "and to all other organizations of former or discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines of the United States Army and Navy."

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman let me ask him a question?

Mr. KAHN. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Is this for organizations now in existence or hereafter to be organized? The reason I ask the question is that I see in this age of unrest that hereafter organizations may be formed and equipped and might not be armed and equipped solely for patriotic purposes.

Mr. KAHN. They must be discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines. And there is also the fact that there is only a small number of rifles.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this is a very important matter, and I make a point that no quorum is present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point that no quorum is present, and the Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-one Members present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Esch	Lea, Calif.	Rogers
Anthony	Evans, Mont.	Lehlbach	Rouse
Ashbrook	Fields	Lesher	Rowan
Babka	Flood	Linthicum	Rucker
Bacharach	Fordney	Little	Sabath
Barkley	Frear	Luce	Sanders, N. Y.
Begg	Fuller, Mass.	McArthur	Saunders, Va.
Bell	Gallivan	McClintic	Scott
Benson	Gandy	McCulloch	Scully
Black	Ganly	McKenzie	Sells
Blackmon	Gard	McKeown	Shreve
Boies	Garland	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Siegel
Booher	Garner	Magee	Sinclair
Britten	Godwin, N. C.	Maher	Sisson
Brooks, Ill.	Goldfogle	Major	Slemp
Browne	Goodall	Mann, Ill.	Small
Browning	Goodwin, Ark.	Mason	Smith, Ill.
Brumbaugh	Goodykoontz	Mays	Smith, N. Y.
Burke	Gould	Minahan, N. J.	Snell
Byrnes, S. C.	Graham, Pa.	Mondell	Snyder
Byrns, Tenn.	Graham, Ill.	Montague	Stedman
Caldwell	Griest	Mooney	Stephens, Miss.
Campbell, Pa.	Griffin	Moore, Pa.	Sullivan
Cantrill	Hamill	Moore, Va.	Summers, Wash.
Carew	Hamilton	Moores, Ind.	Swope
Carter	Hardy, Tex.	Morin	Tague
Casey	Haugen	Nelson, Wis.	Taylor, Ark.
Clark, Fla.	Hays	Newton, Minn.	Temple
Classon	Heflin	Newton, Mo.	Thomas
Cleary	Hicks	Nicholls, S. C.	Thompson
Cole	Hill	Nichols, Mich.	Tincher
Connally	Hulings	Ogden	Treadway
Copley	Hutchinson	Olney	Upshaw
Costello	Ireland	Padgett	Vare
Dale	James	Paige	Venable
Dallinger	Jefferis	Pell	Vinson
Davey	Johnson, Ky.	Peters	Voigt
Davis, Minn.	Johnson, S. Dak.	Phelan	Volstead
Dempsey	Johnston, N. Y.	Porter	Webb
Dewalt	Jones, Pa.	Pou	Wheeler
Dickinson, Iowa	Kearns	Radcliffe	Wilson, Pa.
Dominick	Kelley, Mich.	Rainey, H. T.	Winslow
Donovan	Kendall	Rainey, J. W.	Wise
Dooling	Kennedy, Iowa	Ramsey	Woods, Va.
Doremus	Kennedy, R. I.	Reber	Woodyard
Drane	Kiess	Reed, N. Y.	Wright
Eagan	Kincheloe	Riddick	Yates
Eagle	Kreider	Riordan
Edmonds	LaGuardia	Robsion, Ky.
Emerson	Langley	Rodenberg

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 9112, and finding itself without a quorum, he caused the roll to be called, when 235 Members answered to their names, a quorum, and he handed in a list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its sitting.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment by inserting the words "or honorably discharged" before the word "soldiers."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to modify his amendment in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the words "American Legion" insert "and to all other organizations of former or honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, or marines of the United States Army and Navy."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. I want to make this suggestion to the membership of the House. The American Legion is gradually absorbing in its membership the soldiers of the World War, just as the Grand Army of the Republic absorbed in one organization the soldiers of the Federal Army and the United Confederate Veterans absorbed in one organization the soldiers of the Confederate Army. If the gentleman wants to write his amendment so that the soldiers of the Federal Army shall be entitled to the use of rifles, I have no objection; but I submit to the House that it is dangerous at this time to deliver into the hands of men, even though they are honorably discharged soldiers, rifles for use in such organizations as they might hereafter form. The bill as drawn by the Committee on Military Affairs includes only the American Legion. I am perfectly willing to leave it with the American Legion and its subordinate organizations, because I know the American Legion will control its subordinate organizations and there will be no trouble hereafter.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Would it not likewise be well for these other organizations, as they come up from time to time, to make similar requests to Congress, just as the American Legion did?

Mr. BEE. I accept the suggestion. We ought not to permit discharged soldiers, even though they are soldiers of the World War, outside of the American Legion, to have the right to have the Government issue guns and rifles to them in troublous times like these.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEE. Yes.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Does the gentleman not know that these other soldiers, particularly the Private Soldiers' and Sailors' Legion, have sent representatives to various Members of Congress and asked that they be included in any such measure? They have already asked for it.

Mr. BEE. I would be very glad, I will say to the gentleman from Alabama, to let the Committee on Military Affairs bring in a bill covering these private soldiers' associations.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Why should it be in a separate bill?

Mr. BEE. Because under the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio it would not include the private soldiers' organization he is talking about, of which I am not afraid, but it would include classes in this country to whom it might be dangerous for our peace and safety to have guns turned over. It ought not to be necessary for me to say any more. I hope the amendment of the gentleman will be rejected and the bill passed as originally introduced, and subsequent legislation introduced for the benefit of these branch organizations, if such there be.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. HUDDLESTON) there were—ayes 16, noes 119.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

AID FOR HOMES FOR THE SUPPORT OF DISABLED SOLDIERS AND SAILORS OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill H. R. 1216.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California calls up the bill which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1216) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States," approved August 27, 1888, as amended March 2, 1889.

Be it enacted, etc., That all States or Territories which have established, or which shall hereafter establish, State homes for disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States who served in the War of the Rebellion or in any previous or subsequent war who are disabled by age, disease, or otherwise, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning a living, provided such disability was not incurred in service against the United States, shall be paid for every such disabled soldier or sailor who may be admitted and cared for in such home at the rate of $120 per annum.

The number of such persons for whose care any State or Territory shall receive the said payment under this act shall be ascertained by the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers under such regulations as it may prescribe, but the said State or Territorial homes shall be exclusively under the control of the respective State or Territorial authorities, and the board of managers shall not have nor assume any management or control of said State or Territorial homes.

The board of managers of the national home shall, however, have power to have the said State or Territorial homes inspected at such times as it may consider necessary, and shall report the result of such inspections to Congress in its annual report: Provided, That no State shall be paid a sum exceeding one-half the cost of maintenance of each soldier or sailor by such State: Provided further, That one-half of any sum or sums retained by State homes on account of pensions received from inmates shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for. That no money shall be apportioned to any State or Territorial home that maintains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold: Provided further, That for any sum or sums collected in any manner from inmates of such State or Territorial homes to be used for the support of said homes a like amount shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for, but this proviso shall not apply to any State or Territorial home into which the wives or widows of soldiers are admitted and maintained.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD], who will explain the bill.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this bill, and its only purpose, is to increase from $100 to $120 the amount contributed by the Federal Government for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors who are inmates of hospitals supported by the States. And the increase is made necessary by the high prices of the present time.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANFORD. The bill does not change the existing law in any particular, and the only change in the law suggested is the increase from $100 to $120. I think it is not necessary here to make any explanation whatever of the reason for increase other than to say that it is on account of the high prices. Now, if there is any criticism to be made of the amount inserted by the committee it would be because it was not sufficient, but it is the amount asked for. I desire to give notice that at the proper time I shall offer an amendment which will go only to correct the form of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANFORD. Very gladly.

Mr. CANNON. As I understand it, the State homes are in part maintained by State appropriations?

Mr. SANFORD. That is so.

Mr. CANNON. And it is supposed that the Government of the United States in the law enacted in paying $100 for each soldier was paying substantially half of the maintenance?

Mr. SANFORD. The provision of the law specifies that the Federal Government must not pay more than one-half.

Mr. CANNON. Not more than one-half, and not more than $100.

Mr. SANFORD. Yes; but the State must contribute at least as much as that.

Mr. CANNON. But the price has increased both to the State and to the Government?

Mr. SANFORD. Exactly.

Mr. CANNON. That is to say, if they are cared for at all; and this is to make up for the support of soldiers and sailors entitled to admission an amount substantially equal to what the States respectively contribute?

Mr. SANFORD. Exactly.

Mr. CANNON. That is the only change?

Mr. SANFORD. No provision of law is changed at all, except the figures from $100 to $120.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all States or Territories which have established, or which shall hereafter establish, State homes for disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States who served in the War of the Rebellion or in any previous or subsequent war who are disabled by age, disease, or otherwise, and by reason of such disability are incapable of earning a living, provided such disability was not incurred in service against the United States, shall be paid for every such disabled soldier or sailor who may be admitted and cared for in such home at the rate of $120 per annum.

The number of such persons for whose care any State or Territory shall receive the said payment under this act shall be ascertained by the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers under such regulations as it may prescribe, but the said State or Territorial homes shall be exclusively under the control of the respective State or Territorial authorities, and the board of managers shall not have nor assume any management or control of said State or Territorial homes.

The board of managers of the national home shall, however, have power to have the said State or Territorial homes inspected at such times as it may consider necessary, and shall report the result of such inspections to Congress in its annual report: Provided, That no State shall be paid a sum exceeding one-half the cost of maintenance of each soldier or sailor by such State: Provided further, That one-half of any sum or sums retained by State homes on account of pensions received from inmates shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for. That no money shall be apportioned to any State or Territorial home that maintains a bar or canteen where intoxicating liquors are sold: Provided further, That for any sum or sums collected in any manner from inmates of such State or Territorial homes to be used for the support of said homes a like amount shall be deducted from the aid herein provided for, but this provision shall not apply to any State or Territorial home into which the wives or widows of soldiers are admitted and maintained.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, at the end of line 2, insert the following: "That section 1 of an act entitled 'An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States,' approved August 27, 1888, as amended March 2, 1889, is hereby amended to read as follows:"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SANFORD].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KAHN: Page 1, line 6, strike out "War of the Rebellion" and insert "Civil War."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the several bills back to the House, three with amendments and one without amendment, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bills do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration four bills reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, and he had been directed to report to the House three of the bills, namely, H. R. 8314, H. R. 9112, H. R. 1216, with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bills as amended do pass, and to report the bill H. R. 2980, without amendment, with the recommendation that the bill do pass.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8314) to provide for the training of officers of the Army in aeronautic engineering and the issue of equipment and materials therefor.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2980) to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9112) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan Army rifles to posts of the American Legion.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1216) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States," approved August 27, 1888, as amended March 2, 1889.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on either of the amendments? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KAHN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PRESENTATION TO GEN. PERSHING.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that House joint resolution 202 be stricken from the calendar and laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, we ought to know what the resolution is.

Mr. KAHN. It is a resolution providing for the thanks of Congress to Gen. Pershing and presenting him with a sword.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9205) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 8272. An act to restore Harry Graham, captain of Infantry, to his former position on lineal list of captains of Infantry; and

H. R. 9697. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across Pearl River between Pearl River County, Miss., and Washington Parish, La.

The message also announced that the Senate had proceeded, in pursuance of the Constitution, to reconsider the bill (H. R. 6810) to prohibit intoxicating beverages and to regulate the manufacture, production, use, and sale of high-proof spirits for other than beverage purposes and to insure an ample supply of alcohol and promote its use in scientific research and in the development of fuel, dye, and other lawful industries, returned to the House of Representatives by the President of the United States with his objections, and sent by the House of Representatives to the Senate with the message of the President returning the bill: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the bill do pass, two-thirds of the Senate agreeing to pass the same.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8272. An act to restore Harry Graham, captain of Infantry, to his former position on lineal list of captains of Infantry.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bills:

H. R. 8272. An act to restore Harry Graham, captain of Infantry, to his former position on lineal list of captains of Infantry; and

H. R. 9782. An act to regulate further the entry of aliens into the United States.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SHERWOOD, indefinitely, on account of important business;

To Mr. EVANS of Nebraska, on November 1 and November 3, on account of important business;

To Mr. FAIRFIELD, on Thursday and Friday of next week; and

To Mr. MASON, at the request of Mr. JUUL, on account of serious illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, October 30, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. KAHN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2676) to amend section 56 of an act entitled "An act for making further and more effectual provisions for the national defense, and for other purposes," approved June 3, 1916, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 428), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 484) to provide for the erection of a Federal office building on the site acquired for the Subtreasury in St. Louis, Mo., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 429), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3506) granting a pension to Fred F. Bennett; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 5101) granting an increase of pension to Raymond E. Fisher; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 10252) to provide for the assistance of civilian aviators in distress by authorizing the Secretary of War to sell at cost price at aviation posts or stations gasoline, oil, and aircraft supplies to persons in charge of civilian aircraft landing upon or near said posts; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10253) authorizing the War Department to restore the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Park to its condition prior to use for military purposes during the War with Germany, and to appropriate the necessary funds therefor; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10254) providing for allowances for the expenses of interment and the preparation and transportation of the remains of officers and enlisted men of the reserve forces of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McKEOWN: A bill (H. R. 10255) to prohibit owners or lessees of apartment houses in the District of Columbia from discriminating against families with children in the renting of apartments; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. SNYDER: A bill (H. R. 10256) to create a railroad wages and supplies board, to decide controversies between common carriers subject to the act to regulate commerce and their employees, and between corporations, firms, partnerships, or individuals engaged in furnishing such common carriers with materials and supplies, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ZIHLMAN: A bill (H. R. 10257) to provide increased compensation for employees of the government of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WATSON of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 10258) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the city of Petersburg and to the counties of Prince Edward, Lunenburg, Surry, Nottoway, and Sussex, all in the State of Virginia, each a German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAPES (by request): A bill (H. R. 10259) to amend the act entitled "An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1913; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 10260) to authorize the opening of a minor street from Georgia Avenue to Ninth Street NW., through squares 2875 and 2877, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. CRAGO: A bill (H. R. 10261) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan Army rifles to posts of the Grand Army of the Republic, the United Spanish War Veterans, and veterans of foreign wars; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Resolution (H. Res. 365) requesting the Secretary of Labor to report to the House of Representatives the number of arrests on deportation warrants; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AYRES: A bill (H. R. 10262) granting a pension to John W. Steele; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BENHAM: A bill (H. R. 10263) granting an increase of pension to Aaron S. Davis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10264) granting a pension to Christopher Rohrscheid; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 10265) granting a pension to Charles P. Kibler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COADY: A bill (H. R. 10266) for the relief of Mary J. Lacey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ELSTON: A bill (H. R. 10267) granting a pension to John E. Markley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILLETT: A bill (H. R. 10268) granting a pension to Elizabeth C. Pease; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 10269) to compensate the owners of the barge McIlvaine No. 1 for damages and expense in repairing the said barge and to make an appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. JACOWAY: A bill (H. R. 10270) for the relief of Walter I. Whitty; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 10271) for the relief of Lieut. Evern Jones; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 10272) for the relief of dependents of Lieuts. Jean Jagou and Fernand Herbert, French military mission to the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KRAUS: A bill (H. R. 10273) for the relief of Henry Endsley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10274) granting a pension to Henry Endsley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. McDUFFIE: A bill (H. R. 10275) granting a pension to William Holt; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McKENZIE: A bill (H. R. 10276) granting an increase of pension to William M. Williamson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 10277) granting a pension to Sarah E. Ruark; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 10278) granting a pension to Mary Stratton; to the Committee on Invaid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 10279) granting a pension to John Willoughby; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10280) for the relief of the heirs of H. W. Crew; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10281) granting a pension to Phair Wallace; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10282) granting a pension to Daniel Burkett; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WASON: A bill (H. R. 10283) granting a pension to Emily V. Wellman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WELTY: A bill (H. R. 10284) granting an increase of pension to Milton Hurley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of a citizen of Welchburg, Ky., with accompanying papers, signed "Cyrus the Prophet"; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition of Stanislaus County Board of Trade, urging a tariff on foreign-grown beans; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Women's Council of Sacramento, Calif.; Stanislaus County Board of Trade; Orestimba Parlor, No. 247, Native Sons of the Golden West, of Crows Landing, Calif., all opposing legislation which would encourage or increase oriental immigration to this country; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. BOWERS: Petition of discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines of Jefferson County, W. Va., for one year's pay; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CULLEN: Petition of sundry citizens, favoring six months' pay for soldiers and sailors who served in the great world conflict; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CURRY of California: Resolutions of the Women's Council of Sacramento, Calif., favoring the abrogation of the gentlemen's agreement between the United States and Japan regarding immigration and also favoring the enactment of legislation prohibiting oriental immigration; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. ELSTON: Petition of Washington Parlor No. 69, Native Sons of the Golden West, Centerville, urging measures to restrict Japanese immigration and land colonization; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. ESCH: Petition of Hamilton County League of Building Associations of Cincinnati, Ohio, for complete census of the "housing" question; to the Committee on the Census.

Also, petition of Cook County Board, Ladies' Auxiliary, Ancient Order of Hibernians, opposing ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FOCHT: Evidence in support of House bill 9987; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence in support of House bills 6184, 8964, and 8676; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa: Petition of Knights of Columbus, protesting against the employment of civilians to take over welfare work in training camps heretofore performed by affiliated welfare organizations; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NOLAN: Petition of Miller & Lux (Inc.) and 12 other firms in San Francisco, Calif., protesting against House bill 8315; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of Cook County Board, Ladies' Auxiliary, Ancient Order of Hibernians, protesting against the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty; to the Committtee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of American Association for Labor Legislation, urging passage of House bill 3149; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Also, petition of Henry Hoyns, of Brooklyn, N. Y., regarding the proposed railroad legislation; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of C. D. Huyler, of New York, for support of Senate bill 3011; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of L. J. George, of New York, opposing Plumb plan of railroad control; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Joint Conference on Retirement of Civil Service Employees of the United States, Washington, D. C., for expression of views on House bill 3149; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Also, petition of Hamilton County League of Building Associations, urging complete census of the "housing" question; to the Committee on the Census.

By Mr. RAKER: Petition of Miller & Lux (Inc.), Makins Produce Co., and L. Dinkelspiel Co., all of San Francisco, Calif., protesting against House bill 8315; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Philadelphia Branch of the Ukrainian National Committee of the United States on the subject of Ukrainian independence; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, letter from the Illinois Manufacturers' Association, of Chicago, Ill., protesting against House bill 8572; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, letter from Langley & Michaels Co., of San Francisco, Calif., urging support of the bill placing a tariff on foreign-grown beans; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, telegram from Harris Weinstock, State market director of California, urging support of the bill placing a protective tariff on foreign-grown beans; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ROWAN: Petition of C. D. Huyler, of New York, favoring the passage of Senate bill 3011; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of John B. Andrews, of New York City, favoring the passage of House bill 3149; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Also, petition of Farmers' National Council, favoring Government control of railroads for two years or during the reconstruction, and holding freight rates where they are; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Signet Shoe Co., of New York, protesting against the passage of the Plumb plan for railroad control; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of Vallejo Metal Trades Council, favoring the passage of House bill 7014; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, October 30, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we invoke Thy divine blessing upon the deliberations of the Senate this day. We thank Thee for a Nation founded upon prayer, and we bless Thee for the constant access that we have to the throne of grace. We remember that we are taught in Thy Word that the nation that forgets God shall be cast into hell and that Thy promise is given to those who seek the kingdom of God and His righteousness first. We pray Thee to-day to help us to cling with the fidelity and the passion of our fathers to the God of our fathers. Let Thy guidance be with us. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Wednesday, October 22, 1919, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9205) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 1216. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States," approved August 27, 1888, as amended March 2, 1889;

H. R. 2980. An act to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States;

H. R. 7752. An act relating to detached service of officers of the Regular Army; and

H. R. 8314. An act to provide for the training of officers of the Army in aeronautic engineering and the issue of equipment and materials therefor.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

H. R. 1216. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to provide aid to State or Territorial homes for the support of disabled soldiers and sailors of the United States," approved August 27, 1888, as amended March 2, 1889;

H. R. 2980. An act to increase the efficiency of the Military Establishment of the United States;

H. R. 7752. An act relating to detached service of officers of the Regular Army; and

H. R. 8314. An act to provide for the training of officers of the Army in aeronautic engineering and the issue of equipment and materials therefor.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STERLING presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Freeman, S. Dak., remonstrating against universal military training, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CURTIS presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Stafford, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Siegel bill, requiring licenses of all persons engaged in the business of buying and selling, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 293, International Association of Machinists, of Parsons, Kans., praying for the adoption of the so-called Plumb plan for the control and operation of railroads, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Girard, Liberal, and Willowdale, all in the State of Kansas, remonstrating against compulsory military training, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a memorial of Chief Lodge, No. 87, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen of America, of Horton, Kans., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called Cummins bill, providing for private ownership and control of railroads, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of Livermore Circle, No. 66, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Beloit, Kans., praying for an increase in the pensions of veterans of the Civil War, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition of Local Branch No. 1, National Association of United States Civil Service Employees at Navy Yards and Stations, of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for a 40 per cent increase in salaries of all clerical employees in the Naval Establishment, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of the congregation of the Congregational Church of Somersville, Conn., praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Common Council of Bridgeport, Conn., praying for the retention of Fiume as an Italian possession, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of Hill Church, of Woodstock, Conn., praying that the United States aid Armenia in obtaining its independence, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. KNOX presented a petition of Post No. 15, American Legion, of Waynesboro, Pa., praying for the granting of an additional bonus of $400 to all honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented a petition of Local Division No. 583, Order of Railway Conductors, of Allentown, Pa., praying for an investigation into the production, distribution, and cost of coal with a view to establishing increased production, more equitable distribution, and the elimination of exorbitant profits, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented memorials of sundry citizens of Pittsburgh, Philadelphia, Latrobe, Mt. Oliver, Allentown, Derry, Bethlehem, Glenshaw, Rochester, Wilkes-Barre, Scranton, Fryburg, and Williamsport, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the establishment of a Department of Education, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of Local Division No. 583, Order of Railway Conductors, of Allentown, Pa., praying for Government ownership of cold-storage plants, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Local Division No. 583, Order of Railway Conductors, of Allentown, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called old-age pension bill, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented memorials of Local Division No. 3, Ancient Order of Hibernians, and of the Robert Emmet Monumental Association, of Sharon, and of the County Board of Mercer County, all in the State of Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the deportation of certain Hindus, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented petitions of the Catholic Women's League of Pittsburgh; of Local Division No. 7, Ancient Order of Hibernians of Greensburg; and of sundry citizens of Charleroi, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the independence of Ireland, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Freeport, Pa., praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Catholic Women's League, of Pittsburgh, Pa., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD two or three extracts from the report of the New England Baptist convention held in New York City last June.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE 1919 STATE OF COUNTRY.

New England Baptist Convention, Forty-fifth Session, Abyssinian Baptist Church, New York City, June 10–16, 1919.

[By Rev. W. B. Reed, D. D., pastor Shiloh Baptist Church, Hartford, Conn.]

"The guns of the mighty have ceased their roaring, their forts are silenced, their navies gone, armies disorganized, and the people waiting for orders. The proud has been brought low, their genius outmatched by righteousness and much boasting turned into a terrible wailing; the captains are unhorsed, generals dispossessed, and the once flaming monarch is turned from his crusade of world power to loathsome quarters in a foreign land. The armies of our allies with untold hardships backed up with a willing sacrifice of the people got the victory, and from pools of mingled blood triumph has been written in history. We, in this, the forty-fifth annual session of our convention, rejoice with the rest of mankind over the victory of our armies and the triumph of a sacred cause. Any cause charged with complete liberties and rights of the weak is sacred. For this cause men sacrificed and died. For this cause the Nation bowed to self-denial and official strictures not known to our generation. The battle has been fought, the victory won. What will the verdict of the statesmen be? Will they twist the verdict of battle? Will they spend months in Paris, living in greatest luxury, debating things for which we never fought? These things have terrible meanings to the 14,000,000 of colored people in these United States of America.

"There is a restlessness everywhere. The human race is moving like the rocking oceans, and no earthly power vest with authority to say peace be still. They talk peace but there is no peace. Why all this world-wide commotion and threatenings? Why do we see such an angry look upon the world, and seemingly one man is not willing to trust the other? Why does one untangling make a double tangling elsewhere? These are pertinent questions and must be wisely answered. It is plainly the cause of uncertain afterwar problems, and distressed prophecies concerning the mushroom league of nations.

"It must be admitted that these causes of unrest have no respect of country, community, home, or person. The natural consequences of the unrest disturb the mind of every citizen. As none were allowed to escape the responsibilities of war, and all must help in carrying the burdens of reconstruction, all should be fairly and equally considered in the weighing of public sentiment. A government of the people can not be supplanted by a government of autocracy without an uprising—no; not even a manufactured league of nations.

HAS A WORLD DEMOCRACY BEEN WON?

"Victory has been won on the battle fields; the defeated enemy has made a most humiliating surrender; the last of our soldiers will soon tread upon home soil with the Nation's acknowledgment of well done. But world or home democracy is not yet.

"In the breaking down of this world democracy we must look to the new Congress to save our national democracy. We find as many frills and high-sounding phrases wrapped around this league of nations as we found about the White House democracy, but wait until it gets a little airing, and it will be found like a cup mentioned in the gospels: 'Clean outside, but within full of extortion.' Will Congress stand firm on our rock of self-determination or will Congress go skating on thin ice? Shall we barter our birthright born of eight years of warfare to restick our necks under foreign yokes? Or shall we remain a free people, maintain our independence, steer clear of entangling alliances with the Old World and at least lay claim to a democracy at home?

"We believe that that wisdom in Congress that has made our country great, rich, and powerful, will guide the Nation aright in this hour of test and trial. Though theorists may fail in preachments of world democracy, trained and patriotic statesmen will practice at home what they teach abroad, for charity begins at home."

Mr. CALDER. Mr. President, the North American Review for November contains an article by that eminent statesman and diplomat, Hon. David Jayne Hill, entitled "The President's Attack on the Senate." It portrays the events from the date of the President's address to Congress setting forth his terms of peace down to this very hour with such accuracy that I am impelled to request the consent of the Senate that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S ATTACK ON THE SENATE.

[By David Jayne Hill.]

"A year has passed since Germany, abandoned by her allies, beaten and broken, sued for an armistice, in the hope of negotiating peace on terms which had been proposed by the President of the United States.

"Strict compliance with those terms, if construed as Germany expected them to be construed, would have admitted her to the peace conference after the Kaiser's abdication as a negotiator in her own right, and entitled to equal membership in 'a general association of nations' to be formed for the purpose of affording to her, as to other States, 'mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity.'

"In the United States there arose a loud protest against treating Germany, even under a democratic disguise, as a power entitled to negotiate peace upon equal terms with those she had attacked. It was believed, and it has since been established beyond the possibility of doubt, that Germany sought peace only because she was incapable of further military action; that the armistice should be granted only after unconditional surrender; and that a severe punitive peace should be imposed upon a nation that had broken its solemn pledges, assaulted its neighbors without provocation, and violated ruthlessly the laws of war.

"While accepting the President's 14 rubrics of peace as a nominal but essentially indefinite basis of peace making, the Entente Allies, believing that the military situation should be more controlling than any theory of peace, drew the terms of the armistice in a manner that compelled the German forces to confess the military impotence to which they had been reduced. To all who were familiar with the European situation it was at once evident that the definitive formulation of the terms of peace at Paris would proceed upon the basis of fact evidenced by the armistice, and not at all in conformity with the President's plan of a peace without victory embodied in the 14 points.

"The President himself, although but vaguely aware of the obstacles to be overcome in evolving out of the situation a peaceful Europe, was convinced that nothing short of American participation in the peace settlement could maintain the authority of the 14 points. Given the part the United States had taken, under the spontaneous inspiration of the people, in bringing the war to a successful termination, and the importance to the Entente Allies of continued American aid, he believed that if he could centralize in his own hands the whole force and influence of America he could practically dictate the process of peace making at Paris and thus be able to direct the future of Europe and of the world.

"That the action the President had in view was, to his mind, in the interest of permanent peace, no fair-minded man, I believe, can reasonably doubt. He was, it may be conceded, actuated by a desire to achieve what he considered an incalculable human benefit. But in the execution of his purpose he trusted neither Europe nor America. His obsession was that he, and he only, could accomplish the result. It was not to be obtained by argument, by discussion, or by any other means than action. He alone could bring to bear the motives and exert the influence which would constrain the otherwise refractory powers to accept conditions which would achieve universal and perpetual peace. The pacific aspirations of the liberated peoples, the methods of democracy, and the lessons of the war were not, he thought, of themselves to be counted on to produce the desired result. No general discussion would be profitable. No public exchange of views was necessary. Only one course was practicable. This was for him personally to go to Europe and personally to control the negotiations. To accomplish this it was, however, important that he should be in a position to claim complete and undivided authority, in the name of the United States, to grant or to withhold whatever concession, aid, or influence might be found necessary to induce compliance with his proposals. This monopoly of power, he believed, he would not possess unless the constitutional provisions for treaty making were rendered inapplicable by his control of his partner, the Senate, in the treaty-making process. If it could be made apparent that he, as President, alone represented the united will and resources of the American people; if a Congress could be elected composed of persons belonging to his own political party and controlled by him, then it would be understood in Europe and would have to be admitted at home that the President, singly and alone, possessed a mandate to express the will of the American people and to act without restriction on their behalf.

"What I wish at this point to emphasize is that, while claiming to repudiate the methods of the old diplomacy—that is, of pressure and bargaining—it was upon precisely this procedure that the President meant to rely. The Entente Allies, who had with American assistance completely vanquished Germany, were to surrender a part of their victory in the interest of future peace. A reformed and democratized Germany was to be received in good faith, after certain renunciations, into the general association of nations, and the Entente Allies were to make in their turn certain renunciations as the basis of peace and good understanding; such, for example, as the surrender of Great Britain's claim to maritime supremacy, which the President thought was a contradiction of the 'freedom of the seas,' and the inclusion of Germany in the league for mutual protection, which, however offensive to France after the treatment she had received from Germany, would secure to her the protection of the league.

"It was, of course, understood by the President that the Entente Allies would not be inclined to make these renunciations voluntarily; and that, in order to secure them, strong pressure must be exerted. This could be done only in case the influence of America were brought to bear upon them in such a manner as to make it clear that her continued support could not be expected unless these renunciations were conceded. In brief, the United States, the President thought, by exerting its influence as the holder of the balance of power, could produce a situation in Europe which would control the decisions of all the nations, and thus enable peace to be organized upon a permanent basis.

"The theory was superficially plausible. The victors in the war, without America's support, were at the time of the armistice little better off than the vanquished. The opportunity for control seemed great. History did not record an occasion for diplomacy more attractive to a lover of power, who could so readily answer every suggestion of personal ambition by pointing to the glorious ideal of peace. No nation could resist the force of such an appeal. If governments opposed it, then it would be the end of governments. A new order would take their place, as it had already done in Russia.

"The chance for exercising the preponderant influence of the United States in forcing compliance with the 14 points was imperiled by the possibility of Germany's unconditional surrender. If that happened, the victory of the Entente Allies would be so complete that no compromise would be possible. The victors would themselves in that case dictate a punitive peace, and the occasion for enforcing upon them any plan by diplomatic pressure would have passed.

"The negotiations for an armistice, therefore, presented a delicate situation. In the United States there was a strong demand for unconditional surrender, but the President did not desire that. On October 23, 1918, he had succeeded in preventing it. On that day the Secretary of State addressed the following note to a defeated Germany:

"Having received the solemn and explicit assurance of the German Government that it unreservedly accepts the terms of peace laid down in his address to the Congress of the United States on the 8th of January, 1918, and the principles of settlement enunciated in his subsequent addresses, particularly the address of the 27th of September, and that it desires to discuss the details of their application and that this wish and purpose emanate not from those who have hitherto dictated German policy and conducted the present war on Germany's behalf, but from ministers who speak for the majority of the Reichstag and for an overwhelming majority of the German people; * * * the President of the United States feels that he can not decline to take up with the Governments with which the Government of the United States is associated the question of an armistice.

"Before the proposal of an armistice had been formally submitted to the Entente the President's 14 rubrics of peace had been thus accepted by Germany. They were the pivot upon which the question of an armistice had been made to turn. Whatever the terms of the armistice itself, even though involving an absolute surrender, there was thus imposed one condition that affected the process of negotiating peace—the President's influence in the peace conference, as interpreter of his proposals, had been secured. It was only a question of a little time when the great diplomatic opportunity would be ripe, and immediate preparation to utilize it was undertaken.

"The near approach of a congressional election gave the President an opportunity to inquire of the people whether or not they wished to give him carte blanche at the coming peace conference. A fair way to ascertain their disposition in this regard would have been to propose some policy in definite terms and to ask the electors to vote upon it on the 5th of November. But the President did not desire an expression of the people's will regarding a league of nations or any other particular policy. What he desired was that he should ostensibly be authorized to act in any way he might deem fit, without responsibility to anyone, and especially without being obliged to subject his personal plans to the advice and consent of a Senate which he could not as a party leader confidently control. Two days after the question of an armistice was virtually settled, therefore, the President took the unprecedented step of issuing the following 'appeal to the electorate for political support':

"If you have approved of my leadership and wish me to continue to be your unembarrassed spokesman in affairs at home and abroad, I earnestly beg that you will express yourselves unmistakably to that effect by returning a Democratic majority to both the Senate and the House of Representatives. I am your servant, and will accept your judgment without cavil, but my power to administer the great trust assigned me by the Constitution would be seriously impaired should your judgment be adverse, and I must frankly tell you so because so many critical issues depend upon your verdict. No scruple of taste must in grim times like these stand in the way of speaking the plain truth.

"By large majorities the electors of the United States gave their answer. If being an 'unembarrassed spokesman' depended upon this response, the President's aspiration for unlimited control of 'affairs at home and abroad' was denied by the election of a Republican majority in both Houses of Congress. Without impairing in the slightest degree his power to administer the great trust assigned to him by the Constitution, the voters openly and emphatically refused to grant him the extraconstitutional power he had demanded, and in effect impressively reminded him that a strict fulfillment of his duty to observe the requirements of the Constitution was what they desired and expected of him. For the purposes of prosecuting the war both parties had supported him loyally. The opposition party, though constantly reproached because it was not 'proadministration,' had united in giving him grants of power unprecedented in our history, and, in fact, exceeding those accorded to the head of any other Government engaged in the war. They had made the President almost a dictator.

"How fully he realized his dictatorship was evidenced by the startling self-confidence with which the President stated the issue.

"The return of a Republican majority to either House of Congress would, moreover—be interpretative on the other side of the water as a repudiation of my leadership. It is well understood there as well as here that Republican leaders desire not so much to support the President as to control him. * * * They would find it very difficult to believe that the voters of the United States had chosen to support their President by electing to the Congress a majority controlled by those who are not, in fact, in sympathy with the attitude and action of the administration.

"He declared—

"Having decided to demand this test, it was reasonable to suppose that the President meant to abide by it. But he did not do so, either before or after the election. Before the election he endeavored personally to influence the result by preventing the choice of Senators whom he feared he could not control, even though they were Democrats, and by urging the choice of others—statesmen of the type of Henry Ford, for example—whom he believed he could control, although they were nominally Republicans; and after the election he assumed that, all the same, he was still an 'unembarrassed spokesman,' although, by his own test, his leadership had been plainly repudiated. The whole world then knew with what it had to deal. In England, where statesmanship is largely governed by the rules of honorable sport, every sportsman understood that the rules of the game were of small importance to Mr. Wilson, and that if he could not really win he would not be averse to maintaining that he had not actually lost. Whatever happened, he could be satisfied, so long as any chance was left open to make it appear that he had somehow won. From that moment the course to be pursued at Paris by Great Britain became clear. The 'constitution of the league of nations' would be written by Gen. Smuts, and the President of the United States would accept it as what he came to Europe to obtain.

"One other matter also was made clear. Mr. Wilson did not really believe in democracy. When it served him he approved of it, but when it denied him what he wanted he tried to outwit it. In temperament he was an imperialist. He wanted to enforce peace upon his own terms. He should be shown that peace could not be enforced without the sea power of Great Britain. If this supremacy was incidentally employed to promote the special interests of the British Empire, that did not diminish its value as a means to enforce peace. Democracy, alone and unaided, seldom enforced anything, and it was only an imperialized democracy that could enforce its will. Trading with Mr. Wilson would, therefore, be easy. America had not authorized him to issue any ultimatum. He would undoubtedly take what he could get; and it was forthwith resolved that Great Britain would give up nothing and forego nothing that implied a limitation of her imperial policies.

"That the President openly repudiated democracy when he declined to accept the result of the test to which he had in a moment of arrogance unwisely subjected himself was well understood by all who at the time reflected upon his action, and to many it occasioned no surprise. He had, in fact, ceased to be a democrat. He had more than once shown his contempt for that 'common counsel' which in his first electoral campaign he had emphasized as democracy's preeminent attribute. He had become a convert to the idea of the omnipotent administrative State and the uncontrolled predominance of its head. In combating the Kaiser the President had been permitted to exercise powers which the German Emperor had never even claimed. This had been necessary, because a war lord, to be successful, must possess all the war powers; and these had been freely conferred upon him. Suddenly he found himself face to face with the problems of peace, but failed to remember that democracy has no place for a peace lord.

"Not being able to obtain the control of Congress, which he had demanded, he resolved simply to ignore the Senate, which it was his constitutional duty to consider as a partner in the process of treaty making. The method of exhibiting this disregard he had long before worked out—the only writer, I believe, who had distinctly envisaged as possible a deliberate disregard of constitutional duty, which he had suggested might be evaded even when an obligation to perform it could not be denied.

"The passages in the President's Congressional Government here referred to have been frequently cited, but all their implications have not, I think, been fully realized. His comments are as follows:

> "The greatest consultative privilege of the Senate—the greatest in dignity, at least, if not in effect, upon the interests of the country—is its right to a ruling voice in the ratification of treaties with foreign powers. * * *
>
> "The President really has no voice at all in the conclusions of the Senate with reference to his diplomatic transactions, or with reference to any of the matters upon which he consults it. * * *
>
> "He is made to approach that body as a servant conferring with his master, and, of course, deferring to that master. His only power of compelling compliance on the part of the Senate lies in his initiative in negotiation, which affords him a chance to get the country into such scrapes, so pledged in the view of the world to certain courses of action, that the Senate hesitates to bring about the appearance of dishonor which would follow its refusal to ratify the rash promises or to support the indiscreet threats of the Department of State.

"The last paragraph of this citation speaks for itself. Although constitutionally bound, it declares, under his oath of office, to respect the prerogative of the Senate in offering its advice and withholding its consent in the making of treaties, the President may, nevertheless, 'compel compliance' with his own views and engagements 'by getting the country into such scrapes,' or 'so pledged in the view of the world' that the Senate would hesitate to bring about an appearance of dishonor by refusing to approve of the action of the Executive.

"Did the President deliberately resort to this method when, in December, 1918, he went to Europe to form a league of nations?

"If he had intended to pledge the country, in the view of the world, to certain courses of action which the Senate would hesitate either to ratify or to oppose, he could not have pursued a course better adapted to produce this effect than the one he adopted. Neither the Senate nor, so far as is known, the President's own Cabinet knew precisely what he intended to do. There are those who contend that he did not know himself. The one thing certain is that he did not intend to seek any advice from the Senate, either by previous conference regarding the difficult problems of the peace settlement, or through the presence at Paris of one of its Members in the peace commission. Having opposed the selection of Senators by the free will of the electorate in order that he might be an 'unembarrassed spokesman in affairs at home and abroad,' the President announced to the Congress in his parting message of December 2, 1918:

> "I welcome this occasion to announce my purpose to join in Paris the representatives of the Governments with which we have been associated in the war against the Central Empires for the purpose of discussing with them the main features of the treaty of peace. I realize the great inconvenience that will attend my leaving the country, particularly at this time, but the conclusion that it was my paramount duty to go has been forced upon me by considerations which I hope will seem as conclusive to you as they have seemed to me. The Allied Governments have accepted the bases of peace which I outlined to the Congress on the 8th of January last, as the Central Empires also have, and very reasonably desire my personal counsel in their interpretation and application, and it is highly desirable that I should give it in order that the sincere desire of our Government to contribute without selfish purpose of any kind to settlements that will be of common benefit to all the nations concerned may be made fully manifest.

"There was here no request for the Senate's approval either of the purpose of the President to leave the country and personally conduct the negotiations at Paris or of the commissioners selected to accompany him. The cables and the wireless, then just taken over by the Government and under its control, would be available, he said, 'for any counsel or service you may desire of me'; but it was not intimated that they would be available for any advice or suggestions to him on the part of the Senate, no Member of which was invited to join the mission. The President plainly intended to present the Senate with a fait accompli.

"There was much that was unusual in this procedure. The retinue of the mission, it is reported, contained more than thirteen hundred persons, of varied but undefined attainments in history, geography, ethnology, cartography, publicity, finance, and the cryptic arts of suppressing and censoring news, not one of whom enjoyed the honor of having his name sent to the Senate for the confirmation of his appointment, although the aim of the expedition was so momentous a task as the reorganization of the world. Experience in international business, in so far as it was represented, was conspicuously subordinated to inexperience. Radical journalism was conspicuously honored. If 'advisers' were present, it was apparently not for their 'advice' that they were enrolled in this formidable phalanx engaged in the reconstruction of Europe. There was, however, an abundance of atmosphere for the creation and transmission of 'voices in the air.'

"No plenipotentiary of any country had ever been accompanied by such an apparatus for the making of peace. Bound by no instructions, restrained by no power of review, or recognized control at home, the President was, as he assumed, 'acting in his own name and by his own proper authority.' Constitutionally, he had a partner in the solemn process of treaty making, 'by and with' whose 'advice and consent' he was required to act by the same charter of government from which his own proper authority was derived; but this was of little importance to those with whom he was to negotiate, since no one could challenge his representative character.

"The President's most loyal admirers and supporters had questioned not only the wisdom but even the legality of his leaving the country for a considerable period of time, in the midst of the serious domestic problems that were looming up before the country; and great journals devoted to himself and to his policies urged him not to absent himself from Washington at such a critical juncture. It was pointed out that it was of the utmost importance for the President to keep in close touch with the sentiment of the country as the various steps in the process of peacemaking would be brought under discussion and public opinion would take on sharper definition. Friendly attention also was called to the fact that, if 'open covenants' were to be 'openly arrived at,' it would be wise for the American commissioners to receive written instructions in order that they might be held accountable for their conduct; and it was made plain that it would lay the President open to a subsequent charge of practicing secret diplomacy if, without intermediaries or public records as a refutation of such insinuations, he personally should undertake by oral communication with foreign negotiators to consummate transactions involving the give and take of diplomatic bargaining. It should never be possible, it was maintained, that the President's course could thus be made a source of future embarrassment to him or to his country. His aims should be so clear and constant, and so supported by the utmost possible evidence of concurrent approval by his own countrymen qualified to judge of such matters, that the country would present a united front. Happily, the means of avoiding future controversy were well known and already established in the traditional usages and safeguards of American constitutional practice in the conduct of foreign affairs.

"While it was true that the American people were divided as regards their confidence in the President's personal judgment concerning international matters, in which he had so frequently failed to grasp the purport of current events, there was nowhere, I think, a disposition to impede in any manner the making of a speedy and a just peace, and it was universally recognized that responsibility for this would be largely his. The general thought of the Nation was that the time had come to punish Germany for her crimes, to render impossible a repetition of them in the future by immediately destroying militarism, to open thereby a prospect of future peace with justice to all nations, and to get back as soon as possible to normal life under the constitution and the law of nations. If the expression 'league of nations' meant that—and many thought it did—then a league of nations was desired. If it meant new wars, the suppression of self-determination by the small States, the centralization of power in a few great nations, a secret trusteeship of others acting nominally for the general good but in reality for their own aggrandizement and permanent control by internal bargaining; in short, if it meant any form of imperialism, however disguised, and above all if national independence was in any way to be surrendered, these were not the objects for which the war had been fought, and that kind of a league was not desired. Nor was it a common opinion that America's part in the war or responsibility for the future of Europe were of such proportions as to entitle the United States to dictate the terms of peace. The nations that had suffered most should take the lead in determining the kind of future that would give them the best security. The American people were disposed to help them, and above all to be loyal to them, in seeing that the common enemy should not after all be triumphant in the terms of peace or afterwards.

"When, therefore, Mr. Wilson began his visits and speech making in Europe, pleasure was at first experienced in America in witnessing the honor shown to the President of the United States, and in the fact that he was so well received in the allied countries. His speech in response to the greeting of President Poincare, at Paris, on December 14, 1918, was admirable, and expressed with eloquence and propriety the sentiments of the American people. In subsequent addresses high and noble sentiments were expressed, but it was evident to observing minds that these public speeches had the tendency and were apparently designed to weaken the faith of the people in their own past and to suggest a new leadership, which Mr. Wilson himself might supply; and this was rendered still clearer when, after his return to America, he said: 'When I speak of the nations of the world, I do not speak of the governments of the world. I speak of the peoples who constitute the nations of the world. They are in the saddle and they are going to see to it that if their present governments do not do their will some other governments shall. And the secret is out and the present governments know it.'

"The really dangerous character of the influence thus exercised was that Mr. Wilson held out hopes which were not capable of being realized, and represented a state of things that did not exist. The nations were, in fact, very far from that 'communion of ideals,' 'unity of command,' and 'common understanding' which the President attributed to them. What the people really needed was the truth, and not 'visions on the horizon.'

"I do not mean to imply that the President was not sincere in all he said in those speeches. No one can read them without feeling their moral fervor. Therein lay the danger they created. They awakened hope which neither the Governments nor the people themselves were able to fulfill. Europe was nervous, hungry, excited, impoverished, and full of jealousies. Mr. Wilson's gospel was a creed regarding a world to come. It had all the potency for stirring the emotions, and therein concealed all the perils, of a religious revival. Many thought the Messiah had come. But suppose the trading in the temple should go on unhindered! 'The Socialist journalists in France who then hailed him'—as an English writer puts it—'as "he who should have redeemed Israel," are now venting their disappointment in unmeasured language, and speaking of him as "the great vanquished" and "the fallacious hope of a day."'

"On February 14, 1919, the 'constitution of the league of nations' was promulgated at Paris, the work of five great powers sitting in secret as a supreme council. This document was read to the representatives of 14 nations and then published as approved by them. It was praised by Mr. Wilson in the plenary session of the conference, and received in the United States as if it were the President's personal triumph.

"A few words will serve to recall the incidents attending the reception and discussion of this document in the United States. The President had sent word that until his arrival it should not be discussed. On February 24 he landed at Boston and an address by him was announced. Two important facts had by that time been brought to public attention: First, that the conference at Paris had constituted a new corporate entity possessing important powers and organs of power, under the control of five of the greater Governments; and, second, that nothing had so far been done to make peace with Germany or to punish her crimes. The situation required explanation, and the President's address was looked forward to with deep and widespread interest.

"Either, it was thought, he would avail himself of this earliest opportunity to present to the American people a clear exposition of the meaning and purpose of this new 'constitution,' or he would postpone all reference to it until he had conferred with the Senate at Washington. To the surprise of everyone the President took this occasion to express his personal resentment of any criticism of this 'constitution,' declared that he possessed 'fighting blood,' and would consider it an 'indulgence to let it have scope.' He then proceeded to denounce all the critics of the league as wishing to have America 'keep her power for those narrow, selfish, provincial purposes which seem so dear to some minds that have no sweep beyond the nearest horizon.'

"It was perceived at once that the President meant to impose this 'constitution' upon the country, in spite of what the Senate might have to say about it. A conference with the Committee on Foreign Relations occurred at the White House, which brought out the fact of general opposition by the Senate. This 'constitution,' it was declared, was in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, inasmuch as it created a supergovernment, automatically made the peace of the United States contingent upon the acts of other nations bringing into operation certain obligations, which included the war-making power conferred upon Congress, and created a permanent alliance with a group of nations who proposed to control the world in the name of peace.

"It is needless here to enter into the discussion of this subject, which has been amply considered in this Review, or to repeat the terms of opprobrium and contempt, both privately and publicly expressed, applied to the Senators who refused to fall down and worship this image, and were even presuming to call attention to its feet of clay, some of the most contemptuous of these denunciations emanating from the President himself. On March 3 a resolution was signed by 39 Senators, referring to the article of the Constitution which renders necessary to the ratification of a treaty the advice and consent of the Senate. The resolution recalled the fact of the continued session of the conference at Paris before which the proposal of a league of nations was still pending, and alleged it to be the sense of the Senate that, while it is the sincere desire that the nations of the world should unite to promote peace and general disarmament, the 'constitution of the league of nations' in the form proposed by the peace conference should not be accepted by the United States. The resolution further expressed the sense of the Senate that the negotiation of peace terms with Germany should be pressed with the utmost expedition, and that the proposal for a league of nations to insure the permanent peace of the world should then be taken up for careful and serious consideration. On the following day, March 4, in a speech delivered in New York immediately before his return to Paris, the President in reply flung down his challenge in the words:

"When that treaty comes back, gentlemen on this side will find the covenant not only in it but so many threads of the treaty tied to the covenant that you can not dissect the covenant from the treaty without destroying the whole vital structure.

"The attempts to secure certain amendments to the 'constitution of the league of nations,' as presented in February, have been fully discussed in a previous number of this Review. It is well known that they were only partially successful, and neither removed the objections to the original draft nor embodied the internationals' ideals which have long been current in the United States. When, therefore, the final form of the so-called 'covenant' was sent to this country on April 28, the word 'constitution' having been dropped, the 'executive council' having become simply the 'council' and the 'body of delegates' the 'assembly'—superficial changes which were meant to remove or obscure the power of the league as a corporate entity or international voting trust—it was even clearer than before that the design had been to create an instrument of power rather than an institution of justice.

"Although upon the President's return to Paris in March the work of the conference had so far advanced that a provisional treaty of peace with Germany was reported as almost complete, he carried into execution his purpose to interweave the covenant and the treaty of peace in an inextricable manner by making the former the first article of the latter, and the ostensible agent for its enforcement. The covenant, though published separately, was to constitute the first article of the treaty of Versailles. The league of nations, which was to have been a 'general association of nations' or a complete society of States, was thus converted into an alliance between a group of powers established to enforce the treaty of peace. The organ of universal peace and conciliation had become a confessed instrument of undefined punishment.

"Although the treaty of Versailles in its entirety was long withheld from the Senate, the campaign for the adoption of the league of nations went steadily on. No one knew or could discover to what precise obligations the treaty of Versailles and other subsidiary treaties would bind the members of the league. They were, however, to be blindly accepted. When, at last, although it had long been published and on public sale in Europe, a copy could be obtained only privately from financiers in New York, and was thus laid before the Senate, it was ascertained that it was to 'the allied and associated powers,' and not to the league, that Germany made her concessions; yet the league was bound to preserve to the beneficiaries of the treaty all the unknown territorial accessions assigned to them as well as the territorial integrity of all the surviving empires.

"It was a reasonable proposition that the Senate, before giving its advice and consent, should separate the two disparate documents, the covenant of the league of nations and the treaty with Germany. The President and his supporters in the Senate refused to permit this. They demanded the immediate ratification of the whole commitment, without amendment or reservation; or, as the President's supporters insisted, 'without the dotting of an i or the crossing of a t.'

"This demand, considered merely as a partisan attitude, may have been defensible; but the attempt to enforce it by assailing or undermining the constitutional prerogative of the Senate is another matter. Having failed in numerous private conversations and in a public conference to convince a sufficient number of Senators that they should yield to the President's demand, he personally took the field and proceeded to an open, violent, and bitterly vituperative attack upon the Senate as a means of carrying his point.

"In pressing the necessity for immediate peace and the impossibility of reopening any question in the peace conference—although still in session and transacting business—the President was merely bringing to an issue his theory that it lies in the power of the Executive to create a situation so embarrassing to the Senate that it may be forced to surrender its constitutional right and fail in the free performance of its duty.

"This issue should be squarely met, and its far-reaching implications should be made plain. It is, in fact, one of many efforts to break down constitutional government and by direct action to concentrate power in the hands of the Executive.

"In his denunciation of the Senate as a perverse and refractory body, the President has declared that he represents a cause 'greater than the Senate and greater than the Government.' He might with equal consistency and decency say upon another occasion that he represents a cause greater than the law. The cause he is contending for is this particular unmodified league of nations, which is not at all the 'general association' which he commended and desired. This league, he proclaims, is of greater importance than the Government of the United States, which it may, therefore, if this be true, at any time properly subordinate and overrule.

"It is against the reservations which the Senate would offer as a bar to this subordination that the President raises his voice of protest. If these reservations do not really modify the obligations incurred, why should he object to including them in the act of ratification? If, on the contrary, this subordination of American independence might occur without them, how can the Senators honorably ratify the covenant of the league without these reservations? Yet, as a last act of intimidation, in order to force upon the Senate the acceptance of the entire treaty without change, the President has stated that after the Senate has acted it would be entirely in his own hands to issue or withhold the act of ratification, thus intimating that if it did not please him in its final form he could defeat it altogether. The attitude of the President, therefore, is that at no time shall the Senate be permitted freely to perform its constitutional duty, which is equivalent to saying that one man can absolutely determine the future destiny of the United States."

MEAT-PACKING INDUSTRY.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present a resolution passed by the Atlanta Wholesale Grocers' Association, at Atlanta, Ga., October 2, 1919, indorsing the Kenyon-Kendrick bills, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas we realize a constant falling off in our volume of business, especially in the more profitable lines, such as canned vegetables, canned fruit, canned salmon, rice, cereals, and cheese, which decline in volume is due to the competition of the big Chicago meat packers; and

Whereas the competition of these meat packers is only effective because of the special advantages which they enjoy in the way of preferential railway transportation for their private refrigerator cars, which, while containing nonperishable grocery products, are moved more quickly and regularly by the railways than the cars which we can use, and is not based upon economic efficiency; and

Whereas the Kenyon-Kendrick bills now before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry propose to regulate the business of the meat packers to the extent that their private refrigerator cars will be put on a common-carrier basis, thus taking away their special shipping privileges: Now, be it therefore

Resolved, That we indorse the Kenyon-Kendrick bills and urge the quick enactment into law of the principle which they embody.

THE EGYPTIAN QUESTION.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, some days ago, October 15, I introduced a resolution bearing on the treaty of peace with Germany. I ask to have inserted in the RECORD a memorandum of a letter from King George to the Sultan of Egypt, which I will not take the time to read, together with a cablegram to Mahmoud Pasha from Mahmoud Soliman Pasha, which I shall not take the time to read, bearing upon the same question, together with some data submitted by the Egyptian delegation here, which I ask, without reading, to have also printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"Resolved, That the United States in ratifying the covenant of the league of nations does not intend to be understood as modifying in any degree the obligations entered into by the United States and the Entente Allies in the agreement of November 5, 1918, upon which as a basis the German Empire laid down its arms. The United States regards that contract to carry out the principles set forth by the President of the United States on January 8, 1917, and in subsequent addresses, as a world agreement, binding on the great nations which entered into it, and that the principles there set forth will be carried out in due time through the mechanism provided in the covenant, and that article 23, paragraph (b), pledging the members of the league to undertake to secure just treatment of the native inhabitants under their control, involves a pledge to carry out these principles.

"The protectorate which Germany recognizes in Great Britain over Egypt is understood to be merely a means through which the nominal suzerainty of Turkey over Egypt shall be transferred to the Egyptian people and shall not be construed as a recognition by the United States in Great Britain of any sovereign rights over the Egyptian people or as depriving the people of Egypt of any of their rights of self-government.

—

"On November 6, 1918, Secretary of State Lansing published the following to the world:

"'From the Secretary of State to the Minister of Switzerland, in charge of German interests in the United States.

"'DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
"'November 5, 1918.

"'SIR: I have the honor to request you to transmit the following communication to the German Government:

"'In my note of October 23, 1918, I advised you that the President had transmitted his correspondence with the German authorities to the Governments with which the Government of the United States is associated as a belligerent, with the suggestion that, if those Governments were disposed to effect peace upon the terms and principles indicated, their military advisers and the military advisers of the United States be asked to submit to the Governments associated against Germany the necessary terms of such armistice as would fully protect the interests of the peoples involved and insure to the associated Governments the unrestricted power to safeguard and enforce the details of the peace to which the German Government had agreed, provided they deemed such an armistice possible from the military point of view.

"'The President is now in receipt of a memorandum of observations by the allied Governments on this correspondence, which is as follows:

"'"The allied Governments have given careful consideration to the correspondence which has passed between the President of the United States and the German Government. Subject to the qualifications which follow, they declare their willingness to make peace with the Government of Germany on the terms of peace laid down in the President's address to Congress of January, 1918, and the principles of settlement enunciated in his subsequent addresses. They must point out, however, that clause 2, relating to what is usually described as the freedom of the seas, is open to various interpretations, some of which they could not accept. They must, therefore, reserve to themselves complete freedom on this subject when they enter the peace conference.

"'"Further, in the conditions of peace laid down in his address to Congress of January 8, 1918, the President declared that invaded territories must be restored as well as evacuated and freed, and the allied Governments feel that no doubt ought to be allowed to exist as to what this provision implies. By it they understand that compensation will be made by Germany for all damage done to the civilian population of the Allies and their property by the aggression of Germany by land, by sea, and from the air."

"'I am instructed by the President to say that he is in agreement with the interpretation set forth in the last paragraph of the memorandum above quoted. I am further instructed by the President to request you to notify the German Government that Marshal Foch has been authorized by the Government of the United States and the Allied Governments to receive properly accredited representatives of the German Government, and to communicate to them the terms of the armistice.

"'Accept, sir, with renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

"'(Signed) ROBERT LANSING.'

"Among other things the President, on January 8, 1918, in his address to Congress said:

"'We entered this war because violations of right had occurred which touched us to the quick and made the life of our own people impossible unless they were corrected and the world secured once for all against their recurrence. What we demand in this war, therefore, is nothing peculiar to ourselves. It is that the world be made fit and safe to live in; and particularly that it be made safe for every peace-loving nation which, like our own, wishes to live its own life, determine its own institutions, be assured of justice and fair dealing by the other peoples of the world as against force and selfish aggression. All the peoples of the world are in effect partners in this interest, and for our own part we see very clearly that unless justice be done to others it will not be done to us. The program of the world's peace, therefore, is our program; and that program, the only possible program, as we see it, is this:

"'I. Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings, of any kind but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view.

"'II. Absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas, outside territorial waters, alike in peace and in war, except as the seas may be closed in whole or in part by international action for the enforcement of international covenants.

"'III. The removal, so far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all the nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance.

"'IV. Adequate guarantees given and taken that national armaments will be reduced to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety.

"'V. A free, open-minded, and absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial claims, based upon a strict observance of the principle that in determining all such questions of sovereignty the interests of the populations concerned must have equal weight with the equitable claims of the Government whose title is to be determined.

"'VI. The evacuation of all Russian territory and such a settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest cooperation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her an unhampered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development and national policy and assure her of a sincere welcome into the society of free nations under institutions of her own choosing; and, more than a welcome, assistance also of every kind that she may need and may herself desire. The treatment accorded Russia by her sister nations in the months to come will be the acid test of their good will, of their comprehension of her needs as distinguished from their own interests, and of their intelligent and unselfish sympathy.

"'VII. Belgium, the whole world will agree, must be evacuated and restored, without any attempt to limit the sovereignty which she enjoys in common with all other free nations. No other single act will serve as this will serve to restore confidence among the nations in the laws which they have themselves set and determined for the government of their relations with one another. Without this healing act the whole structure and validity of international law is forever impaired.

"'VIII. All French territory should be freed and the invaded portions restored, and the wrong done to France by Prussia in 1871 in the matter of Alsace-Lorraine, which has unsettled the peace of the world for nearly 50 years, should be righted, in order that peace may once more be made secure in the interest of all.

"'IX. A readjustment of the frontiers of Italy should be effected along clearly recognizable lines of nationality.

"'X. The peoples of Austria-Hungary, whose place among the nations we wish to see safeguarded and assured, should be accorded the freest opportunity of autonomous development.

"'XI. Roumania, Serbia, and Montenegro should be evacuated; occupied territories restored; Serbia accorded free and secure access to the sea; and the relations of the several Balkan States to one another determined by friendly counsel along historically established lines of allegiance and nationality; and international guarantees of the political and economic independence and territorial integrity of the several Balkan States should be entered into.

"'XII. The Turkish portions of the present Ottoman Empire should be assured a secure sovereignty, but the other nationalities which are now under Turkish rule should be assured an undoubted security of life and an absolutely unmolested opportunity of autonomous development, and the Dardanelles should be permanently opened as a free passage to the ships and commerce of all nations under international guarantees.

"'XIII. An independent Polish State should be erected which should include the territories inhabited by indisputably Polish populations, which should be assured a free and secure access to the sea, and whose political and economic independence and territory integrity should be guaranteed by international covenant.

"'XIV. A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guaranties of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike.'"

[Letter from King George to the Sultan of Egypt, published in London Times December 21, 1914.]

"* * * I feel convinced that you will be able, with the cooperation of your ministers and of the protectorate of Great Britain, to overcome all influences which are seeking to destroy the independence of Egypt * * *."

—

[Cablegram to Mahmoud Pasha, Shoreham Hotel, from Mahmoud Soliman Pasha.]

"In an interview with Cairo newspapers on the 22d instant Rushdi Pasha—who was prime minister when the Khedive was dethroned by England and a Sultan appointed, and continued throughout the war as prime minister of Egypt and resigned toward the end of May last—declared that he never consented to the "protectorate" of Great Britain over Egypt, except that it was temporary and a war measure, and that it would disappear when the Allies' victory was complete. He asked England to hear him and to hear the Egyptian nation duly represented by the Egyptian delegation. He adds that Egypt's aid to England during the war was immense, and that 1,200,000 Egyptians served on the allied side."

—

[Data submitted by Egyptian delegation.]

SHALL RIGHT OR MIGHT PREVAIL?

"Egypt is a country of immense wealth. It has millions of acres of agricultural land greater in value per acre and in producing power than any other country in the world. The seizure of Egypt by Great Britain adds to Britain's enormous possessions an area of 350,000 square miles and a population of 13,000,000 people. The value of the natural resources so seized is beyond computation.

"Egypt is one compact whole—one nation, one language. The character of the people, their conduct, their habits, their sympathies, and their inclinations are the same throughout that country. Because of geographic situation, however, Egypt has attracted the avarice of colonizing powers more, perhaps, than any other country in the world. In 1798 the French under Napoleon invaded Egypt. In 1801 the French were expelled from Egypt. In 1807 Great Britain attempted to invade Egypt, but was ejected by the Egyptian Army.

"Egypt continued to be a Turkish Province until 1831, when war broke out between Egypt and Turkey, and the Egyptian Army was victorious. Constantinople would have fallen to the Egyptians, but Great Britain and France interfered in order to preserve the balance of power and the Egyptians were compelled to give up the full fruits of their victories.

"By the treaty of London of 1840–41 Egypt became autonomous, subject only to an annual tribute to Turkey of about $3,500,000. The Government of Egypt could maintain an army, contract loans, make commercial treaties, and enter into international agreements. For all practical purposes Egypt was independent and free.

"In 1882 Great Britain occupied Egypt ostensibly to protect the Khedive against the movement for popular government, and continued to occupy the country, against the protest of the Egyptians, under the pretext of protecting the people from the Khedive.

"The British Government from the time of occupation up to the beginning of the recent war promised to withdraw the British troops from Egypt. Gladstone, when prime minister, said, 'If one pledge can be more solemn and sacred than another, special sacredness in this case binds us to withdraw the British troops from Egypt.'

"Lord Salisbury, when prime minister in 1889, solemnly assured Egypt and the world that Egypt would never be placed under a British 'protectorate' or annexed by Great Britain.

"Great Britain had agreed by the treaty of London of 1840–41 to protect the autonomy of Egypt, and in the Anglo-French agreement of April 8, 1904, Great Britain declared that it had no intention of altering the political status of Egypt.

"Afer the beginning of the war, and on December 18, 1914, Great Britain deposed the Khedive and appointed a sultan of her own choosing to the throne of Egypt. On the same date Great Britain proclaimed the so-called protectorate over Egypt, announcing, however, at the same time that it was merely for the period of the war and only a step toward the independence of Egypt.

"King George, in a letter which was widely circulated throughout Egypt and which was published in the London Times of December 21, 1914, said:

"'* * * I feel convinced that you will be able, with the cooperation of your ministers and the protection of Great Britain, to overcome all influences which are seeking to destroy the independence of Egypt, * * *.'

"This change of status being announced at the time as a merely temporary war measure, was assumed by the Egyptians to be such. The Egyptians with absolute unanimity took sides with the Allies and served to make, as they believed, the world safe for democracy and for the right of national self-determination in all peoples.

"When the armistice was signed the Egyptians rejoiced in the thought that the day of their deliverance had come, and that henceforth they would enjoy that right of national self-determination proclaimed by President Wilson. A commission was appointed by the Egyptian people to attend the peace conference, where their independence and sovereignty could be consecrated and acknowledged by the powers.

"In violation of its pledges of independence to the Egyptian people, and regardless of the fact that the Egyptian people had served and sacrificed in the allied cause, Great Britain arrested four of the leading citizens of Egypt, who had been selected by the Egyptian people to go to Paris, and these four were torn from their homes without warning and deported to Malta, where they were thrown into a military prison.

"When the Egyptian people learned of this act of perfidy on the part of Great Britain their indignation was intense. National self-determination demonstrations were held throughout Egypt. Great Britain answered these demonstrations for national self-determination, the principle for which Great Britain had ostensibly fought in the war, by firing machine guns into crowds of these peaceable and unarmed, liberty-seeking people, killing more than a thousand and wounding vastly more.

"Egyptians who dared to assert in public that Egypt should have the right of national self-determination were put in prison. The cry for liberty by an Egyptian was answered by British military punishment.

"If present conditions are permitted to continue, liberty is dead to Egypt, and the right of self-determination to all peoples, for which Americans believed they were fighting, has been made a hollow mockery.

"Gen. Allenby finally, by force of Egyptian public opinion, advised the British Government to permit the commission to proceed to Paris. When the commission reached Paris they asked for a hearing before the peace conference. This was denied them. They wrote to President Wilson and asked for a conference with him. Their appeals were in vain.

"Some days after the commission reached Paris the so-called protectorate of Great Britain over Egypt was 'recognized.' The holding of Egypt by Great Britain is not a protectorate in the legal sense of the word, but under guise of a protectorate Great Britain is holding Egypt to-day as a subject and conquered nation.

"The approval of this so-called protectorate would be accepted by the British Government as approval of the present holding of Egypt by Great Britain as spoils of war and would rivet the chains of subject slavery upon the Egyptian people.

"In a statement issued by the British Embassy at Washington, September 2, 1919, and which was published in the daily press, the embassy stated:

"'Great Britain has carefully avoided destroying the sovereignty of Egypt.'

"A few days later the British foreign office in London gave an interview to the International News Service, claiming to have succeeded to Turkish nominal suzerainty over Egypt. Great Britain is claiming both a protectorate and a sovereignty over Egypt at the same time.

"Great Britain is holding Egypt to-day not by right but by might of military force. Great Britain's seizure of Egypt is out of keeping with the world's new temper. Only by the exercise of the gospel of military force can the continued holding of Egypt by Great Britain be maintained. Only in violation of its sacred pledges and treaty obligations can Great Britain assert dominion over the people of Egypt.

"On November 10, 1914, Lloyd-George in a speech called the world to witness the utter unselfishness of their part in the war. 'As the Lord liveth,' he declared, 'England does not want one yard of territory. We are in this war from motives of pure chivalry to guard the weak.' Shall Egypt be handed over to Great Britain in violation of the great principles for which Americans, Egyptians, and the Allies fought? How can it be justly said that Egypt is outside the realm of the principles of the 14 points and that Great Britain may deny the right of self-determination to Egypt?

"The Egyptian people are liberty loving and peaceful. They have not interfered with other nations and they ask now that Great Britain not be allowed to destroy the inalienable right of the Egyptian people to liberty, and the right to have their own government, controlled by their own people."

BRITISH PLEDGES.

"In May, 1882, a British fleet appeared before Alexandria. In June, 1882, a serious disturbance took place in Alexandria, and a number of Europeans were killed. On July 11 and 12, 1882, Alexandria was bombarded by the British fleet and British soldiers began to occupy Egypt. Great Britain pledged the Egyptian Government and the world that this occupation would be only temporary. The solemn pledges to this effect made by England are evidenced by the following documents:

"1. Lord Granville's dispatch, November 4, 1881 (Egypt, No. 1 (1882), pp. 2, 3), said:

"'The policy of Her Majesty's Government toward Egypt has no other aim than the prosperity of the country, and its full enjoyment of that liberty which it has obtained under successive firmans of the Sultan. * * * It can not be too clearly understood that England desires no partisan ministry in Egypt. In the opinion of Her Majesty's Government a partisan ministry founded on the support of a foreign power, or upon the personal influence of a foreign diplomatic agent, is neither calculated to be of service to the country it administers nor to that in whose interest it is supposed to be maintained.'

"2. In the protocol signed by Lord Dufferin, together with the representatives of the five other great powers, June 25, 1882 (Egypt, No. 17 (1882), p. 33), it was provided:

"'The Government represented by the undersigned engaged themselves, in any arrangement which may be made in consequence of their concerted action for the regulation of the affairs of Egypt, not to seek any territorial advantage, nor any concession of any exclusive privilege, nor any commercial advantage for their subjects other than those which any other nation can equally obtain.' [Italics ours.]

"3. Sir Beauchamp Seymour, in a communication to Khedive Tewfik, Alexandria, July 26, 1882, published in the Official Journal of July 28, 1882, said:

"'I, admiral commanding the British fleet, think it opportune to confirm without delay once more to Your Highness that the Government of Great Britain has no intention of making the conquest of Egypt, nor of injuring in any way the religion and liberties of the Egyptians. It has for its sole object to protect Your Highness and the Egyptian people against rebels.' [Italics ours.]

"4. Sir Charles Dilke, in the House of Commons, July 25, 1882, said:

"'It is the desire of Her Majesty's Government, after relieving Egypt from military tyranny, to leave the people to manage their own affairs. * * * We believe that it is better for the interests of their country, as well as for the interests of Egypt, that Egypt should be governed by liberal institutions rather than by a despotic rule. * * * We do not wish to impose on Egypt institutions of our own choice, but rather to leave the choice of Egypt, free. * * * . It is the honorable duty of this country to be true to the principles of free institutions, which are our glory.' [Italics ours.]

"5. The Right Hon. Mr. W. E. Gladstone, in the House of Commons, August 10, 1882, said:

"'I can go so far as to answer the honorable gentleman when he asks me whether we contemplate an indefinite occupation of Egypt. Undoubtedly of all things in the world, that is a thing which we are not going to do. It would be absolutely at variance with all the principles and views of Her Majesty's Government, and the pledges they have given to Europe and with the views, I may say, of Europe itself.' [Italics ours.]

"6. Lord Dufferin's dispatch, December 19, 1882, Egypt No. 2 (1883), page 30, stated:

"'In talking to the various persons who have made inquiries as to my views on the Egyptian question I have stated that we have not the least intention of preserving the authority which has thus reverted to us. * * * It was our intention so to conduct our relations with the Egyptian people that they should naturally regard us as their best friends and counselors, but that we did not propose upon that account arbitrarily to impose our views upon them or to hold them in an irritating tutelage.' [Italics ours.]

"7. Lord Granville, December 29, 1882, Egypt No. 2 (1882), page 33, officially stated:

"'You should intimate to the Egyptian Government that it is the desire of Her Majesty's Government to withdraw the troops from Egypt as soon as circumstances permit, that such withdrawal will probably be effected from time to time as the security of the country will allow it, and that Her Majesty's Government hope that the time will be very short during which the full number of the present force will be maintained.' [Italics ours.]

"8. Lord Dufferin's dispatch, February 6, 1883, Egypt No. 6 (1883), pages 41, 43, stated:

"'The territory of the Khedive has been recognized as lying outside the sphere of European warfare and international jealousies. * * *

"'The Valley of the Nile could not be administered from London. An attempt upon our part to engage in such an undertaking would at once render us objects of hatred and suspicion to its inhabitants. Cairo would become a focus of foreign intrigue and conspiracy against us, and we should soon find ourselves forced either to abandon our pretensions under discreditable conditions or embark upon the experiment of a complete acquisition of the country.'

"9. Again, at page 83, Lord Dufferin said:

"'Had I been commissioned to place affairs in Egypt on the footing of an Indian subject State the outlook would have been different. The masterful hand of a resident would have quickly bent everything to his will, and in the space of five years we should have greatly added to the material wealth and well-being of the country by the extension of its cultivated area and the consequent expansion of its revenue; by the partial if not the total abolition of the corvee and slavery; the establishment of justice and other beneficent reforms. But the Egyptians would have justly considered these advantages as dearly purchased at the expense of their domestic independence. Moreover, Her Majesty's Government have pronounced against such an alternative.' [Italics ours.]

"10. Mr. Gladstone, in the House of Commons August 6, 1883, said:

"'The other powers of Europe * * * are well aware of the general intentions entertained by the British Government, intentions which may be subject, of course, to due consideration of that state of circumstances, but conceived and held to be in the nature not only of information but a pledge or engagement.' [Italics ours.]

"11. Mr. Gladstone, in the House of Commons August 9, 1883, said:

"'The uncertainty there may be in some portion of the public mind has reference to those desires which tend toward the permanent occupation of Egypt and its incorporation in this Empire. This is a consummation to which we are resolutely opposed and which we will have nothing to do with bringing about. We are against this doctrine of annexation; we are against everything that resembles or approaches it; and we are against all language that tends to bring about its expectation. We are against it on the ground of the interests of England; we are against it on the ground of our duty to Egypt; we are against it on the ground of the specific and solemn pledges given to the world in the most solemn manner and under the most critical circumstances, pledges which have earned for us the confidence of Europe at large during the course of difficult and delicate operations, and which, if one pledge can be more solemn and sacred than another, special sacredness in this case binds us to observe. We are also sensible that occupation prolonged beyond a certain point may tend to annexation, and consequently it is our object to take the greatest care that the occupation does not gradually take a permanent character. * * * We can not name a day and do not undertake to name a day for our final withdrawal, but no effort shall be wanting on our part to bring about that withdrawal as early as possible. [Italics ours.]

"12. Lord Granville's dispatch, June 16, 1884, Egypt No. 23 (1884), page 13, stated:

"'Her Majesty's Government * * * are willing that the withdrawal of the troops shall take place at the beginning of the year 1888, provided that the powers are then of opinion that such withdrawal can take place without risk to peace and order.'

"13. Lord Derby, in the House of Lords, February 26, 1885, said:

"'From the first we have steadily kept in view the fact that our occupation was temporary and provisional only. * * * We do not propose to keep Egypt permanently. * * * On that point we are pledged to this country and to Europe; and if a contrary policy is adopted it will not be by us.' [Italics ours.]

"14. Lord Salisbury, in the House of Lords, June 10, 1887, said:

"'It was not open to us to assume the protectorate of Egypt, because Her Majesty's Government have again and again pledged themselves that they would not do so. * * * My noble friend has dwelt upon that pledge, and he does us no more than justice when he expresses his opinion that it is a pledge which has been constantly present to our minds. * * * It was undoubtedly the fact that our presence in Egypt, unrecognized by any convention * * * gave the subjects of the Sultan cause for a suspicion which we did not deserve.' [Italics ours.]

"15. Lord Salisbury, in the House of Lords, August 12, 1889, said:

"'When my noble friend * * * asks us to convert ourselves from guardians into proprietors * * * and to declare our stay in Egypt permanent * * * I must say I think my noble friend pays an insufficient regard to the sanctity of the obligations which the Government of the Queen have undertaken and by which they are bound to abide. In such a matter we have not to consider what is the most convenient or what is the more profitable course; we have to consider the course to which we are bound by our own obligations and by European law.' [Italics ours.]

"16. Mr. Gladstone, in the House of Commons, May 1, 1893, said:

"'I can not do otherwise than express my general concurrence * * * that the occupation of Egypt is in the nature of a burden and difficulty, and that the permanent occupation of that country would not be agreeable to our traditional policy, and that it would not be consistent with our good faith toward the suzerain power, while it would be contrary to the laws of Europe. * * * I certainly shall not set up the doctrine that we have discovered a duty which enables us to set aside the pledges into which we have so freely entered. * * * The thing we can not do with perfect honor is either to deny that we are under engagements which preclude the idea of an indefinite occupation, or so to construe that indefinite occupation as to hamper the engagements that we are under by collateral considerations.' [Italics ours.]

"17. The text of the Anglo-French agreement of April 8, 1904, provides:

"'The Government of His Majesty declares that it has no intention of altering the political status of Egypt.'

"18. Lord Cromer's report, March 3, 1907, Egypt No. 1 (1907), page 2, stated:

"'There are insuperable objections to the assumption of a British protectorate over Egypt. It would involve a change in the political status of the country. Now, in Article 1 of the Anglo-French agreement of the 8th April, 1904, the British Government have explicitly declared that they have no intention of altering the political status of Egypt.'

"19. In an interview with Dr. Nimr, editor of the Mokattam, October 24, 1908, acknowledged as official by Sir E. Grey in the House of Commons, Sir Eldon Gorst said:

"'It has been said that Great Britain proposes shortly to proclaim the protectorate or the annexation of Egypt to the British Empire. Will Sir Eldon Gorst permit me to ask him whether this rumor is well founded or not?'

"Sir Eldon Gorst answered:

"'The rumor has no foundation, and you may contradict it categorically. Great Britain has engaged herself by official agreements with Turkey and the European Powers to respect the suzerainty of the Sultan in Egypt. She will keep her engagements, which, moreover, she reiterated in 1904 at the time of the conclusion of the Anglo-French agreement. England stipulated in that agreement that she has no intention to change the political situation in Egypt. Neither the people nor the Government wish to rid themselves of these engagements.'

"20. Sir Eldon Gorst's report, March 27, 1909, Egypt No. 1 (1909), page 1, stated:

"'There exists among the better-educated sections of society a limited but gradually increasing class which interests itself in matters pertaining to the government and administration of the country. This class aspires quite rightly to help in bringing about the day when Egypt will be able to govern herself without outside assistance. This is also the end to which British policy is directed, and there need be no antagonism or principle between the Egyptian and English reforming elements.'

"21. In the same report, at page 48, Sir Eldon Gorst said:

"'Since the commencement of the occupation the policy approved by the British Government has never varied, and its fundamental idea has been to prepare the Egyptians for self-government while helping them in the meantime to enjoy the benefit of good government.'

"22. Sir Eldon Gorst's report, March 26, 1910, Egypt No. 1 (1910), page 51, stated:

"'British policy in Egypt in no way differs from that followed by Great Britain all over the world toward countries under her influence, namely, to place before all else the welfare of their populations.'

"23. Sir Edward Grey, in the House of Commons, August, 1914, said:

"'England stretches out her hand to any nation whose safety or independence may be threatened or compromised by any aggressor.'

"24. Former Premier Balfour, speaking for the Government at Guild Hall, on November 19, 1914, declared:

"'We fight not for ourselves alone but for civilization drawn to the cause of small States, the cause of all those countries which desire to develop their own civilization in their own way, following their own ideals without interference from any insolent and unauthorized aggressor.'

"25. Premier Asquith, speaking at Guild Hall, November 9, 1915, asserted:

"'We shall not pause or falter until we have secured for the smaller States their charter of independence and for the world at large its final emancipation from the reign of force.'

"26. And, again, Premier Asquith, on November 9, 1916, declared:

"'This is a war, among other things—perhaps I may say primarily—a war for the emancipation of the smaller States. * * * Peace when it comes, must be such as will build upon a sure and stable foundation the security of the weak, the liberties of Europe, and a free future for the world.'

"27. Premier Lloyd-George, on June 29, 1917, said:

"'In my judgment this war will come to an end when the allied powers have reached the aims which they set out to attain when they accepted the challenge thrown down by Germany to civilization.'

"28. Asquith, in the House of Commons, on December 20, 1917, said:

"'We ought to make it increasing clear by every possible means that the only ends we are fighting for are liberty and justice for the whole world, through a confederation of great and small States, all to possess equal rights. A league of nations is the ideal for which we are fighting, and we shall continue fighting for it with a clear conscience, clean hands, and an unwavering heart.'

"After the beginning of the World War, and on December 18, 1914, Great Britain proclaimed a so-called protectorate over Egypt. The proclamation seizing Egypt and placing Egypt under the British flag is published in the London Times of December 19, 1914, page 8, column 3. It reads:

"'In view of the action of his highness Abbas Helmi Pasha, lately Khedive of Egypt, who has adhered to the King's enemies, His Majesty's Government has seen fit to depose him from the khedivate, and that high dignity has been offered, with the title of Sultan of Egypt, to his highness Prince Hussein Gamel Pasha, eldest living Prince of the family of Mehemet Ali, and has been accepted by him.

"'The King has been pleased to approve the appointment of Prince Hussein to an honorary Knight Grand Cross of the Order of the Bath on the occasion of his accession to the sultanate.' [Italics ours.]

"The London Times, in the issue of December 19, 1914, had large headlines saying, 'Egypt under the British flag.' But the Times, in an editorial in the issue of same date, with characteristic British diplomacy, naively said:

"'All that is desired now is to defend Egypt against attack and to keep the internal administration running smoothly. Other questions can wait until peace is restored, as Lord Cromer implies in the letter we published to-day. * * * It is purely a practical administrative step, dictated by the appearance of Turkey as a belligerent.'

"It will be noted that the seizure was sought to be justified only as a protection to Egypt against Turkish aggression. The truth is that under the guise of a 'protectorate' Great Britain seized Egypt and swept away every vestige of Egyptian freedom and independence. But the people of Egypt did not realize at that time the full meaning of this action on the part of Great Britain. They were told that it was a step toward the independence of Egypt. His Majesty King George, in a letter to the Sultan whom he had appointed to rule over Egypt, which letter was widely circulated throughout Egypt and was published in the London Times of date December 21, 1914, said:

"'* * * I feel convinced that you will be able, with the cooperation of your ministers and the protectorate of Great Britain, to overcome all influences which are seeking to destroy the independence of Egypt. * * *' [Italics ours.]

TREATMENT OF EGYPTIAN DELEGATES TO PEACE CONFERENCE.

"From the Egyptian White Book, page 19:

"'I addressed to British headquarters on the 20th instant (November) a letter in which I requested for my colleague and myself the permission necessary for voyage. * * * We have just received a letter from the military authorities dated to-day, informing us that difficulties have arisen which have prevented them from responding before and that as soon as they are smoothed out we shall receive an answer. * * * We rely upon the traditions of Great Britain. The British have not ceased to give to the world examples of the devotion to the principles of individual liberty. Will not our request for passports receive a quick and favorable response?'

"To this the following letter was received on December 1, 1918, page 21:

"'I am directed by his excellency, the high commissioner, to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 29th ultimo and to inform you in reply that after reference to His Majesty's Government, his excellency feels unable to make any representations to the military authorities in the matter.

"'I am to add that should you desire to submit suggestions as to the government of Egypt, not being inconsistent with the policy of His Majesty's Government as already declared, such suggestions can most conveniently be submitted in writing to his excellency. In this connection I may draw your attention to the communication addressed by Sir Mille Cheetham, proclamation of protectorate by the British Government, December 18, 1914, by instruction of His Majesty's Government to the late Sultan Hussein on the occasion of his accession.'

"To this the delegation replied on December 3, 1918, as follows, page 22:

"'In response I allow myself to make known to your excellency that it is not permitted, neither to me nor to any member of the delegation, to make propositions which are not in accordance with the will of the Egyptian nation as expressed in the mandates that have been given us. * * * Forbidding our departure makes illusory and inoperative the mission that we have accepted by will of the people. It is difficult to conciliate this situation with the principles of liberty and justice which the victory of Great Britain and her allies is supposed to have caused to triumph. This victory has repeatedly been declared to be for the purpose of opening a new era for mankind through listening and granting the just demands of peoples.'

"In a letter of protest to Premier Lloyd-George against the virtual imprisonment of the Egyptian delegation at Cairo, the president of the delegation wrote (p. 26):

"'You have certainly been misinformed of the circumstances that accompanied our sequestration. We can not imagine how such proceedings can be justified, whether from the point of view of law or social usage, or even of reasonable policy, and we can not understand how the British can apply systematically so humiliating a treatment to a nation with the rich and glorious past of ours. Whatever may be its present weakness, a nation with a civilization so ancient will always preserve before the world its prestige and its title to the gratitude of the world.

"'Deny the civilization of Egypt in spite of traces that attest its glorious past; deny its benefits to the culture of the world; suppose that it is only an agglomeration of savages ruled by the brutality of their instincts and without law—do you refuse to believe that Egypt has been a precious aid to you? The enormous sacrifice that we have made during the war in blood and treasure for the triumph of your cause, were indispensable to you, and moreover you have recognized many times that these sacrifices were one of the principal factors of victory in the Orient.

"'* * * Even were you to suppose that Egypt had no civilization and that Egypt gave you no aid, would you none the less refuse to apply to her the principles which you have agreed with President Wilson to apply—impartial justice on every side of settlement no matter whose interest is crossed, and not only impartial justice but also the satisfaction of several peoples whose fortunes are dealt with?'

"Egyptian case stated as follows in a letter from Egyptian delegation to president of peace conference (p. 88):

"'For more than five months the British authorities refused to allow our delegation to leave for Europe. Public opinion, realizing that a peace conference had assembled and was taking up the problems of the Near East, and preparing a treaty to present to Germany, became aroused. The Egyptians insisted that the authorization for our departure be granted. Standing by the people, the cabinet presented its resignation, which was accepted. The answer of the British military authorities to the official request of the Egyptian Government was to order the arrest and deportation to Malta of the president of the delegation and of three of his colleagues. They were taken suddenly from their homes and hurried away under cover of night. There was no trial, and they were not informed of the reasons for their arrest and deportation. When they learned of this act of violence, totally contrary to the law, there were peaceful demonstrations throughout the country, in which all classes took part. Government officials and the personnel of railways and other transportation service, decided to strike. The English thus saw that in the entire territory of Egypt the people of all classes, irrespective of religion, were against their domination, nevertheless they persisted in their wish to govern by force of arms the people who did not want them.

"'The manifestations were suppressed by machine guns which mowed down dozens of unfortunate demonstrators. Since the Egyptians had no arms, the order to fire was totally unwarranted. But frightfulness could not stop the Egyptians from proceeding in their determination to make an effort to obtain their independence. They had firm faith in the principles of President Wilson which had been solemnly accepted by the Entente Allies. They felt that if their delegation could only get to Paris that justice would be accorded to them. So, in spite of the death that awaited them, they advanced in groups in ecstasy, making the sacrifice of their lives to the cause of liberty.

"'Even the women were not spared. Without mentioning those who fell on the field of honor during the national demonstrations, we can cite the case of the leading ladies of Cairo who organized under the leadership of the wife of the prime minister, a demonstration to protest to the diplomatic agencies against the murder of innocent and unarmed citizens in the streets of Cairo. Suddenly they were surrounded on all sides by soldiers who pointed their guns at them. This inspired one of the Egyptian women to say "Make of me if you will a second Miss Cavell." They were kept for more than two hours in the burning sun. In proof of this statement, we refer to the testimony of the agencies of the United States and Italy.

"'The British authorities in Egypt were as much disturbed as provoked by the extent of the movement and astonished at their powerlessness to stop it. It was then that the spirit of vengeance got the better of them, and they then allowed themselves to indulge in the most disgraceful excesses. No longer content to stop the demonstrations by means of rifles and machine guns, they were guilty in several places of rape, of assassination of peaceful villagers, of pillage, of arson—all with the most trifling pretext or even without pretext. No longer was it a question of individual abuses committed by stray soldiers such as those of which the minister of justice and the president of the legislative assembly had been victims—no longer was it a question of blows and thefts in the streets of Alexandria and Cairo, attacks began to be made by strong military attachments under the command of their officers in villages as well as cities."

—

BRITISH VIEWS ON THE EGYPTIAN QUESTION.

"Sir Thomas Barclay, vice president of the Institute of International Law, says in his book, 'New Methods of Adjusting International disputes and the Future':

"'Turning to another aspect of international matters, it is deeply to be regretted that in several instances in our own time international treaties have not been regarded by public opinion with the same respect as international awards. The attitude of England toward Egypt, of Italy toward Turkey, of Russia toward Persia, of France toward Morocco, and especially of Germany toward Belgium, all are instances of eventual bad faith, however justifiable the original intervention may have been in the one case or unjustifiable in the other. They are additional evidence of the difficulty of preserving the peace of the world even by the most solemn of international undertakings.'"

—

[Excerpts from an article by the Right Hon. J. M. Robertson, former member of the British Cabinet, in the Contemporary Review of May, 1919, under the title of "The problem of Egypt":

"A rebellion in Egypt in 1919 has set all men elsewhere asking the question, Why? In 1914 a rebellion was planned for by the German enemy; how thoroughly the world has not yet been informed. Had it broken out, the causation would have been sufficiently obvious, apart from any known native discontent. But that rebellion should have been averted then and should blaze forth now, when the leagued enemies of the British Empire are prostrate in defeat, signifies a new causation. What is it?

"Some have put the hypothesis that Egyptian Moslems are alarmed by the prospect of Jewish domination in Palestine. But even if there were not express testimony that the Zionist leaders have maintained thoroughly friendly relations with those of the Arabs, such an explanation would be plainly inadequate. Moslem feeling in Egypt about Palestine could at most aggravate other grounds of resentment; it could not motive a rebellion in which the Moslems of Palestine have no share. Such a rising, exhibiting no signs of direction from without, must be held to signify grievances within Egypt; and new and special grievances at that. The disorders reported from Cairo on April 14 appear to involve riots directed against the Armenians and Greeks; and it may be that the presence of a number of Armenian refugees has helped to foment fanaticism. But these attacks, as described, have the appearance of being a sequel to the previous insurrection rather than a key to its causation. Normally, the Moslems in Egypt live on perfectly good terms with the numerous Greeks; fanaticism being in fact not a normal factor in the life of the Egyptian mass. And the remarkable statement made by Miss M. E. Durham, in the Daily News of April 2, would seem to yield the explanation. Thus it runs:

"'I was in Egypt from November, 1915, to April, 1916, and can confirm Dr. Haden Guest in his statement that it is to our own treatment of the Egyptians that we owe the present trouble. The authorities were certainly to blame in landing colonial troops in Egypt without carefully instructing them as to the population they would meet there. So ignorant were numbers of these men that they imagined that Egypt was English, and the natives of the land were intruders.

"'More than one Australian said that he would clear the lot out if he had his way. They treated the natives with cruelty and contempt. In the canteen in which I worked a very good native servant was kicked and knocked about simply because he did not understand an order given him by a soldier. An educated native in the town was struck in the mouth and had his inlaid walking stick forcibly snatched from him by a soldier who wanted it. More than one English resident said to me: "It will take years to undo the harm that has been done here by the army." Personally I felt that were I an Egyptian I should have spared no effort to evict the British. I felt ashamed of my country—bitterly ashamed. The opinion of the native for the soldier was amusingly illustrated by a small conversation book, one phrase of which was to the effect: "You fool; what for you spend all your money on beer?" and a dialogue with a beggar which ended: "I am poor; I am miserable," to which the Briton replied: "Go to hell."

"'I spoke with great severity frequently to the soldiers, telling them that by their conduct they were proving themselves the enemies of England; that the Germans maltreated the enemy, but that they were attacking their own side and would make enemies. This surprised them very much. They were absolutely ignorant of the situation.

"'To make matters worse, for the first few days after the troops arrived in quantities, the drink shops were all open all day, and the unlovely results filled the natives with disgust and contempt. It was reported, I do not know with what truth, that drunken men had snatched the veils from Moslem women. The tale was believed by the natives.

"'Small wonder if they hate and dread us.'

"It is probably necessary to impress upon many people in this country that the insolent outrage such as that described, inflicted upon people in their own country by a dominant alien race, is about as maddening to the indigenous population as Englishmen found many of the tales of German brutality to British prisoners and subject Belgians during the war. The blood boils in Egypt perhaps more easily than in England. And if any of our people continue to argue, as many of them did a dozen or more years ago, that Egyptians ought to be too thankful for our beneficent rule to feel rebelliously about individual grievances, it will be more necessary than ever to point out that such reasoning tells only of an incurable moral blindness. Old chronicles are full of rebellion arising out of individual outrages; and a nation collectively grateful to an alien race for ruling it is not among the portents of history.

"How government has gone in Egypt during the war it was practically impossible for us at home to know. It was no time for discussing reforms; and military rule had to prevail there at least as much as here. But when the world is intent upon a peace settlement which is to remedy as far as may be all the grievances of subjected peoples, it would be idle to suppose that wild mutiny and stern repression (going to the length of bombing open villages) can go on in Egypt without comment or criticism from our allies, to say nothing of our late enemies.

"If Egypt were under any rule but British, British critics in general would hold it a matter of course that such a mutiny as has recently been quelled there must signify some kind of misgovernment. The fact that we can quell a mutiny by bombing, from aeroplanes, the open villages of a population which simply can not organize a military resistance, is no proof whatever either of the general badness of the Egyptian cause or the goodness of ours.

"Recollections of the history of Poland might suffice to move thinking men in this country to seek for a policy which shall not merely 'hold down' the Egyptian people now but make it unnecessary to hold them down in future. Whatever the patriots in Parliament and the Northcliffe press may say for the moment, this bombing of open villages and flogging of rioters can not improve our reputation either in Christendom or in the Moslem world; and it will not be permanently possible even for the patriots to keep up a denunciation of Germans for their past bombing of noncombatants here while we bomb noncombatants in Egypt. And there is a painful probability that such episodes will recur unless we make a new departure in Egyptian Government.

"It is presumably well known that the present system is one embodying a few of the forms without any of the realities of self-government. At every stage at which those forms have been adjusted the obvious purpose was to give nothing approaching real power of any kind either to the mass of the people or to Egyptian ministers who nominally administered. For such a policy of emasculation the private defense has always been that neither ministers nor people can be trusted, the former to govern or the latter to control them. It may simplify the discussion to admit that for this plea there is some justification. It would be hard to prove that the majority of the electors in Britain who polled at the last general election are well qualified to vote. They are now showing signs of a change of feeling which could hardly be paralleled in oriental history for quickness and completeness. That being so, it is not to be supposed that the people of Egypt are properly fitted to exercise political power. But that does not alter the fact that in Egypt, as in Europe, the only way in which any population can become fitted to exercise political power is to begin using some degree of political choice.

"Certainly it is important that some amount of education, in the ordinary sense of the term, should precede political enfranchisement—though a franchise long subsisted with a low standard of popular education in our own country. But Englishmen can not long plead lack of education in Egypt as a ground for denying it any measure of real self-government, when it is by the decision of the British control that Egypt remains so largely uneducated. The policy of Lord Cromer in that regard was fatally transparent. Until within a short time of his resignation he refused even the appeal of his British (the controlling) minister of education to spend more than £200,000 a year on the schooling of a nation numbering some twelve millions. The finances of Egypt, he declared, did not admit of an expenditure much in excess of that. When criticism was brought to bear in the British Parliament he quickly discovered that he could spend the £400,000 his minister had asked for; and since his day the expenditure has greatly increased, still without giving Egypt a good system of schools.

"The reforms, such as they are, have been largely the result of native pressure. Egyptians of all classes have long agitated for better and better schools, and in particular for a good modern university. Before the advent of the British control Egypt was to a very considerable extent in a state of educational progress. A study of the catalogue of the Khedival Library in 1906 revealed that quite a large number of scientific and other works had been translated into Arabic, chiefly from the French, in the days of Ismail and his predecessors. Yet when it was urged upon Lord Cromer's Government that science teaching should be introduced into the program of the secondary schools the official answer was that books for the purpose did not exist. As they had existed a generation before, the irresistible conclusion was that the British control had let Egypt retrograde from the level reached under Moslem rule. So reactionary was the influence of the Cromer tradition that only after much pressure was it made possible for students of agriculture in Egypt to secure instruction in their own language. The Cromer tradition was that they must master either French or English for the purpose. Let the reader try to imagine what would be said of a British Government that refused to give instruction in scientific agriculture to farmers' sons save in a foreign language.

"It is perfectly true that Lord Cromer managed Egyptian finances well and economically, in contrast with the extremely bad management of the old régime. Probably no native government could have approached to the efficiency, to say nothing of the rectitude, of the British control in finance. As to all that there is no dispute; but it savors almost of burlesque to argue that the duty of the British control toward Egypt was fulfilled when Egypt was made to pay full interest on all its debts and meet the whole costs, civil and military, of the British administration. For generations past it has been an axiom in our politics that it is the business of governments to look to the moral welfare of the nation as well as to its finance, and it is upon their contributions to that welfare that political parties now mainly found their claims to support. The very backwardness of Egypt was a ground for special measures to promote her moral progress. To make the defense of British rule consist in having regulated her finances and increased her productivity while leaving her more backward than ever in the elements of qualification for self-government was to discredit the cause that was defended. The obvious answer of every impartial foreigner to such a plea would be: 'You claim credit and gratitude for having secured the safe payment of your own bondholders, in whose interest you originally entered Egypt. Orderly government was essential to that. To earn credit and gratitude you must do a good deal more. You must raise the levels of life for the people of Egypt as you confessedly seek to raise them for your people at home. And you must know—what nation can know better?—that a people declared unfit to manage their own affairs are thereby pronounced low in the human scale.'

"It is, to say the least, unfortunate for the British Government that such an outbreak in Egypt should follow immediately on the close of the World War, when 'self-determination for subject races' passes for a principle with the peace conference. Had those responsible for the control of Egypt in the past sought to fulfill our old pledges with more of good will and good faith, we might have escaped this unpleasant emergency, though it will doubtless be argued that Lord Morley's progressive measures in India did not avert sedition there in 1914 and later. But the conclusion come to by responsible inquirers as regards India is obviously still more compulsive as regards Egypt. Our duty to prepare that country for self-government has been again and again officially avowed from the time of our first entrance; and those who think we can forever go on simply repressing discontent and maintaining the status quo are plainly unteachable by events. If the British control does not get newly into touch with intelligent native opinion, the situation will infallibly go from bad to worse, and this in the eyes of a world newly critical of 'imperialism.' That long-vaunted ideal has somewhat rapidly become a term of censure for whole nations.

"We shall be faced, as a matter of course, with the regulation formula that there can be no talk of concessions to a people who have been recently in rebellion. The Russian bureaucracy used to talk in that fashion, and we have seen the outcome. If those responsible for British rule in Egypt have in any degree learned the lesson, they will as soon as possible set about securing native support by taking natives into council; by giving room for real initiative to the nominal Egyptian ministers, who must know a good deal more about Egypt than do more than a few of the British bureaucracy there, civil or military; and by giving some reality to the form of self-government which thus far has been allowed to count for next to nothing in Egyptian politics. Before the war there were chronic and bitter complaints about the disregard of native wishes, as expressed by the elected representatives, in regard to matters of administration nearly concerning Egyptian welfare. During the war there, as here, must have been the possible minimum of consultation of the people. Perhaps what has happened in the English by-elections within the last month or two may suffice to suggest to the British Government that the sooner it resumes touch with public opinion everywhere the better it will be for national stability, to say nothing of the stability of the ministry. Egyptian mutiny is only the nonconstitutional version of the dissatisfaction that expresses itself in elections in the constitutional country. And, to put the case at its lowest, the safe course is to set about making Egypt constitutional.

"J. M. ROBERTSON."

—

"Capt. Wedgwood Benn, in the House of Commons on May 15, initiated a debate on the state of affairs in Egypt. Among other things, he said:

"'It was not too much to say that the reason for the calmness in Egypt, even when the Turks were successful and had overrun the Sinai Peninsula, was that the Egyptians trusted that the assistance they had rendered to the Empire in the war would not be permitted to interfere with the satisfaction of their legitimate aspirations. * * *

"'The peace that had reigned in 1914, because there was trust, was converted by somebody in 1919, when there was disappointment, into a national insurrection. * * * The unrest among that large, busy, and influential class of people was caused by the fact that changes were in the air and nobody had been consulted. The underlying cause was that the status of Egypt had been altered.'

—

"Mr. Spoor (Bishop Auckland) said in the House of Commons on the same day:

"'The situation in Egypt appeared to have been aggravated enormously because Egypt was under military control, and military control of a very short-sighted kind. The methods of governing Egypt had become more and more military; and in regard to the censorship of information which was allowed to be sent from that country, it was interesting to note that the Times asserted ever since 1914 it had been the most inept and most savagely ruthless censorship in any country under British control.

"'There were facts which could be thoroughly well authenticated of atrocities of the most extreme kind that had been committed with the full sanction of our own military authorities. * * * The allegation (of atrocities) had become so general, not only in this country but throughout Europe, that it was high time an inquiry was held.'

—

FRENCH VIEWS.

[Speech of M. Goude, of the French Chamber of Deputies, at the sitting of Sept. 4, 1919. Translated from Le Journal Officiel.]

"M. Goude: In his speech of yesterday M. Franklin-Boullon said that under the appearance of 'no compromise' M. Clemenceau had surrendered on every point.

"I will try to show that the president of the council (prime minister) at any rate adopted these tactics when it came to settling a question that he understands thoroughly, a question often discussed from this tribune and upon which the prime minister has often spoken.

"Article 147 of the treaty submitted to us for ratification says:

"'Germany declares that she recognizes the protectorate proclaimed over Egypt by Great Britain on the 18th of December, 1914.'

"This means that Egypt is placed under the protectorate of England without this agreement having ever been ratified by Parliament. Neither in the treaty of peace nor in the report of M. Maurice Long has one dared to directly approach this question: it is well known that it is a thorny one and that it is absolutely contrary to all the principles laid down by the Entente Governments during the course of the war.

"It is known that at the present moment—in spite of their appeals to all the parliaments and all the politicians of the Entente—a people are being placed under the domination of another people. This is being done in an underhand way. We are not asked at first—we the French Chamber—to ratify an agreement recognizing the protectorate declared by England over Egypt in 1914, but we are told: 'We are compelling Germany to recognize the protectorate proclaimed by England over Egypt.'

"The question is brought up, I repeat, in an underhand way, because it is known that if the sole question of the English protectorate in Egypt was brought before Parliament a great debate would spring up, and I am convinced that if this question was the only one under discussion before you such a project of the treaty would never be approved. I therefore wish to know and I ask for what reasons the French Government thinks it right to place under English domination the Egyptian people, who protest with all their might and all their energy, as I will show.

"Is it not well known that Egypt has always shown its determination to be independent? Is it not well known that it is worthy of this independence?

The prime minister himself has vigorously defended the dignity of Egypt. He knows, as we do, that the production of Egypt supports its 16,000,000 of inhabitants, including Egyptians and Soudanese; that almost all the landed property belongs to Egyptians; that its farms are cultivated by native-born subjects to the exclusion of all others; that this country had in 1913 a foreign commerce amounting in value to 12,000.000,000 francs (about $2,400,000,000); that the national budget of Egypt is 800,000,000 francs (about $160,000,000); that intellectual Egyptians cultivate French traditions; that there exists in this country boys' and girls' colleges in large numbers, as well as different high schools, where the French language is exclusively employed, without forgetting the celebrated law school.

"Fifty years ago the Khedive could declare:

"'My country is no longer in Africa. It is a part of Europe.'

"Thirty years or so ago, the prime minister, rising in this tribune to defend Egyptian independence as I defend it to-day, declared:

"'I do not desire to enter into ethnographic consideration as regards the Egyptian race—this is not the place for it—but it is certain that this race, of which we see some remarkable specimens amongst us, in our schools, is a calm and docile race—too docile, it may be said at certain moments—susceptible of culture and application, an industrious race of which surely one has every reason to expect much. No one can stand up in this tribune, no one will come into this Parliament of the Republic to say that these men are incapable of freeing themselves and that we owe no other duty to them, except to govern them with a courbash and a cudgel.'

"['Hear! Hear!' at the extreme left.]

"Thirty-two years ago the prime minister made these declarations. Since then, as we know, European civilization has been spreading itself more and more in Egypt, which ardently desires to Europeanize its civilization, which is modifying its political structure, which has extended the suffrage to all citizens, who have attained their twentieth year—a reform that certain European nations might well envy.

"It must be remembered that at the moment of the declaration of war, on the 2d of August, 1914, Egypt was independent under the sole suzerainty of the Sultan of Turkey. This suzerainty, approved in 1840 by the European powers, consisted in the payment each year by Egypt of a tribute of 15,000,000 francs to the Sultan—and that was all. Having done this, it had an absolute right recognized by the European powers, to manage its own affairs according to its fancy and to have its own constitution. I know well that little by little England, by the force of her armies, had got hold of Egyptian institutions, that the members of the Government were hardly anything more than English officials, and that the President of the Legislative Assembly is appointed by the Government. But this was putting into practice the formula against which we are all struggling: 'Might is right.' England had no precise and express right in Egypt. The most famous English politicians, the heads of the Government, have said so on several occasions, as, for instance, Gladstone, who in the House of Commons as far back as the 23d of June, 1884, stated:

"'We pledge ourselves not to prolong our military occupation in Egypt beyond the 1st of January, 1888.'

"It is the same prime minister who said, on the 18th of September, 1885:

"'England ought to withdraw from Egypt as soon as British honor will permit of it. We will never admit that there can be any question of annexation, of a protectorate, or even of an indefinite prolongation of the English occupation, and we repudiate all idea of any compensation whatsoever for the efforts and sacrifices that we have made up to this day. English policy is founded on an error, and what is best to be done in a matter like this is promptly to put an end to such an intervention.'

"It is Lord Salisbury who said on the 10th of June, 1887, in the House of Lords:

"'Her Majesty's Government, by virtue of its previous engagements and of the rules of international law, does not think that it can place Egypt under a protectorate. Its rule should be limited to coming to an understanding with the Porte to defend the interests of the Khedive against political calamities and to main the statu quo in the valley of the Nile.'

"There has been a large number of the declarations, but to shorten matters I will only quote the one made by Lord Salisbury in the House of Lords on the 12th of August, 1889:

"'We can not proclaim our protectorate over Egypt nor our intention to occupy it effectively and perpetually; this would amount to breaking the international pledges signed by England.'

"Such was the state of the question during the occupation. In the agreement called the 'entente cordiale,' concluded in 1904 between France and England, article 1 begins as follows:

"'The Government of His Britannic Majesty declares that it has not the intention to change the political state of Egypt.'

"In the course of the discussion of the Fashoda affair, when England asked me to withdraw, it was not because the Sudan belonged or could belong to England; it was because of England's declaration that it was Egyptian territory. England has, then, clearly recognized on every occasion the independence of Egypt.

"Has the country, which was independent under the sole suzerainty of the Sultan and under the conditions that I have precisely indicated, become less deserving of our consideration during the war? Is there any reason for modifying, by lowering it, the political status of Egypt?

"You know that Egypt came at once and took her stand with the Allies. It must not be forgotten that the silver thread to which I referred a moment ago still bound it to Turkey.

"Before Turkey declared war Egypt placed itself at the disposal of England—of the English consul general—by saying:

"'If you will promise us our complete independence, if the English armies undertake to quit our country after the war, we will place our financial resources, our provisions, our arms, and our sons, all, in fact, that we possess, at your entire disposal; we are ready to go with you to the Continent to defend the interests of the Allies.'

"To the offer thus made at this moment England replied by a downright refusal.

"Later the situation got worse. Turkey, who was suzerain over Egypt, went to war against the Allies. Egypt renewed its offer in the same way. The Sultan, be it noted, had proclaimed a holy war. Do not forget that Egypt is a Mussulman country, but a country of semi-European civilization, where a very lively sympathy for Europe exists. In spite of the powerful effect that the proclamation of the holy war might have on the peasant masses, who are profoundly Mussulman in sentiment, Egypt, attracted by European culture, came to us and said once more: 'Insure us our independence after the war and we are with you, body and soul.'

"We have made use of Egypt; it is the Egyptian artillery which checked the impetus of the German-Turkish armies in February, 1915, when these armies tried to seize the Suez Canal and to cut our communications. Egypt put its cotton at the disposal of Europe. Later on, in face of the necessity of growing wheat, it abandoned the profitable production of cotton in order to cultivate wheat, and it put all its provisions at the disposal of the army of Salonica, which it victualed to a great extent.

"With a population of 13,000,000 of inhabitants it has placed 1,200,000 workers at the disposal of the Entente—a figure recognized as exact by the English.

"All this Egypt has done for the Entente. Have we now the right as a recompense for these services to violate the very principles that everyone here invokes, the principles which have been laid down with precision by President Wilson, when, for instance, he said, 'Peoples ought not be passed on from one sovereignty to another by an international conference or an arrangement between rivals and adversaries.' ['Hear, hear,' from several benches of the extreme left.] The national aspirations ought to be respected. The peoples ought to-day be governed by their own consent.

"Is it not there, besides an international interest, that Egypt shall not be placed under the domination of a European power? I have here under my eyes a short extract from a speech of M. de Freycinet, then prime minister, who on the 27th of November, 1886, summed up admirably the Egyptian question by saying:

"'Egypt is a sort of crossing for the Old World. It is a junction between Europe, Asia, and Africa. It is a highway which permits of the penetration of the Far East possessions. Besides, he who is master of Egypt is master to a great extent of the Mediterranean. It is certain that if a great power installed itself definitely in Egypt this would be a very heavy blow to French influence in the Mediterranean in such a manner that, in my estimation, France ought never reconcile herself to the idea that Egypt could definitely fall into the hands of a European power.' ['Hear, hear,' from the extreme left.]

"This is an undoubted fact. And the question ought not to be examined merely from a material standpoint, but also from a moral point of view. This Mussulman country into which European civilization penetrates little by little is being driven by us into a corner where violence is its only recourse. This is henceforth its only political issue. We could, however, have made of Egypt a point of contact between eastern and western civilization. ['Hear, hear,' from the extreme left.] This is exactly what we are not doing.

"Not only will this country, which came of its own accord to the Entente, receive no compensation, but by virtue of the treaty of peace its bounds will be tightened and its chains made heavier.

"* * * in this Chamber, which during such a long time and so very justly complained of the Bismarckian policy, which had left in the side of France the painful scar of Alsace-Lorraine, it is my desire to declare that it is helping to create at this moment another Alsace-Lorraine.

"'M. JEAN LONGUET. Ten Alsace-Lorraines.'

"'M. GOUDE. Certainly, many Alsace-Lorraines; but this one is particularly characteristic. * * *'

"Egypt, which during the whole of the war and in order to insure the victory of the Allies, has endured without complaining the yoke of English militarism, which has borne with all the measures of censure, with all the house searches, trial sentences, etc.

"'M. JEAN LONGUET. With the atrocities!

"'M. GOUDE. Atrocities. Yes: that is the word. Egypt will have no more of that now. It is in full open revolt. You are aware that the president of the Egyptian Council (Egyptian prime minister), who, however, is a nominee of the English and in a certain sense an English official, found the Egyptian people so unanimous against this domination and the protectorate that he resigned. You know that the officials who are specially under English authority, seeing that their written protests were distorted, went out on a general strike in order to emphasize their vote of independence. You are aware that the workingmen are on strike; that revolts have taken place in the streets, in which all classes and creeds have been united by a common determination to win independence; that crowds have been fired upon; that there have been massacres; and that condemnations have been pronounced.'

"Here we have a university professor—a fellow—condemned to penal servitude for life for having made a speech in favor of independence. Here, again—to mention one case amongst many others—we have Ibrahim Chalami sent to the gallows for having cried out at the head of a demonstration, 'Liberty, equality, fraternity.'

"'M. BARTHE. They condemn even those who cry "Long live France."

"'M. GOUDE. There are thousands of examples of this kind. To maintain its protectorate, England has at present 150,000 soldiers; she is obliged to keep soldiers in every village, because amongst university men, notables, commercial men, fellaheen, no one will accept this domination at any price and everyone demands independence. Thrilling appeals have been addressed to President Wilson, M. Clemenceau, to the chairman of our peace commission, to the Italian, American, and English Parliaments.'

"'M. JEAN LONGUET. They are all deaf.'

"'M. GOUDE. But at all times and everywhere everybody remains deaf except, however, the American Senate, the commission of which has proclaimed that Egypt ought to be as independent of English diplomacy as of Turkish diplomacy, and that it must be left master of its own destinies.'

"'Monsieur le President of the Council,' said the orator addressing M. Clemenceau, 'not only have you abandoned Egypt that you know personally, since, I repeat to you, you have spoken very hard words against our friends, the English, from this very tribune when this question was under discussion, but, what is graver still—what seems to me monstrous—is that a peace conference brought together to settle the question of the entire world has, upon the orders of the English Government, refused to hear the Egyptian delegation, composed, as you well know, of the president of the Chamber of Deputies of that country, of members of Parliament, of representatives of the intellectual classes, and of Egyptian notables. And by refusing to hear them you have precipitated Egypt into the only path left open to it—the path of violence!

"I ask you, M. the president of the council, how can Egypt otherwise get out of the situation in which you have placed it? Yes; by your attitude and your decisions you have decreed for that country violence and revolution.

"You said of Egypt that its inhabitants were pacific and docile—too docile, perhaps. A heap of iniquities have indeed been necessary to provoke the revolt of such a peaceable race.

"How is it possible to better such a situation? Is there any means of doing so? To whom should the Egyptian national representatives apply? They already have tried all the means at their disposal.

"The vice president of the Chamber of Deputies and several of his colleagues have been imprisoned simply because they wanted to come to Europe to be heard by a delegation of the peace conference. And never at any single moment has this conference been willing to listen to them.

"More than that, the Egyptian Army has been utilized during the war to occupy Hedjaz. The Egyptian armies have been equally employed to occupy Soudan and put a stop to the German maneuvers. To-day at the conference of the peace, the King of Hedjaz is received—a King entirely of English manufacture created in order that England might have an additional vote. And this King, who has just come into existence, who represents a country inhabited exclusively by nomadic tribes—this King has been given the right to sign a treaty in which a protectorate has been imposed on the neighboring Egyptian people.

"To this point have you gone in your injustices toward Egypt, and yet, M. le president of the council, when you delivered the speech that I have recalled—on the question of Egypt and the Anglo-French relations—you concluded by saying: 'Assuredly if the end of the Anglo-French alliance such as it has been depicted to us and such as it would be applied in practice was to organize with our aid the slavery of the Egyptian people and to reduce them to the position of an inferior race, I would repudiate it with the greatest energy, and I would say to our pretended allies—to our accomplices, I should call them—that I refund my share of responsibility in such a reprehensible undertaking.'

"Thirty years ago you expressed yourself in this manner. Since then Egypt has progressed; it has come closer and closer to European civilization. And you want to-day to make us share the responsibility for the crime committed against Egypt in the peace treaty. For my part, I will not lend myself to it. Besides, I am certain that the English people repudiating English bourgeois traditions [applause on some benches of the extreme left] and united with the French people, will soon redress the injustice and the crime that you are committing by once more enslaving Egypt. [Applause at extreme left.]"

AMERICAN VIEWS.

"President Wilson, in his great address at Mount Vernon, the home of Washington, on July 4, 1918, said:

"'There can be but one issue. The settlement must be final. There can be no compromise. No half-way decision would be tolerable. No half-way decision is conceivable. These are the ends for which the associated peoples of the world are fighting, and which must be conceded them before there can be peace. * * * The settlement of every question, whether of territory or sovereignty or economic arrangement or of political relationship upon the basis of the free acceptance of that settlement by the people immediately concerned and not upon the basis of the material interest or advantage of any other nation or people which may desire a different settlement for the sake of its own influence or mastery. * * * What we seek is the reign of law based upon the consent of the governed and sustained by the organized opinion of mankind.' [Italics ours.]

"Shall Egypt, without the consent of the Egyptians, be turned over to England for the sake of England's influence or mastery?

"In the 14 points advanced by President Wilson we find the following pertinent and applicable provisions:

"'Point 14. A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guarantees of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small States alike.' [Italics ours.]

"This principle applied to Egypt would lead to a conclusion directly opposite to the indorsement of the British seizure of Egypt and destruction of Egypt's independence.

"Applying the principle of the seventh point to Egypt and only substituting the word 'Egypt' for 'Belgium,' the seventh point would read:

"'Egypt, the whole world will agree, must be evacuated and restored without any attempt to limit the sovereignty which she enjoys in common with all other free nations. No other single act will serve as this will serve to restore confidence among the nations in the laws which they have themselves set and determined for the government of their relations with one another. Without this healing act the whole structure and validity of international law is forever impaired.' [Italics ours.]"

—

THE QUESTION OF EGYPT.

[From the Washington Post, Thursday, Oct. 16, 1919.]

"The question of Egypt's status is brought to the front by Senator OWEN's proposed reservation—interpretative resolution—to the peace treaty. The fact that this reservation—resolution—is offered by a Democrat, a strong supporter of the President, increases the weight of the objections which are finding voice in the United States against the snuffing out of the principle of self-determination of well-defined nationalities. President Wilson gained the support of liberty-loving men throughout the world when he set forth that principle and announced that it would be made effective at Paris. In so far as the conference adhered to this principle its work was good and permanent, and wherever the principle was violated there have been disorders and threats of war.

"Senator OWEN's proposed reservation (resolution), provides that the British protectorate over Egypt shall be recognized as merely a means through which the nominal suzerainty of Turkey over Egypt shall be transferred to the Egyptian people, and shall not be construed to mean recognition by the United States of British sovereignty over the Egyptian people.

"The story of British ascendancy over Egypt, now apparently to culminate in the extinction of self-government, is comparatively brief. The first occupation by British troops was in 1882 and the ostensible object was to suppress a rebellion against the Khedive. The occupation was to be only temporary, according to Premier Gladstone. He declared that England had given 'specific and solemn pledges to the world' that it would not annex Egypt, and he added that these pledges had earned for England the confidence of Europe. Evidently there was no intention at that time to absorb Egypt. Yet the troops were not withdrawn, and have never been withdrawn, notwithstanding the persistent efforts of the Egyptian people to recover the practical independence they had enjoyed.

"After the World War began the British Government removed the Khedive and appointed another, as a war measure, and announced that Egypt was placed under a British protectorate. The Egyptian people might have been alarmed by this had not King George himself sent a letter to the Egyptians, telling them that the change was but a step toward the complete independence of the people, and that the protectorate would endure only during the war period. This reassurance was satisfactory, and the Egyptians joined the Allies heartily, furnishing troops and large numbers of laborers who built the railroads, pipe lines, and other military works in Palestine and elsewhere.

"When the armistice was signed the Egyptians believed the day of their national independence to be at hand. They sent a commission to Paris to attend the peace conference and to arrange for recognition of the independence of Egypt. But the leaders of this commission were seized by British officers and deported to Malta, where they were placed in a German prison camp.

"From that hour there has been a smoldering volcano of revolt in Egypt. The people have had several serious clashes with British soldiers in which machine guns have quelled popular uprisings. In the meantime Great Britain has obtained from President Wilson a conditional recognition of the protectorate over Egypt, and in the peace treaty is a clause requiring Germany to recognize the protectorate.

"The intentions of Great Britain toward Egypt are somewhat confused in the minds of other Governments on account of conflicting statements issued by British authority. When the Egyptian question was before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations on September 2, the British Embassy here made public a statement declaring that 'the British Government has carefully avoided destroying Egyptian sovereignty,' and that the British flag in Egypt covered only British military establishments. But the British foreign office a few days later announced that Great Britain had succeeded to the sovereignty of Turkey over Egypt and had acquired Egypt as spoils of war, apparently discarding the pledge of King George and developing a new policy of permanent control over Egypt.

"It may be that unfortunately worded or unauthorized statements by British officials are at the bottom of the public confusion. In that case a clear reaffirmation of Britain's intention to relinquish the protectorate and restore Egypt to its people as soon as the peace treaty is ratified would remove all apprehension. In the meantime, taking the treaty as it finds it, the Senate will doubtless adopt a reservation on the lines suggested by Senator OWEN, for it is quite evident that the United States can not consistently subscribe to a general principle of self-determination and independence of nations and yet concur in the involuntary absorption of Egypt by Great Britain."

—

EGYPTIAN BETRAYAL THE MOST HEINOUS OF THE REACTIONIST WRONGS.

[By George H. Shibley.]

"The case of the people of Egypt is a betrayal the most heinous of the reactionist wrongs.

"On December 21, 1914, five months after the opening of the war, the British Liberal Government, after deposing the Egyptian Khedive and placing in office a Sultan of their own choosing, spoke as follows to the people of Egypt in the name of the King of England:

"'I feel convinced that you [the new Sultan] will be able, with the cooperation of your ministers and the protectorate of Great Britain, to overcome all influences which are seeking to destroy the independence of Egypt * * *.' (London Times.)

"And yet the so-called peace conference of the allied coalition governments has actually refused to the 13,000,000 Egyptians their independence under the protection of the league of nations, and the British Reactionist Government has shot down hundreds of the Egyptians who had the manhood to assert their lawfully established rights, won in part of the lives and the sacrifices of we Americans!

—

EGYPT'S SOVEREIGNTY VIOLATED.

[By Herbert Adams Gibbons, sometime fellow of Princeton University, author of the New Map of Europe, the New Map of Asia, the New Map of Africa, etc.]

"The 'interpretative resolutions' presented by Senator OWEN in the Senate on Tuesday greatly encourage liberal thinkers, who are dissatisfied with the treaty at Versailles not for party or internal but for international reasons. Senator OWEN is a Democrat and a loyal supporter of the administration. He makes it clear that he intends to vote for ratifying the treaty without amendment or reservation. But he feels that the Senate, while unqualifiedly accepting the document from a technical point of view, should not fail to let the world know how the United States stands in regard to many of its provisions.

"Senator OWEN wants the United States to start to work immediately for a change in the league covenant that will give freedom to subject States capable of self-government. Senator OWEN mentions specifically a great wrong done to a sovereign State by the treaty of Versailles.

"'That the protectorate which Germany recognizes in Great Britain over Egypt,' reads the Owen resolution, 'is understood to be merely a means through which the nominal suzerainty of Turkey over Egypt shall be transformed to the Egyptian people and shall not be construed as a recognition by the United States in Great Britain of any sovereign rights over the Egyptian people or as depriving the people of Egypt of any right of self-government.'

"This resolution is apt to displease British public opinion, and Senator OWEN may be accused of indulging in the old sport of twisting the lion's tail. But the accusation is unfounded. If we allowed our natural sentiments of affection for our kinsmen overseas to keep us silent at this time, we should find them getting away with a lot of booty—and ourselves unconsciously or unthinkingly giving sanction to high-handed and unjustified acts of oppression and international robbery. We can not be too strong in our condemnation, for instance, of the Anglo-Persian treaty, concluded secretly by intimidation and bribery at the very moment we are asked to give our cooperation to a society of nations which Persia is invited to join.

"The case of Egypt stands out with remarkable clearness. It is one of the few moot questions of the treaty of Versailles which has not two sides. The British protectorate over Egypt is an illegal action, not only violating the sovereignty of Egypt, but also the promises officially made by generations of British statesmen. No denial of this fact is possible. Open any history or go to British official correspondence published by the British foreign office and you will read the repeated assurances given to the Egyptians and to the other powers that Great Britain did not intend to stay in Egypt and would not establish a protectorate over Egypt.

"The excuse for not hearing the representatives of Egypt at the peace conference was that the question of Egypt did not come within the scope of the conference. If this were valid, why did the treaty of Versailles mention Egypt? And what right had the powers to deal with Egyptian questions at all? But Egypt did enter within the scope of the conference, because it was a country whose status had been changed by the war and during the war. Technically, as well as morally, the Egyptians had as much right to participation in the conference as the Arabs of the Hedjaz, and more right to independence, for Egypt was only nominally under the suzerainty of Turkey. By her declaration of war against Turkey, the bond of vassalage was broken. Ipso facto Egypt was independent.

"But the British, who were occupying the country, proclaimed—without taking into their confidence the Egyptian legislative assembly or asking the consent of the Egyptian people—their protectorate over Egypt. In war what is expedient is justifiable. Although formally protesting against this violation of pledges given and reiterated, the Egyptians cooperated loyally with the British throughout the war, waiting for the peace conference to decide upon the legality of British action. The prime minister, who consented to serve the new régime and who continued in office throughout the war, told me when I was in Cairo in 1916 that he was simply waiting until the end of the war to hold the British to their promises. After the armistice Rushdi Pasha asked to be allowed to go to London to take up the matter of the status of Egypt with the British. Permission was refused. A rigorous censorship was maintained. The Egyptians were held prisoners in their own country.

"Rushdi Pasha and the entire cabinet resigned. A period of military dictatorship began. When the elected representatives of the Egyptian people asked for passports to proceed to Paris, the British suddenly arrested without warrant or warning the president of the delegation and three of its leaders and deported them to Malta. This led to the insurrection put down by machine guns and burning of villages. The British used the means of suppressing what they called 'rebellion' which the world roundly condemned the Germans for in Belgium. Finally, force of Egyptian public opinion compelled the release of the delegates and the granting of passports for Paris. But the Egyptian delegation, after its arrival in Paris, was never heard by the conference. The stipulation compelling Germany to recognize the British protectorate was inserted in the treaty of Versailles in defiance of the basic principle President Wilson had declared would be followed in making peace. A whole nation was robbed of its sovereignty and its international status changed against its will and, without having been heard, Egypt was Shantung over again.

"I would not have my readers think that I am writing without knowledge of the facts. A White Book has just been published by the Egyptian delegation, which contains documents setting forth the history of the past year. The British foreign office does not deny the authenticity of these documents. As for the men deported to Malta, I know them personally. No foreigner, even a Britisher, who knows Egypt can deny that these men are honorable and capable and that they represent the Egyptian people. The president of the delegation, Zaghoul Pasha, is one of the best loved men in Egypt, a veritable father of his people; Mohammed Mahmoud Pasha, a graduate of Oxford, was formerly governor of the Suez Canal. The other members of the delegation include the Sheik of the Arabs of the Fayoum, the foremost landowners and lawyers in Egypt, and the librarian of the National Library. They are the cream of the Christian element and the Greek Orthodox and Catholic element, as well as the Mohammedan element. The Egyptians are united, irrespective of creed, in their determination not to be bartered from one sovereignty to another like cattle." * * *

NATIONAL PROHIBITION.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, apropos of the final passage of the prohibition bill I send to the desk an editorial from the New York Tribune entitled "Cold Water Strikes." This editorial is short, and I ask that it may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

"COLD WATER STRIKES.

"The World published on Sunday an article on the steel strike which contains this notable piece of information:

"Making all allowance for the disorders of the past few days, no strike in the steel industry and few strikes of such extent in any other industry have been so free from violence.

"Partly this is because the men have shown an extraordinary inclination to good behavior, which speaks well indeed for their leaders, since the great majority of the men are so new in their union that they have had a chance to know little if anything of the discipline that is instilled into older men.

"More, however, is due to the fact that the prohibition laws are being enforced in the Pittsburgh district. If the men had been able to get liquor there would unquestionably have been a very different story to tell. If they should come to be able to get liquor there still might be a very different story. There is no shadow, even, of disagreement among the authorities as to this, and the authorities immediately in charge of the situation are men who have lived among strikers all their lives.

"To prohibition must be added the Pennsylvania State Constabulary. The combination of alcoholic drought and that splendidly efficient and fearless force is too strong for even twice the number of men now on strike to overcome.

"Our neighbor has not taken kindly to the cold-water régime. But that régime is a soothing factor in times of passion and disturbance. A very large share of the violence accompanying strikes has been due to whisky. The extreme labor leaders are all protesting against the dry era. Most of them possibly realize that a powerful inciter to disorder is mustered out when the saloon is closed. If we must have strikes it will be far better to have them conducted hereafter on a half of 1 per cent basis."

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, in connection with the editorial just read, I ask that there may be inserted in the RECORD without reading an editorial in the Christian Science Monitor of October 28 under the title of "The President's Veto." I wish to say that I think this editorial states the situation very clearly and very fairly, and with the conclusions of the editorial I am in hearty accord. I think it states the legal situation conclusively.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S VETO.

"It is almost incomprehensible that at a time when the country is faced with perhaps the gravest economic dispute which has engaged attention in the history of the Republic, the President should have vetoed the enforcement bill passed by large majorities through both Houses of Congress, with a view to assisting the officers of the law in carrying out the prohibition act. If there were any doubt as to the temper of the Nation in this matter of prohibition, the President's action might be more easily understood, but the passage of the constitutional amendment was so obviously the will of the people, that it is difficult to see why Mr. Wilson should attempt to stand between the brewers and the enforcement of the law. Mr. Wilson argues that demobilization has taken place, and, therefore, that there is no necessity for enforcement. But the law for war-time prohibition stands upon the statute book, and, unless it is repealed by Congress, will continue to stand there until national prohibition comes into effect.

"It is quite true, as Mr. Wilson says, that when he was in Paris he requested Congress to repeal the war-time prohibition act. Congress, however, which represents the Nation, and which is peculiarly sensitive to the feeling of the Nation, declined to act on his suggestion. The action of the President, therefore, constitutes something in the nature of a challenge to Congress for having declined to accede to his representations. It must not be forgotten, however, that the President is, after all, an individual, no matter how distinguished, and no matter how worthy of respect, whereas Congress constitutes all the representatives of the Nation in close touch with the electors from one end of the country to the other, and, consequently, enabled to discover the wishes of the people with a sensitiveness of touch to which the President can scarcely lay a personal claim.

"Now, at this very moment, when Mr. Wilson is appealing to the whole Nation, as against the decision of a class to enter upon the coal strike, it seems a little inconsistent to decide in favor of a class against the manifest wishes of the Nation, as repeatedly decided, by overwhelming votes in Congress and in the country. During the late disturbances, such as those in Boston and elsewhere, the authorities responsible for the preservation of order rejoiced with exceeding gladness over the fact that the closing of the saloons had relieved them of one of the worst dangers that face any Government in days of riot. It was the attempt of the mob in Russia to gain the control of the drink cellars which gave the Bolshevist government the most difficult of its many difficult quarters of an hour; and it is to the credit of Lenin, and the act no doubt reacted immensely to his advantage, that he never hesitated in his uncompromising attitude toward the use of any intoxicants. The troops of the Soviet government were employed in wrecking the cellars of Petrograd and Moscow at the most critical moment, perhaps, in the history of the Bolshevist government, and the determination and thoroughness with which this destruction was carried through was, most unquestionably, largely responsible for the fact that Lenin was able to maintain his control.

"Mr. Wilson, it is true, draws a distinct line between enforcement of war-time prohibition and national prohibition, but, as has been pointed out, war-time prohibition is still the law of the country, and, being the law of the country, its enforcement is a duty. The drink interests have used every argument to prove that the act ought to lapse because the war is at an end; but the war is not at an end, and even if the Senate should agree forthwith to the treaty with Germany, the fact would not be altered that the treaty with Austria would remain to be considered. In these circumstances it is not surprising that the House, which knows exactly the feeling of the country in the matter, should have replied to the President's veto by re-enacting its decision by the necessary two-thirds majority. So that the matter now rests finally with the Senate. When it is to be remembered that the Senate declined the President's request to repeal war-time prohibition by 55 votes to 11, it would seem that there can not be any doubt whatever as to its action on the present occasion. There is not a Senator who is not as aware as any Representative of the earnestness of the Nation in this matter, and the men who by so huge a majority deliberately declined to consider the repeal of war-time prohibition are scarcely likely to be induced to support the veto.

"The only result of supporting this veto would, indeed, be to make the duties of the Department of Justice more arduous in enforcing the act, which would remain law in spite of the veto. There is no doubt that the agencies which are now attempting secretly to evade the law would feel themselves supported in evincing a tolerably open disregard for it if the Senate were to hesitate in its duty. But this would not remove the responsibility of the Department of Justice for the enforcement of the law, and the curious spectacle would be witnessed of the officers of the law endeavoring to enforce a law the means of doing which effectively had been refused them by the President with the support of the Senate. Such an action might enable a certain section of the public to celebrate a 'wet' Christmas, in the enjoyment of 2.75 per cent beer, combined with a more or less surreptitious resort to the large stocks of alcoholic drinks which are still in existence in the country. No doubt certain saloon keepers would feel supported in their determination to break the law, in their belief of the inability of the officers of the law to enforce the law. But this would not redound particularly to the credit of anyone concerned, even though it might be in strict accord with the boast of the liquor interests that they have always defied the law. Indeed, the defiance of the law by the liquor interests, in conjunction with their consistent contributions to the populating of prisons and reformatories, will constitute their chief future claim to historical recognition.

"Such being the facts of the case, it can hardly be doubted that the Senate will show it is at one with the Nation in rejecting the President's veto. And it should certainly do this with the utmost celerity in order that there may be no incitement to or encouragement of the misguided saloon keeper to pit himself against the law in the belief that there is no means of enforcing it."

ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION FOR EX-SOLDIERS.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I ask permission to have printed in the RECORD certain resolutions of the Board of Commissioners of the City of Long Branch, N. J., urging Congress to grant additional compensation, in the way of Government bonds or otherwise, to the men lately in the armed forces of the United States.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

I, Alonzo D. Sherman, city clerk of the city of Long Branch, do hereby certify that the following resolution was adopted at a regular meeting of the Board of Commissioners of the City of Long Branch held on October 21, 1919, and is part of the records of such meeting as remain on file in the office of the city clerk:

"Whereas it is fitting and proper that the character and spirit of the patriotic services of the soldiers and sailors and marines of the United States in the World War be appropriately recognized and that their financial sacrifices be in a measure, at least, repaid; and

"Whereas the men who made up the armed forces of the United States came from each State of the Union, and therefore their services and sacrifices should be recognized and provided for by the Federal Government in order to assure all a uniform and adequate compensation so far as possible; and

"Whereas many of the men who served their country sustained financial losses which they could not afford and in consequence thereof are now in actual need owing to the high prices of necessities and the facts that they were not able to save anything from their meager pay after insurance cost and allotments were deducted and have not, in many instances, been able to secure regular and remunerative employment; and

"Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a bill, introduced by Hon. MARVIN JONES, which provides that each man in service shall receive a $50 4 per cent Government bond for each month or major fractional month that he served in such war; and

"Whereas such provision would be more substantial recognition than this or any other State contemplates, and could be given sooner: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the City Commission of the City of Long Branch, N. J., That the Congress of the United States be respectfully requested and urged to enact such bill or one of the other pending measures granting equally liberal compensation into law at the earliest possible moment, and that each United States Senator of this State and the Congressman from this congressional district be earnestly asked to use his best efforts to secure the early enactment of such measure; and be it further

"Resolved, That a suitable copy of this resolution, properly attested, be transmitted to the presiding officer of each House of Congress and to the United States Senators from this State and the Representative of this district in the House of Representatives, and that Hon. JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN, senior Senator from this State, and Hon. THOMAS J. SCULLY, Member of the House of Representatives from this district, be requested to have same read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD."

Dated, Long Branch, N. J., October 22, 1919.

[SEAL.] A. D. SHERMAN, City Clerk.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR RAILROAD EQUIPMENT.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration the bill (S. 3319) to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control, and for other purposes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can we not dispose of morning business and then take up the bill at the close of the routine business?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no opportunity to do it save in the morning hour.

Mr. FLETCHER. I know; but the regular order is reports of committees.

Mr. CUMMINS. This is a measure which is exceedingly urgent—it is imperative—but if the Senator from Florida objects, there is no other course.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask to proceed with the regular order, and after we get through with the routine business the bill can be taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Reports of committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3621) to establish load lines for certain vessels, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 282) thereon.

Mr. DILLINGHAM, from the Committee on Immigration, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6750) to deport certain undesirable aliens and to deny readmission to those deported, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 283) thereon.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 1275) awarding a medal of honor to George Murphy, late private, United States Marine Corps, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 1742) to correct the naval record of Reuben E. Lawrence, submitted an adverse report (No. 281) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

SUSAN F. BURDINE.

Mr. CALDER. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 130, submitted by myself on July 22, 1919, I report it back favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Susan F. Burdine, widow of William T. Burdine, late a private of the Capitol police force, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

OFFICERS OF THE COAST GUARD.

Mr. LODGE. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 3202) granting leave of absence to officers of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment of the committee was, in line 4, after the words "leave of absence," to insert "without pay," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to grant leave of absence without pay to such officer or officers of the United States Coast Guard as he may deem advisable, and to permit him or them to accept employment with the Venezuelan Government with such compensation and emoluments as may be agreed upon between the Venezuelan Government and such officer or officers thus granted leave of absence.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the letter from the Secretary of State and the letter from the Secretary of the Treasury recommending the passage of the bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letters referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, October 28, 1919.

The Hon. H. C. LODGE,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Relations,
United States Senate.

SIR: Referring to your letter of the 18th instant and to Senate bill 3202, granting leave of absence to an officer or officers of the United States Coast Guard, concerning which you request the department's opinion, I have the honor to say that in the interest of good relations between the Government of the United States and the Government of Venezuela I approve of any legislation which will make the granting of leave of absence possible to enable an officer or officers of the United States Coast Guard to accept employment with the Venezuelan Government.

In this relation I have the honor to inclose a copy of a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury dated October 4, 1919, expressing approval of this proposed legislation.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,

ROBERT LANSING.

Inclosure: Copy of letter from Secretary of Treasury.

—

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OCTOBER 4, 1919.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF STATE.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of September 29, 1919, stating that a request was made by the Venezuelan Government, through the American Legation in Caracas, to obtain the services of an American naval officer as superintendent of construction in the national navy yard and dry dock at Puerto Cabello, Venezuela, and that the application of Captain of Engineers F. E. Fitch, United States Coast Guard, for the position of technical director of this navy yard has been approved by the Government of Venezuela. It is noted that the State Department, desiring to increase American influence in Venezuela at the present time, would be glad to have favorable consideration of Capt. Fitch's application for permission to take the position.

This department, wishing to comply with the request of the Department of State in this matter, is disposed to grant Captain of Engineers Fitch leave of absence for a reasonable period to enable him to perform the duty stated under the Venezuelan Government.

It would appear, in view of the provisions of Article I, section 9, of the Constitution, that it will be necessary to obtain the consent of Congress in order to permit this officer to accept office under the Venezuelan Government. This department will approve legislation suitable to the case.

Respectfully,

CARTER GLASS, Secretary.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 3329) to authorize an advance to the "reclamation fund" for the prompt completion of drainage work on the Rio Grande project (Texas-New Mexico), and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 3330) granting an increase of pension to John F. Early; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3331) granting the consent of Congress to the Interstate Construction Corporation to construct a bridge across the Columbia River between the States of Oregon and Washington at or within 2 miles westerly from Cascade Locks, in the State of Oregon, and granting a license to construct and maintain the approach to said bridge over property belonging to the Government of the United States; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. NEW:

A bill (S. 3348) to create a Department of Air, defining the powers and duties of the director thereof, providing for the organization, disposition, and administration of a United States Air Force, creating the United States Air Reserve Force, and providing for the development of civil and commercial aviation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 3332) granting the consent of Congress to the board of county commissioners of the county of Hartford, in the State of Connecticut, to construct a bridge across the Connecticut River, between Windsor Locks and East Windsor, at Warehouse Point, in said county and State; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3333) granting an increase of pension to Louisa A. Thomas (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CURTIS:

A bill (S. 3334) to encourage reciprocity in trade relations; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

A bill (S. 3335) granting an increase of pension to Capitola V. Harsh (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3336) granting an increase of pension to Melissa E. Longdon (with accompanying papers);

A bill (S. 3337) granting an increase of pension to Jacob W. Robinson (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3338) granting a pension to Starks W. Johnson (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

A bill (S. 3339) granting a pension to Cordelia L. Marsters;

A bill (S. 3340) granting a pension to Emma J. McCumsey;

A bill (S. 3341) granting a pension to Isabella C. Weber;

A bill (S. 3342) granting a pension to Amelia E. Drake;

A bill (S. 3343) granting a pension to George W. Wells;

A bill (S. 3344) granting an increase of pension to Roscoe E. Paschal;

A bill (S. 3345) granting an increase of pension to Stephen S. Joyce;

A bill (S. 3346) granting an increase of pension to John McDonald; and

A bill (S. 3347) granting an increase of pension to Howard G. Cleaveland; to the Committee on Pensions.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—CATHERINE SMITH.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 1473, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, granting a pension to Catherine Smith, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE ARMISTICE AGREEMENTS (S. DOC. NO. 147).

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, there is a good deal of inquiry for the documents, and as I have succeeded in securing them I ask to have printed the terms of the armistice agreements concluded between the allied and associated Governments and the Governments of Germany, Austria-Hungary, and Bulgaria. It is the text of the different armistices. They are brief. I should state that in the case of three of them between Germany and Austria-Hungary it is the English text laid before Parliament. The other one is taken from the French text as laid before the French Chamber, and I have had it translated into English. I ask that they be printed in the RECORD and also printed as a document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator desire to have them printed as a Senate document or as a public document?

Mr. LODGE. As a public document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Massachusetts will be complied with.

The armistice agreements are as follows:

TERMS OF THE ARMISTICE AGREEMENTS CONCLUDED BETWEEN THE ALLIED AND ASSOCIATED GOVERNMENTS AND THE GOVERNMENTS OF GERMANY, AUSTRIA-HUNGARY, AND BULGARIA.

Terms of armistice with Germany 11th November, 1918.

Between Marshal Foch, commander in chief of the allied armies, acting in the name of the allied and associated powers, with Admiral Wemyss, first sea lord, on the one hand and

Herr Erzberger, secretary of state, president of the German delegation,
Count von Oberndorff, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary,
Major General von Winterfeldt,
Captain Vanselow (German Navy), duly empowered and acting with the concurrence of the German chancellor on the other hand.

An armistice has been concluded on the following conditions:

Conditions of the armistice concluded with Germany.

A. CLAUSES RELATING TO THE WESTERN FRONT.

I. Cessation of hostilities by land and in the air 6 hours after the signing of the armistice.

II. Immediate evacuation of the invaded countries—Belgium, France, Luxemburg, as well as Alsace-Lorraine—so ordered as to be completed within 15 days from the signature of the armistice.

German troops which have not left the above-mentioned territories within the period fixed shall be made prisoners of war.

Occupation by the allied and United States forces jointly shall keep pace with the evacuation in these areas.

All movements of evacuation and occupation shall be regulated in accordance with a note (annexe 1) determined at the time of the signing of the armistice.

III. Repatriation, beginning at once, to be completed within 15 days, of all inhabitants of the countries above enumerated (including hostages, persons under trial, or condemned).

IV. Surrender in good condition by the German armies of the following equipment:

5,000 guns (2,500 heavy, 2,500 field).
25,000 machine guns.
3,000 trench mortars.
1,700 aeroplanes (fighters, bombers—firstly all D. 7's and night-bombing machines).

The above to be delivered in situ to the allied and United States troops in accordance with the detailed conditions laid down in the note (annexe 1) determined at the time of the signing of the armistice.

V. Evacuation by the German armies of the districts on the left bank of the Rhine. These districts on the left bank of the Rhine shall be administered by the local authorities under the control of the allied and United States armies of occupation.

The occupation of these territories by allied and United States troops shall be assured by garrisons holding the principal crossings of the Rhine (Mainz, Coblenz, Cologne), together with bridgeheads at these points of a 30-kilometre (about 19 miles) radius on the right bank and by garrisons similarly holding the strategic points of the area.

A neutral zone shall be reserved on the right bank of the Rhine, between the river and a line drawn parallel to the bridgeheads and to the river and 10 kilometres (6¼ miles) distant from them, between the Dutch frontier and the Swiss frontier.

The evacuation by the enemy of the Rhine districts (right and left banks) shall be so ordered as to be completed within a further period of 16 days, in all 31 days after the signing of the armistice.

All movements of evacuation and occupation shall be regulated according to the note (Annexe 1) determined at the time of the signing of the armistice.

VI. In all territories evacuated by the enemy, evacuation of the inhabitants shall be forbidden; no damage or harm shall be done to the persons or property of the inhabitants.

No person shall be prosecuted for having taken part in any military measures previous to the signing of the armistice.

No destruction of any kind shall be committed.

Military establishments of all kinds shall be delivered intact, as well as military stores, food, munitions, and equipment, which shall not have been removed during the periods fixed for evacuation.

Stores of food of all kinds for the civil population, cattle, etc., shall be left in situ.

No measure of a general character shall be taken, and no official order shall be given which would have as a consequence the depreciation of industrial establishments or a reduction of their personnel.

VII. Roads and means of communications of every kind, railroads, waterways, roads, bridges, telegraphs, telephones, shall be in no manner impaired.

All civil and military personnel at present employed on them shall remain.

Five thousand locomotives and 150,000 wagons, in good working order, with all necessary spare parts and fittings, shall be delivered to the associated powers within the period fixed in Annexe No. 2 (not exceeding 31 days in all).

Five thousand motor lorries are also to be delivered in good condition within 36 days.

The railways of Alsace-Lorraine shall be handed over within 31 days, together with all personnel and material belonging to the organization of this system.

Further, the necessary working material in the territories on the left bank of the Rhine shall be left in situ.

All stores of coal and material for the upkeep of permanent way, signals, and repair shops shall be left in situ and kept in an efficient state by Germany, so far as the working of the means of communication on the left bank of the Rhine is concerned.

All lighters taken from the Allies shall be restored to them.

The note attached as Annex 2 defines the details of these measures.

VIII. The German command shall be responsible for revealing within 48 hours after the signing of the armistice all mines or delayed-action fuses disposed on territories evacuated by the German troops and shall assist in their discovery and destruction.

The German command shall also reveal all destructive measures that may have been taken (such as poisoning or pollution of wells, springs, etc.).

Breaches of these clauses will involve reprisals.

IX. The right of requisition shall be exercised by the allied and United States armies in all occupied territories, save for settlement of accounts with authorized persons.

The upkeep of the troops of occupation in the Rhine districts (excluding Alsace-Lorraine) shall be charged to the German Government.

X. The immediate repatriation, without reciprocity, according to detailed conditions which shall be fixed, of all allied and United States prisoners of war, including those under trial and condemned. The allied powers and the United States of America shall be able to dispose of these prisoners as they think fit. This condition annuls all other conventions regarding prisoners of war, including that of July, 1918, now being ratified. However, the return of German prisoners of war interned in Holland and Switzerland shall continue as heretofore. The return of German prisoners of war shall be settled at the conclusion of the peace preliminaries.

XI. Sick and wounded who can not be removed from territory evacuated by the German forces shall be cared for by German personnel, who shall be left on the spot with the material required.

B. CAUSES RELATING TO THE EASTERN FRONTIERS OF GERMANY.

XII. All German troops at present in any territory which before the war formed part of Austria-Hungary, Roumania, or Turkey shall withdraw within the frontiers of Germany as they existed on 1st August, 1914, and all German troops at present in territories which before the war formed part of Russia must likewise return to within the frontiers of Germany as above defined as soon as the Allies shall think the moment suitable, having regard to the internal situation of these territories.

XIII. Evacuation of German troops to begin at once, and all German instructors, prisoners, and agents, civilian as well as military, now on the territory of Russia (frontiers as defined on 1st August, 1914) to be recalled.

XIV. German troops to cease at once all requisitions and seizures and any other coercive measures with a view to obtaining supplies intended for Germany in Roumania and Russia (frontiers as defined 1st August, 1914).

XV. Annulment of the treaties of Bucharest and Brest-Litovsk and of the supplementary treaties.

XVI. The Allies shall have free access to the territories evacuated by the Germans on their eastern frontier, either through Danzig or by the Vistula, in order to convey supplies to the populations of these territories or for the purpose of maintaining order.

C. CLAUSE RELATING TO EAST AFRICA.

XVII. Evacuation of all German forces operating in East Africa within a period specified by the Allies.

D. GENERAL CLAUSES.

XVIII. Repatriation without reciprocity, within a maximum period of one month, in accordance with detailed conditions hereafter to be fixed, of all interned civilians, including hostages and persons under trial and condemned, who may be subjects of Allied or Associated States other than those mentioned in Clause III.

FINANCIAL CLAUSES.

XIX. With the reservation that any subsequent concessions and claims by the Allies and United States remain unaffected, the following financial conditions are imposed:

Reparation for damage done.

While the armistice lasts no public securities shall be removed by the enemy which can serve as a pledge to the Allies to cover reparation for war losses.

Immediate restitution of the cash deposit in the National Bank of Belgium and, in general, immediate return of all documents, specie, stocks, shares, paper money, together with plant for the issue thereof, affecting public or private interests in the invaded countries.

Restitution of the Russian and Roumanian gold yielded to Germany or taken by that power.

This gold to be delivered in trust to the Allies until peace is concluded.

E. NAVAL CONDITIONS.

XX. Immediate cessation of all hostilities at sea, and definite information to be given as to the position and movements of all German ships.

Notification to be given to neutrals that freedom of navigation in all territorial waters is given to the navies and mercantile marines of the allied and associated powers, all questions of neutrality being waived.

XXI. All naval and mercantile marine prisoners of war of the allied and associated powers in German hands to be returned without reciprocity.

XXII. To surrender at the ports specified by the Allies and the United States all submarines at present in existence (including all submarine cruisers and mine layers), with armament and equipment complete. Those that can not put to sea shall be deprived of armament and equipment and shall remain under the supervision of the Allies and the United States. Submarines ready to put to sea shall be prepared to leave German ports immediately on receipt of a wireless order to sail to the port of surrender, the remainder to follow as early as possible. The conditions of this article shall be completed within 14 days of the signing of the armistice.

XXIII. The following German surface warships, which shall be designated by the Allies and the United States of America, shall forthwith be disarmed and thereafter interned in neutral ports, or, failing them, allied ports, to be designated by the Allies and the United States of America, and placed under the surveillance of the Allies and the United States of America, only care and maintenance parties being left on board, namely:

6 battle cruisers.
10 battleships.
8 light cruisers (including two mine layers).
50 destroyers of the most modern type.

All other surface warships (including river craft) are to be concentrated in German naval bases, to be designated by the Allies and the United States of America, completely disarmed and placed under the supervision of the Allies and the United States of America. All vessels of the auxiliary fleet are to be disarmed. All vessels specified for internment shall be ready to leave German ports seven days after the signing of the armistice. Directions for the voyage shall be given by wireless.

XXIV. The Allies and the United States of America shall have the right to sweep up all mine fields and destroy all obstructions laid by Germany outside German territorial waters, and the positions of these are to be indicated.

XXV. Freedom of access to and from the Baltic to be given to the navies and mercantile marines of the allied and associated powers. This to be secured by the occupation of all German forts, fortifications, batteries, and defence works of all kinds in all the routes from the Cattegat into the Baltic, and by the sweeping up and destruction of all mines and obstructions within and without German territorial waters without any questions of neutrality being raised by Germany, and the positions of all such mines and obstructions to be indicated, and the plans relating thereto are to be supplied.

XXVI. The existing blockade conditions set up by the allied and associated powers are to remain unchanged, and all German merchant ships found at sea are to remain liable to capture. The Allies and United States contemplate the provisioning of Germany during the armistice as shall be found necessary.

XXVII. All aerial forces are to be concentrated and immobilized in German bases to be specified by the Allies and the United States of America.

XXVIII. In evacuating the Belgian coasts and ports, Germany shall abandon, in situ and intact, the port material and material for inland waterways; also all merchant ships, tugs and lighters, all naval aircraft and air materials and stores, all arms and armaments, and all stores and apparatus of all kinds.

XXIX. All Black Sea ports are to be evacuated by Germany; all Russian warships of all descriptions seized by Germany in the Black Sea are to be handed over to the Allies and the United States of America; all neutral merchant ships seized in the Black Sea are to be released; all warlike and other materials of all kinds seized in those ports are to be returned, and the German materials as specified in Clause XXVIII are to be abandoned.

XXX. All merchant ships at present in German hands belonging to the allied and associated powers are to be restored to ports specified by the Allies and the United States of America without reciprocity.

XXXI. No destruction of ships or of materials to be permitted before evacuation, surrender, or restoration.

XXXII. The German Government shall formally notify all the neutral governments, and particularly the Governments of Norway, Sweden, Denmark, and Holland, that all restrictions placed on the trading of their vessels with the allied and associated countries, whether by the German Government or by private German interests, and whether in return for specific concessions, such as the export of shipbuilding materials, or not, are immediately cancelled.

XXXIII. No transfers of German merchant shipping of any description to any neutral flag are to take place after signature of the armistice.

F. DURATION OF ARMISTICE.

XXXIV. The duration of the armistice is to be 36 days, with option to extend. During this period, on failure of execution of any of the above clauses, the armistice may be repudiated by one of the contracting parties on 48 hours' previous notice. It is understood that failure to execute Articles III and XVIII completely in the periods specified is not to give reason for a repudiation of the armistice, save where such failure is due to malice aforethought.

To ensure the execution of the present convention under the most favourable conditions, the principle of a permanent international armistice commission is recognized. This commission shall act under the supreme authority of the high command, military and naval, of the allied armies.

The present armistice was signed on the 11th day of November, 1918, at 5 o'clock a. m. (French time).

(Signed) F. FOCHT.
R. E. WEMYSS.
ERZBERGER.
OBERNDORFF.
WINTERFELDT.
VANSELOW.

—

11TH NOVEMBER, 1918.

The representatives of the Allies declare that, in view of fresh events, it appears necessary to them that the following condition shall be added to the clauses of the armistice:

"In case the German ships are not handed over within the periods specified, the Governments of the Allies and of the United States shall have the right to occupy Heligoland to ensure their delivery."

(Signed) R. E. WEMYSS, Admiral.
F. FOCH.

"The German delegates declare that they will forward this declaration to the German Chancellor, with the recommendation that it be accepted, accompanying it with the reasons by which the Allies have been actuated in making this demand."

(Signed) ERZBERGER.
OBERNDORFF.
WINTERFELDT.
VANSELOW.

—

ANNEXE NO. 1.

I. The evacuation of the invaded territories, Belgium, France, and Luxemburg, and also of Alsace-Lorraine, shall be carried out in three successive stages according to the following conditions:

1st stage.—Evacuation of the territories situated between the existing front and line No. 1 on the enclosed map, to be completed within 5 days after the signature of the armistice.

2nd stage.—Evacuation of territories situated between line No. 1 and line No. 2, to be carried out within 4 further days (9 days in all after the signing of the armistice).

3rd stage.—Evacuation of the territories situated between line No. 2 and line No. 3, to be completed within 6 further days (15 days in all after the signing of the armistice).

Allied and United States troops shall enter these various territories on the expiration of the period allowed to the German troops for the evacuation of each.

In consequence, the allied troops will cross the present German front as from the 6th day following the signing of the armistice, line No. 1 as from the 10th day, and line No. 2 as from the 16th day.

II. Evacuation of the Rhine district.—This evacuation shall also be carried out in several successive stages:

(1) Evacuation of territories situated between lines 2 and 3 and line 4, to be completed within 4 further days (19 days in all after the signing of the armistice).

(2) Evacuation of territories situated between lines 4 and 5 to be completed within 4 days further (23 days in all after the signing of the armistice).

(3) Evacuation of territories situated between lines 5 and 6 (line of the Rhine) to be completed within 4 further days (27 days in all after the signing of the armistice).

(4) Evacuation of the bridgeheads and of the neutral zone on the right bank of the Rhine to be completed within 4 further days (31 days in all after the signing of the armistice).

The allied and United States Army of occupation shall enter these various territories after the expiration of the period allowed to the German troops for the evacuation of each; consequently the Army will cross line No. 3, 20 days after the signing of the armistice. It will cross line No. 4 as from the 24th day after the signing of the armistice; line No. 5 as from the 28th day; line No. 6 (Rhine) the 32d day, in order to occupy the bridgeheads.

III. Surrender by the German Armies of war material specified by the armistice.—This war material shall be surrendered according to the following conditions: The first half before the 10th day, the second half before the 20th day. This material shall be handed over to each of the allied and United States Armies by each larger tactical group of the German Armies in the proportions which may be fixed by the permanent international armistice commission.

—

ANNEXE NO. 2.

Conditions regarding communications, railways, waterways, roads, river and sea ports, and telegraphic and telephonic communications:

I. All communications as far as the Rhine, inclusive, or comprised, on the right bank of this river, within the bridgeheads occupied by the allied armies shall be placed under the supreme and absolute authority of the commander in chief of the allied armies, who shall have the right to take any measure he may think necessary to assure their occupation and use. All documents relative to communications shall be held ready for transmission to him.

II. All the material and all the civil and military personnel at present employed in the maintenance and working of all lines of communication are to be maintained in their entirety upon these lines in all territories evacuated by the German troops.

All supplementary material necessary for the upkeep of these lines of communication in the districts on the left bank of the Rhine shall be supplied by the German Government throughout the duration of the armistice.

III. Personnel.—The French and Belgian personnel belonging to the services of the lines of communication, whether interned or not, are to be returned to the French and Belgian Armies during the 15 days following the signing of the armistice. The personnel belonging to the organization of the Alsace-Lorraine railway system is to be maintained or reinstated in such a way as to ensure the working of the system.

The commander in chief of the allied armies shall have the right to make all changes and substitutions that he may desire in the personnel of the lines of communication.

IV. Material—(a) Rolling stock.—The rolling stock handed over to the allied armies in the zone comprised between the present front and line No. 3, not including Alsace-Lorraine, shall amount at least to 5,000 locomotives and 150,000 wagons. This surrender shall be carried out within the period fixed by clause 7 of the armistice, and under conditions the details of which shall be fixed by the permanent international armistice commission.

All this material is to be in good condition and in working order, with all the ordinary spare parts and fittings. It may be employed together with the regular personnel or with any other upon any part of the railway system of the allied armies.

The material necessary for the working of the Alsace-Lorraine railway system is to be maintained or replaced for the use of the French Army.

The material to be left in situ in the territories on the left bank of the Rhine, as well as that on the inner side of the bridgeheads, must permit of the normal working of the railways in these districts.

(b) Permanent way, signals, and workshops.—The material for signals, machine tools, and tool outfits, taken from the workshops and depots of the French and Belgian lines, are to be replaced under conditions, the details of which are to be arranged by the permanent international armistice commission.

The allied armies are to be supplied with railroad material, rails, incidental fittings, plant, bridge-building material, and timber necessary for the repair of the lines destroyed beyond the present front.

(c) Fuel and maintenance material.—The German Government shall be responsible throughout the duration of the armistice for the release of fuel and maintenance material to the depots normally allotted to the railways in the territories on the left bank of the Rhine.

V. Telegraphic and telephonic communications.—All telegraphs, telephones, and fixed W/T stations are to be handed over to the allied armies, with all the civil and military personnel, and all their material, including all stores on the left bank of the Rhine.

Supplementary stores necessary for the upkeep of the system are to be supplied throughout the duration of the armistice by the German Government according to requirements.

The commander in chief of the allied armies shall place this system under military supervision and shall ensure its control, and shall make all changes and substitutions in personnel which he may think necessary.

He will send back to the German Army all the military personnel who are not in his judgment necessary for the working and upkeep of the railway.

All plans of the German telegraphic and telephonic systems shall be handed over to the commander in chief of the allied armies.

—

Convention prolonging the armistice with Germany, 13th December, 1918.

CONVENTION.

The undersigned, in virtue of the powers with which they were endowed for the signing of the armistice of the 11th November, 1918, have concluded the following additional agreement:

1. The duration of the armistice signed on the 11th November, 1918, has been prolonged for a month, i. e., till 5 a. m. on the 17th January, 1919.

The one month's extension will be further extended until the conclusion of peace preliminaries, provided this arrangement meets with the approbation of the allied Governments.

2. The clauses of the convention (11th November) which have been incompletely fulfilled will be carried out during the period of extension, according to the conditions laid down by the Permanent International Armistice Commission following the orders given by the allied generalissimo.

3. The following clause is added to the convention of the 11th November, 1918 [This condition was first announced in a note of the Allies, December 12, 1918, in which infractions of 12 articles of the armistice by Germany were listed. These included failure to deliver war material, aircraft, railroad rolling stock, and naval vessels in the time and quantity provided. In connection with the last category the statement read: "Five submarines in Spain, one in Norway, and one in Netherlands ought to be delivered," and "The refusal of the German Government to deliver the vessels condemned by the prize court is considered as contrary to the terms of the armistice." Other infractions were stated to be illtreatment of inhabitants of evacuated territory and neglect of liberated prisoners of war; failure to indicate live mines in evacuated regions; failure to open navigation to the Baltic and removal of securities and gold reserves pledged as a financial guaranty to the Allies. Germany replied on the same day, asserting her good faith and that such infractions as had occurred were due to physical impossibilities and the upset condition of the country. The Allies, however, reasserted the new condition, taking account particularly "of the illtreatment and cruelty inflicted upon allied prisoners, as well as the diminution of financial guaranties given by Germany to the Allies." (Quoted in Holland News 2: 2520 et seq. from Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, December 17, 1918.)]:

"From now onwards the generalissimo reserves to himself the right of occupying (when he deems it advisable), as an additional guarantee, the neutral zone on the right bank of the Rhine, north of the bridgehead of Cologne, and as far as the Dutch frontier.

"Six days' notice will be given by the generalissimo before the occupation comes into effect."

Trèves, 13th December, 1918.

(Signed) F. FOCH,
WEMYSS, Admiral.
ERZBERGER,
A. OBERNDORFF,
WINTERFELDT,
VANSELOW.

Convention prolonging the armistice with Germany, 16th January, 1919.

CONVENTION.

The undersigned plenipotentiaries (Admiral Browning taking the place of Admiral Wemyss), vested with the powers in virtue of which the armistice agreement of 11th November, 1918, was signed, have concluded the following supplementary agreement:

1. The armistice of the 11th November, 1918, which was prolonged until the 17th January, 1919, by the agreement of the 13th December, 1918, shall be again prolonged for one month, that is to say, until the 17th February, 1919, at 5 a. m.

This prolongation of one month shall be extended until the conclusion of the peace preliminaries, subject to the approval of the allied Governments.

2. The execution of those clauses of the agreement of the 11th November which have not been entirely carried out shall be proceeded with and completed during the prolongation of the armistice, in accordance with the detailed conditions fixed by the Permanent International Armistice Commission on the instructions of the allied high command.

3. In substitution of the supplementary railway material specified by tables 1 and 2 of the Spa protocol of 17th December, i. e., 500 locomotives and 19,000 wagons, the German Government shall supply the following agricultural machinery and instruments:

400 two-engined steam plough oufits, complete, with suitable ploughs,
6,500 drills,
6,500 manure distributors,
6,500 ploughs,
6,500 Brabant ploughs,
12,500 harrows,
6,500 scarifiers,
2,500 steel rollers,
2,500 Croskill rollers,
2,500 mowing machines,
2,500 hay-making machines,
3,000 reapers and binders,

or equivalent implements, according to the scale of interchangeability of various kinds of implements considered permissible by the Permanent International Armistice Commission. All this material, which shall be either new, or in very good condition, shall be delivered together with all accessories belonging to each implement, and with the spare parts required for 18 months' use.

The German Armistice Commission shall, between the present date and the 23rd January, supply the Allied Armistice Commission with a list of the material that can be delivered by the 1st March, which must, in principle, constitute not less than one-third of the total quantity. The International Armistice Commission shall, between now and the 23rd January, fix the latest dates of delivery, which shall, in principle, not extend beyond the 1st June.

4. The officers in Germany delegated by the allied and associated powers to organize the evacuation of the prisoners of war belonging to the armies of the Entente, together with representatives of the relief associations of the United States, France, Great Britain, and Italy, shall form a commission charged with the care of Russian prisoners of war in Germany.

This commission, the headquarters of which shall be in Berlin, shall be empowered to deal with the German Government direct, upon instructions from the allied Governments, regarding all questions relating to Russian prisoners of war.

The German Government shall accord the commission all traveling facilities necessary for the purpose of investigating the housing conditions and food supply of such prisoners.

The allied Governments reserve the right to arrange for the repatriation of Russian prisoners of war to any region which they may consider most suitable.

5. Naval clauses.—Article XXII of the armistice agreement of the 11th November, 1918, shall be supplemented as follows:

"In order to ensure the execution of such clause the German authorities shall be bound to carry out the following conditions:

"All submarines capable of putting to sea or of being towed shall be handed over immediately, and shall make for allied ports. Such vessels shall include submarine cruisers, mine layers, relief ships, and submarine docks. All submarines which can not be surrendered shall be completely destroyed or dismantled under the supervision of the allied commissioners.

"Submarine construction shall cease immediately, and all submarines in course of construction shall be destroyed or dismantled, under the supervision of the allied commissioners."

Article XXIII of the armistice agreement of the 11th November, 1918, shall be supplemented as follows:

"In order to ensure the execution of such clause the German commission shall furnish the interallied naval armistice commission with a complete list of all surface vessels constructed or in course of construction (launched or on the stocks), specifying probable dates of completion."

Article XXX of the armistice agreement of 11th November, 1918, shall be supplemented as follows:

"In order to ensure the execution of such clause the allied high command informs the German high command that all possible measures must be taken immediately for delivery in allied ports of all allied merchantmen still detained in German ports."

6. Restitution of material carried off from Belgium and French territories.—As restitution of material carried off from French and Belgian territory is indispensable for setting factories once more into working order, the following measures shall be carried out, viz.:

(a) All Machinery, machinery parts, industrial or agricultural plant, accessories of all kinds and, generally, all industrial or agricultural articles carried off by German military or civilian authorities or individuals, under any pretext whatever, from territories formerly occupied by the German armies on the western front, shall be placed at the disposal of the Allies for the purpose of being returned to their places of origin, should the French and Belgian Governments so desire.

These articles shall be returned without further alteration and undamaged.

(b) In view of such restitution the German Government shall immediately furnish the armistice commission with all official or private accounts, agreements for sale or hire, or correspondence relating to such articles, together with all necessary declarations or information regarding their existence, origin, adaptation, present condition, and locality.

(c) The delegates of the French or Belgian Governments shall cause inventories or examinations of such articles to be made on the spot in Germany, should they think fit.

(d) The return of such articles shall be effected in accordance with special instructions to be given as required by the French or Belgian authorities.

(e) With a view to immediate restitution, declarations shall more particularly be made of all stocks of driving belts, electric motors and parts thereof, or plant removed from France or Belgium and existing in depôt parks, railways, ships, and factories.

(f) The furnishing of the particulars referred to in articles 3 and 6 hereof shall commence within 8 clear days from the 20th January, 1919, and shall be completed in principle before the 1st April, 1919.

7. As a further guarantee, the supreme allied command reserves to itself the right to occupy, whenever it shall consider this desirable, the sector of the fortress of Strassburg formed by the fortifications on the right bank of the Rhine, with a strip of territory extending from 5 to 10 kilometres in front of such fortifications, within the boundaries defined on the map appended hereto.

The supreme allied command shall give 6 days' notice prior to such occupation, which shall not be preceded by any destruction of material or of buildings.

The limits of the neutral zone will, therefore, be advanced by 10 kilometres.

8. In order to secure the provisioning of Germany and of the rest of Europe, the German Government shall take all necessary steps to place the German fleet, for the duration of the armistice, under the control and the flags of the allied powers and the United States, who shall be assisted by a German delegate.

This arrangement shall in nowise affect the final disposal of such vessels. The Allies and the United States shall, if they consider this necessary, replace the crews either entirely or in part, and the officers and crews so replaced shall be repatriated to Germany.

Suitable compensation, to be fixed by the Allied Governments, shall be made for the use of such vessels.

All questions of details, as also any exceptions to be made in the case of certain types of vessel, shall be settled by a special agreement to be concluded immediately.

Trèves, 16th January, 1919.

(Signed) FOCH.
BROWNING.
ERZBERGER.
OBERNDORFF.
VON WINTERFELDT.
VANSELOW.

Convention prolonging the armistice with Germany, 16th February, 1919.

CONVENTION.

The undersigned plenipotentiaries, possessed of the powers in virtue of which the armistice agreement of 11th November, 1918, was signed, have concluded the following additional agreement:

Admiral Wemyss being replaced by Admiral Browning, General v. Winterfeldt by General v. Hammerstein, and the minister plenipotentiary Count v. Oberndorff by the Minister Plenipotentiary v. Haniel.

I. The Germans are to cease all hostilities against the Poles at once, whether in the district of Posen or any other district. With this end in view, they are forbidden to allow their troops to cross the following line—the old frontier between East and West Prussia and Russia as far as Louisenfelde, from thence the line west of Louisenfelde, west of Gr. Neudorff, south of Brzoza, north of Schubin, north of Exin, south of Samotschin, south of Chodziesen, north of Czarnikau, west of Miala, west of Birnbaum, west of Bentschen, west of Wollstein, north of Lissa, north of Rawitsch, south of Krotoschin, west of Adelnau, west of Schildberg, north of Doruchow, to the Silesian frontier.

II. The armistice of 11th November, prolonged by the agreements of 13th December, 1918, and 16th January, 1919, until 17th February, 1919, is further prolonged for a short period, the date of expiry not being given, the allied powers and those associated with them reserving to themselves the right to terminate the period at 3 days' notice.

III. The carrying out of those clauses of the agreement of 11th November, 1918, and of the additional agreements of 13th December, 1918, and 16th January, 1919, the terms of which have not yet been fully carried into effect, will be continued and completed during the prolongation of the armistice, according to detailed arrangements made by the permanent armistice commission, acting on instructions issued by the supreme allied command.

Trèves, 16th February, 1919.

(Sd.) FOCH.
BROWNING.
ERZBERGER.
FREIHERR V. HAMMERSTEIN.
VON HANIEL.
VANSELOW.

Terms of armistice with Austria-Hungary, 3rd November, 1918.

A. MILITARY CLAUSES.

1. Immediate cessation of hostilities by land and sea and air.

2. Total demobilization of Austro-Hungarian Army and immediate withdrawal of Austro-Hungarian forces operating on front from North Sea to Switzerland.

Within Austro-Hungarian territory limited as in clause 3 below there shall only be maintained as an organized military force a maximum of 20 divisions reduced to prewar effectives.

Half the divisional corps and army artillery and equipment shall be collected at points to be indicated by Allies and United States of America for delivery to them, beginning with all such material as exists in territories to be evacuated by Austro-Hungarian forces.

3. Evacuation of all territories invaded by Austria-Hungary since the beginning of the war. Withdrawal within such periods as shall be determined by commander in chief of allied forces on each front, of Austro-Hungarian armies behind a line fixed as follows: From Piz Umbrail to north of Stelvio it will follow crest of Rhetian Alps to sources of the Adige and Eisach, passing thence by the Reschen and Brenner and the heights of Oetz and Ziller.

The line thence turns south, crossing Mount Toblach as far as present frontier of Carnic Alps. It follows this line as far as Mount Tarvis, thence to watershed of Julian Alps by Col de Predil, Mount Mangart, the Tricorno (Terglou) and watershed Podberdo, Podlaniscan, and Idria. From this point the line turns southeast toward the Schneeberg, excluding the whole basin of the Save River and its tributaries; from Schneeberg it descends the coast in such a way as to include Castua, Mattuglia, and Volosca in evacuated territories.

It will follow the administrative limits of present Province of Dalmatia, including to the north Lisarica and Tribania and to the south territory limited by a line from the shore of Cape Planka to the summits of watershed eastwards so as to include in evacuated area all the valleys and watercourses flowing toward Sebenico, such as Cicola, Karka, Butisnica, and their tributaries. It will also include all the islands in the north and west of Dalmatia from Premuda, Selve, Ulbo, Scherda, Maon, Pago, and Puntadura Islands, in the north, up to Meleda, in the south, embracing Sant' Andrea, Busi, Lissa, Lesina, Tercola, Curzola, Cazza, and Lagosta, as well as neighbouring rocks and islets and Pelagosa, only excepting the islands of great and small Zirona, Bua, Solta, and Brazza.

All territories thus evacuated will be occupied by allied and American troops.

All military and railway equipment of all kinds (including coal) within these territories to be left in situ, and surrendered to the Allies and America according to special orders given by commander-in-chief of forces of associated powers on different fronts.

No new destruction, pillage, or requisition by enemy troops in territories to be evacuated by them and occupied by associated powers.

4. Allied armies shall have the right of free movement over all road and rail and waterways in Austro-Hungarian territory which shall be necessary.

Armies of associated powers shall occupy such strategic points in Austria-Hungary at such times as they may deem necessary to enable them to conduct military operations or to maintain order.

They shall have right of requisition on payment for troops of associated powers wherever they may be.

5. Complete evacuation of all German troops within 15 days not only from Italian and Balkan fronts, but from all Austro-Hungarian territory.

Internment of all German troops which have not left Austria-Hungary before that date.

6. Administration of evacuated territories of Austria-Hungary will provisionally be entrusted to local authorities under control of the allied and associated armies of occupation.

7. Immediate repatriation, without reciprocity, of all prisoners of war and interned allied subjects and of civilian populations evacuated from their homes on conditions to be laid down by commanders-in-chief of forces of allied powers on various fronts.

8. Sick and wounded who cannot be removed from evacuated territory will be cared for by Austro-Hungarian personnel, who will be left on the spot with medical material required.

B. NAVAL CONDITIONS.

1. Immediate cessation of all hostilities at sea and definite information to be given as to location and movements of all Austro-Hungarian ships.

Notification to be made to neutrals that free navigation in all territorial waters is given to the naval and mercantile marines of the allied and associated powers, all questions of neutrality being waived.

2. Surrender to the Allies and United States of America of 15 Austro-Hungarian submarines completed between years 1910 and 1918 and of all German submarines which are in or may hereafter enter Austro-Hungarian territorial waters. All other Austro-Hungarian submarines to be paid off and completely disarmed and to remain under supervision of the Allies.

3. Surrender to the Allies and United States of America, with their complete armament and equipment, of 3 battleships, 3 light cruisers, 9 destroyers, 12 torpedo boats, 1 mine layer, 6 Danube monitors, to be designated by the Allies and United States of America.

All other surface warships (including river craft) are to be concentrated in Austro-Hungarian naval bases to be designated by the Allies and United States of America, and are to be paid off, completey disarmed, and placed under supervision of Allies and United States of America.

4. Free navigation to all warships and merchant ships of allied and associated powers to be given in Adriatic, in territorial waters, and up River Danube and its tributaries, and Austro-Hungarian territory.

Allies and associated powers shall have right to sweep up all mine fields and obstructions, and positions of these are to be indicated.

In order to ensure free navigation on the Danube, Allies and United States of America shall be empowered to occupy or to dismantle all fortifications or defence works.

5. Existing blockade conditions set up by allied and associated powers are to remain unchanged, and all Austro-Hungarian merchant ships found at sea are to remain liable to capture, with the exceptions which may be made by a commission nominated by Allies and United States.

6. All naval aircraft are to be concentrated and immobilized in Austro-Hungarian bases to be designated by Allies and United States of America.

7. Evacuation of all the Italian coast, and of all ports occupied by Austria-Hungary outside their national territory, and abandonment of all floating craft, naval materials, equipment, and materials for inland navigation of all kinds.

8. Occupation by Allies and United States of America of land and sea fortifications and islands which form defences, and of dockyards and arsenals at Pola.

9. All merchant vessels held by Austria-Hungary belonging to Allies and associated powers to be returned.

10. No destruction of ships or of materials to be permitted before evacuation, surrender, or restoration.

11. All naval and mercantile prisoners of war of allied and associated powers in Austro-Hungarian hands to be returned without reciprocity.

The undersigned plenipotentiaries, duly authorized, signify their approval of above conditions:

3rd November, 1918.

Representatives of Austro-Hungarian supreme command.

VICTOR WEBER, EDLER VON WEBENAU.
KARL SCHNELLER.
Y. VON LIECHTENSTEIN.
J. V. NYÉKHEGYI.
ZWIERKOWSKI.
VICTOR, FREIHERR VON SEILLER.
KAMILLO RUGGERA.

Representatives of Italian supreme command.

Ten. Gen. PIETRO BADOGLIO.
Magg. Gen. SCIPIONE SCIPIONI.
Colonn. TULLIO MARCHETTI.
Colonn. PIETRO GAZZERA.
Colonn. PIETRO MARAVIGNA.
Colonn. ALBERTY PARIANI.
Cap. Vasc. FRANCESCO ACCINNI.

Supplement to protocol.

Contains details and executive clauses of certain points of the armistice between the allied and associated powers and Austria-Hungary.

I. MILITARY CLAUSES.

1. Hostilities on land, sea, and air will cease on all Austro-Hungarian fronts 24 hours after the signing of the armistice, i. e., at 3 o'clock on 4th November (central European time).

From that hour the Italian and allied troops will not advance beyond the line then reached.

The Austro-Hungarian troops and those of her allies must retire to a distance of at least 3 kilometres (as the crow flies) from the line reached by the Italian troops or by troops of allied countries. Inhabitants of the 3-kilometre zone included between the two lines (above mentioned) will be able to obtain necessary supplies from their own army or those of the Allies.

All Austro-Hungarian troops who may be at the rear of the fighting lines reached by the Italian troops, on the cessation of hostilities, must be regarded as prisoners of war.

2. Regarding the clauses included in articles 2 and 3 concerning artillery equipment, and war material to be either collected in places indicated or left in territories which are to be evacuated, the Italian plenipotentiaries representing all the allied and associated powers give to the said clauses the following interpretation, which will be carried into execution:

(a) Any material or part thereof which may be used for the purpose of war, must be given up to the allied and associated powers. The Austro-Hungarian Army and the German troops are only authorized to take personal arms and equipment belonging to troops evacuating the territories mentioned in article 3, besides officers' chargers, the transport train, and horses specially allotted to each unit for transport of food supplies, kitchens, officers' luggage, and medical material. This clause applies to the whole army and to all the services.

(b) Concerning artillery—it has been arranged that the Austro-Hungarian Army and German troops shall abandon all artillery material and equipment in the territory to be evacuated.

The calculations necessary for obtaining a complete and exact total of the artillery divisions and army corps at the disposal of Austro-Hungary on the cessation of hostilities (half of which must be given up to the associated powers) will be made later, in order to arrange, if necessary, for the delivery of other Austro-Hungarian artillery material and for the possible eventual return of material to the Austro-Hungarian Army by the allied and associated armies.

All artillery which does not actually form part of the divisional artillery and army corps must be given up, without exception. It will not, however, be necessary to calculate the amount.

(c) On the Italian front the delivery of divisional and army corps artillery will be effected at the following places: Trento, Bolzano, Pieve di Cadore, Stazione per la Carnia, Tolmino, Gorizia, and Trieste.

3. Special commissions will be selected by the commanders in chief of allied and associated armies on the various Austro-Hungarian fronts, which will immediately proceed, accompanied by the necessary escorts, to the places they regard as the most suitable from which to control the execution of the provisions established above.

4. It has been determined that the designations M. Toblach and M. Tarvis indicate the groups of mountains dominating the ridge of Mts. Toblach and the Valley of Tarvis.

5. The retirement of Austro-Hungarian troops and those of her allies beyond the lines indicated in article 3 of the Protocol of Armistice Conditions, will take place within 15 days of the cessation of hostilities, as far as the Italian front is concerned.

On the Italian front, Austro-Hungarian troops and those of her allies must have retired beyond the line: Tonale—Noce—Lavis—Avisio—Pordoi—Livinallongo—Falzarego—Pieve di Cadore—Colle Mauria—Alto Tagliamento—Fella—Raccolana—Selle Nevea—Isonzo by the fifth day; they must also have evacuated the Dalmatian territory indicated above.

Austro-Hungarian troops on land and sea, or those of her allies not having evacuated the territories indicated within the period of 15 days will be regarded as prisoners of war.

6. The payment of any requisitions made by the armies of the allied and associated armies on Austro-Hungarian territory will be carried out according to paragraph 1 of page 227 of "Servizio in Guerra—Part II. Edizione 1915," actually in force in the Italian Army.

7. As regards railways and the exercise of the rights confirmed upon the associated powers by article 4 of the armistice agreement between the allied powers and Austria-Hungary, it has been determined that the transport of troops, war material, and supplies for allied and associated powers on the Austro-Hungarian railway system, outside territory evacuated in accordance with the terms of the armistice, and the direction and working of the railways shall be effected by the employees of the Austro-Hungarian railway administration, under the supervision of special commissioners selected by the Allied Powers, and the military Italian headquarters, which it will be considered necessary to establish, the Austro-Hungarian authorities will give priority to allied military trains and will guarantee their safety.

8. On territory to be evacuated at the cessation of hostilities, all mines on roads or railway tracts, all minefields and other devices for interrupting communications by road or rail must be rendered inactive and harmless.

9. Within a period of 8 days from the cessation of hostilities, prisoners and Italian subjects interned in Austria-Hungary must cease all work except in the case of prisoners and interned who have been employed in agricultural pursuits previous to the day on which the armistice was signed. In any case they must be ready to leave at once on request of the Commander in Chief of the Italian Army.

10. Austria-Hungary must provide for the protection, safety, and supplies (expenses of these to be repaid) of the various commissions selected by the allied Governments to take over war material and to exercise general control, whether in the territory to be evacuated or in any other part of Austria-Hungary.

II. NAVAL CLAUSES.

1. The hour for the cessation of hostilities by sea will be the same as that of the cessation of hostilities by land and air.

Before that time the Austro-Hungarian Government must have furnished the Italian Government and those of the associated powers with the necessary information concerning the position and movements of the Austro-Hungarian ships, through the wireless station at Pola, which will transmit the information to Venice.

2. The units referred to in Articles II and III, to be surrendered to the associated powers must return to Venice between 8 a. m. and 3 p. m. on the 6th November; they will take a pilot on board 14 miles from the coast. An exception is made as regards the Danube monitors, which will be required to proceed to a port indicated by the Commander in Chief of the forces of the associated powers on the Balkan front, under such conditions as he may determine.

3. The following ships will proceed to Venice:

"Teghethoff,"
"Prinz Eugen,"
"Ferdinand Max,"
"Saida,"
"Novara,"
"Helgoland."

Nine destroyers of "Tatra" type (at least 800 tons) of most recent construction.

Twelve torpedo-boats (200-ton type).

Minelayer "Chamaleon."

Fifteen submarines built between 1910 and 1918, and all German submarines which are, or may eventually be, in Austro-Hungarian waters.

Premeditated damage, or damage occurring on board the ships to be surrendered will be regarded by the allied governments as a grave infringement of the present armistice terms.

The Lago di Garda flotilla will be surrendered to the associated powers in the Port of Riva.

All ships not to be surrendered to the associated powers will be concentrated in the ports of Buccari and Spalato within 48 hours of the cessation of hostilities.

4. As regards the right of sweeping minefields and destroying barrages, the Austro-Hungarian Government guarantees to deliver the maps of minefields and barrages at Pola, Cattaro, and Fiume to the Commander of the Port of Venice, and to the Admiral of the Fleet at Brindisi within 48 hours of the cessation of hostilities, and within 96 hours of the cessation of hostilities, maps of minefields and barrages in the Mediterranean and Italian lakes and rivers, with additional notification of such minefields or barrages laid by order of the German Government as are within their knowledge.

Within the same period of 96 hours a similar communication concerning the Danube and the Black Sea will be delivered to the commander of the associated forces on the Balkan front.

5. The restitution of merchant ships belonging to the associated powers will take place within 96 hours of the cessation of hostilities in accordance with the indications determined by each associated power, which will be transmitted to the Austro-Hungarian Government. The associated powers reserve to themselves the constitution of the commission referred to in article 5, and of informing the Austro-Hungarian Government of its functions and of the place in which it will meet.

6. The naval base referred to in Article VI is Spalato.

7. The evacuation referred to in Article VII will be effected within the period fixed for the retirement of the troops beyond the armistice lines. There must be no damage to fixed, mobile, or floating material in the ports.

Evacuation may be effected viâ the Lagoon canals by means of Austro-Hungarian boats which may be brought in from outside.

8. The occupation referred to in Article VIII will take place within 48 hours of the cessation of hostilities.

The Austro-Hungarian authorities must guarantee the safety of vessels transporting troops for the occupation of Pola and of islands and other places as provided for in the terms of the armistice for the land army.

The Austro-Hungarian Government will give directions that the ships belonging to associated powers proceeding to Pola should be met 14 miles out by pilots capable of showing them the safest way into port. All damage to the persons or property of the associated powers will be regarded as a grave infringement of the present armistice terms.

The undersigned duly authorized plenipotentiaries have signified their approval of the above conditions.

3rd November, 1918.

Representatives of the supreme command of the Austro-Hungarian Army.	Representatives of the supreme command of the Italian Army.
VICTOR WEBER, EDLER VON WEBENAU.	Ten. Gen. PIETRO BADOGLIO.
KARL SCHNELLER.	Magg. Gen. SCIPIONE SCIPIONI.
Y. VON LIECHTENSTEIN.	Colonn. TULLIO MARCHETTI.
J. V. NYÉKHEGYI.	Colonn. PIETRO GAZZERA.
ZWIERKOWSKI.	Colonn. PIETRO MARAVIGNA.
VICTOR, FREIHERR VON SEILLER.	Colonn. ALBERTO PARIANI.
KAMILLO RUGGERA.	Cap. Vasc. FRANCESCO ACCINNI.

Text of military convention between the Allies and Hungary, signed at Belgrade, 13th November, 1918.

MILITARY CONVENTION REGULATING THE CONDITIONS UNDER WHICH THE ARMISTICE SIGNED BETWEEN THE ALLIES AND AUSTRIA-HUNGARY IS TO BE APPLIED IN HUNGARY.

1. The Hungarian Government will withdraw all troops north of a line drawn through the upper valley of the Szamos, Bistritz, Maros-Vasarhely, the river Maros to its junction with the Theiss, Maria-Theresiopel, Baja, Funfkirchen (these places not being occupied by Hungarian troops), course of the Drave, until it coincides with the frontier of Slavonia-Croatia.

The evacuation to be carried out in 8 days, the Allies to be entitled to occupy the evacuated territory on the conditions laid down by the general commander in chief of the allied armies. Civil administration will remain in the hands of the Government.

In actual fact only the police and gendarmerie will be retained in the evacuated zone, being indispensable to the maintenance of order, and also such men as are required to ensure the safety of the railways.

2. Demobilization of Hungarian naval and military forces. An exception will be made in the case of six infantry divisions and two cavalry divisions, required for the maintenance of internal order, and in the case of small sections of police mentioned in paragraph 1.

3. The Allies to have the right of occupying all places and strategic points, which may be permanently fixed by the general commander in chief of the allied armies.

The allied troops to be allowed to pass through or to remain in any part of Hungary.

The Allies to have permanent right of use, for military purposes, of all rolling stock and shipping belonging to the State or to private individuals resident in Hungary, also of all draught animals.

4. The rolling stock and railway staff usually employed in the occupied territory will remain (see paragraph 1), and a reserve of 2,000 wagons and 100 locomotives (normal gauge) and 600 wagons and 50 locomotives (narrow gauge) will also be handed over within the month to the general commander in chief. These will be for the use of the allied troops and to compensate for the deficiency of material from Serbia due to the war. Some portion of this material could be levied from Austria. The figures are approximate.

5. The ships and crews usually employed in the service of the occupied territory will remain, in addition to monitors, will be surrendered to the Allies immediately at Belgrade. The rest of the Danube flotilla will be assembled in one of the Danube ports, to be appointed later by the general commander in chief, and will be disarmed there. A levy of 10 passenger vessels, 10 tugs, and 60 lighters will be made on this flotilla as soon as possible for the use of the allied troops, to compensate for the deficiency of material from Serbia due to the war. The figures are approximate.

6. Within 15 days a detachment of 3,000 men from the railway technical troops are to be placed at the disposal of the general commander in chief, supplied with the material necessary to repair the Serbian railways. These figures are approximate.

7. Within 15 days a detachment of sappers of the telegraph branch are to be placed at the disposal of the general commander in chief, provided with material necessary for establishing telegraphic and telephone communications with Serbia.

8. Within one month 25,000 horses are to be placed at the disposal of the general commander in chief, together with such transport material as he may deem necessary. These figures are approximate.

9. Arms and war material to be deposited at places appointed by the general commander in chief. A portion of this material will be levied for the purpose of supplying units to be placed under the orders of the general commander in chief.

10. Immediate liberation of all allied prisoners of war and interned civilians, who will be collected at places convenient for their despatch by rail; they will there receive directions as to time and place of repatriation, according to the orders issued by the general commander in chief. Hungarian prisoners of war to be provisionally retained.

11. A delay of 15 days is granted for the passage of German troops through Hungary and their quartering meanwhile, dating from the signing of the armistice by General Diaz (4th November, 3 p. m.). Postal and telegraphic communication with Germany will only be permitted under the military control of the Allies. The Hungarian Government undertakes to allow no military telegraphic communication with Germany.

12. Hungary will facilitate the supplying of the allied troops of occupation; requisitions will be allowed on condition that they are not arbitrary, and that they are paid for at current rates.

13. The situation of all Austro-Hungarian mines in the Danube and the Black Sea must be communicated immediately to the general commander in chief. Further, the Hungarian Government undertakes to stop the passage of all floating mines sown in the Danube upstream from the Hungarian and Austrian frontier and to remove all those actually in Hungarian waters.

14. The Hungarian postal service, telegraphs, telephones, and railways will be placed under allied control.

15. An allied representative will be attached to the Hungarian Ministry of Supplies in order to safeguard allied interests.

16. Hungary is under an obligation to cease all relations with Germany and stringently to forbid the passage of German troops to Roumania.

17. The Allies shall not interfere with the internal administration of affairs in Hungary.

18. Hostilities between Hungary and the Allies are at an end.

Two copies made 13th November, 1918, at 11.15 p. m. at Belgrade.

Signed for the Allies by the delegates of the general commander in chief.

VOIVODE MISHITCH.
GENERAL HENRYS.

Signed for Hungary by the delegates of the Hungarian Government.

BÉLA LINDER.

Bulgaria—Armistice—Convention, September 29, 1918.

MILITARY CONVENTION REGULATING THE CONDITIONS OF SUSPENSION OF HOSTILITIES BETWEEN THE ALLIED POWERS AND BULGARIA.

(1) Immediate evacuation of the territories still occupied by Bulgarians in Greece and Serbia; no cattle, cereals, or provisions to be exported from such territories, which must be left undamaged, the Bulgarian civil administration will continue to function in the parts of Bulgaria actually occupied by the Allies.

(2) Immediate demobilization of the entire Bulgarian Army, with the exception of a fighting force comprising 3 divisions of 16 battalions each, 4 regiments of cavalry, which will be employed, 2 divisions for the defense of the east frontier of Bulgaria and of the Dobrudja, and 1 division for guarding the railways.

(3) Surrender at points designated by the high command of the armies of the east of arms, munitions, and military vehicles belonging to the elements demobilized, which will be stored by the Bulgarian authorities and under the control of the Allies. The horses also will be handed over to the Allies.

(4) Restitution to Greece of the material of the Fourth Greek Army Corps taken from the Greek Army at the occupation of eastern Macedonia, in so far that it has not been sent to Germany.

(5) The elements of the Bulgarian troops now at the west of the meridian of Uskub will lay down their arms and will be considered, until further order, as prisoners of war; the officers will be allowed to keep their swords.

(6) The Bulgarian prisoners of war in the east will be employed by the allied armies until the peace without reciprocity as concerning the prisoners of war of the Allies. These last will be immediately surrendered to the allied authorities and deported civilians will be wholly free to reenter their own country.

(7) Germany and Austria will be allowed a delay of four weeks to withdraw their troops and military organizations from Bulgaria. The diplomatic and consular representatives of the Central Powers, as well as their citizens, must withdraw in this same period. The orders for the cessation of hostilities will be given at the time of the signature of the present convention.

(Signed) Gen. FRANCHET D'ESPEREY.
(Signed) ANDRÉ LIAPTCHEW.
(Signed) Gen. LOUKOFF.

MILITARY COVENANT REGULATING THE CONDITIONS OF THE SUSPENSION OF HOSTILITIES BETWEEN THE ALLIED POWERS AND BULGARIA.

Secret articles.

(1) The eventual passage of the allied military forces over Bulgarian territory, as well as the utilization of railways, roads, waterways, and harbors, will be the object of a special covenant between the Bulgarian Government and the high command of the army of the east. Some negotiations to this effect will begin in about eight days at the most. They will concern, also, the control of telephone, telegraph, and the stations of T. S. F.

(2) A certain number of strategical points in the interior of the Bulgarian territory will be occupied by the great allied powers. This occupation will be provisional, and will serve purely as a guaranty. It will not give way to coercion or arbitrary requisition. The general in chief of the armies gives assurance that unless unusual circumstances arise, Sofia will not be occupied.

(3) The general in chief reserves for himself, in case of necessity, the right to demand absolute cessation of every relation between Bulgaria and her former allies.

(4) The opening of Bulgarian ports to the vessels of allied and neutral powers.

(Signed) Gen. FRANCHET D'ESPEREY.
(Signed) ANDRÉ LIAPTCHEW.
(Signed) Gen. LOUKOFF.

FAVORABLE FACTORY CONDITIONS.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, in these unsettled times it is very encouraging to read the remarks of one who compliments the people of the United States who furnished funds to give employment to our people. During the war we learned to respect and love the King and Queen of the Belgians. I have here an extract from a paper, giving the impressions of Queen Elizabeth of the Belgians on the conditions in our factories. I desire to have the extract inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"'You ask if I have gained any impressions from the factories I have visited,' Her Majesty continued, with one of her charming smiles. 'I have been very much impressed with the clear-eyed, red-cheeked girls I have seen in your workrooms. I think their evident happiness is due to the pure air, the cleanliness, and the generally splendid surroundings. It is my hope that employers of working people in Belgium and all over Europe will model their factories after those in the United States.'"

LONGSHOREMEN'S STRIKE.

Mr. SHERMAN. I present a letter from the New York Towboat Exchange, through its manager, Mr. Mason, together with a copy of a letter addressed by the exchange to Secretary of Labor Wilson, setting forth the unfitness of Mr. James L. Hughes to act on the conciliation commission in the longshoremen's strike. They set forth a great variety of reasons showing general unfitness, among which is habitual and overwhelming intoxication, disabling him from the discharge of his duties. I ask to have the letter of Mr. Mason, on behalf of the towboat exchange, and also the letter addressed to Secretary of Labor Wilson, printed at length in the RECORD without reading.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK CITY, October 27, 1919.

Hon. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SIR: We inclose herewith copy of letter sent to the Hon. William B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C., regarding Mr. James L. Hughes.

Up to the present time we have not received a reply to the inclosed letter, and so far as we know Mr. Hughes is still in New York as mediator on the differences between the striking longshoremen and their employers.

The object of this letter is merely to bring the matter to your attention.

Yours, very truly,
NEW YORK TOW BOAT EXCHANGE (INC.),
CHARLES A. MASON, Manager.

OCTOBER 20, 1919.

Hon. WILLIAM B. WILSON,
Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The announcement of the appointment of Mr. James L. Hughes as mediator of the differences between the striking longshoremen of this port and their employers has been read by us with interest, not to say astonishment. As you are apparently unfamiliar with Mr. Hughes's activities here while acting as your representative last spring, we feel it our duty to you and to the maritime interests of New York to acquaint you with the facts.

You will probably recall that in March, 1919, Mr. Hughes was designated by your department to act as mediator in the strike of the operatives of railroad and privately owned harbor equipment in this port. For the following six weeks Mr. Hughes spent the greater part of his time in this city in his so-called mediation efforts, and we had the fullest opportunity to observe him and his activities at close range. We will summarize very briefly the results of our observations:

1. On April 5 Mr. Hughes arranged a meeting, to be held that evening, between representatives of our associations and representatives of the strikers. This meeting was attended by nine of our members and by about an equal number of spokesmen for the strikers. Mr. Hughes arrived in a grossly intoxicated condition, and became progressively more inebriated as the evening advanced. He was totally incapable of appreciating what was being said or done in his presence, and devoted his energies to incoherent and disgraceful denunciations of the employers. He finally fell asleep, and had to be awakened at the termination of the conference. It was a decidedly painful affair.

2. On March 14, 1919, at a conference between four of our representatives and Mr. Hughes, the latter, for the purpose of coercing a settlement with the strikers, accused our representatives and their counsel of the commission of criminal acts, and threatened to bring these alleged offenses to the attention of the Federal district attorney if a settlement was not reached. The accusations were basely slanderous and without foundation, and Mr. Hughes was sharply warned that any repetition of them would lead to the immediate termination of the interview. It is, perhaps, needless to add that the Federal district attorney never acted in the matter, and so far as we are advised was never requested by Mr. Hughes to take any action. In this connection we take the liberty of calling your attention to the fact that under the law of New York an unfounded threat of criminal prosecution or an offer to withhold such prosecution constitutes a felony.

3. Between March 31, 1919, and April 4, 1919, our association effected settlements with the Tidewater Boatmen's Union and the Lighter Captains' Union, as a result of which the members of those organizations returned to work. The negotiations leading to these settlements were initiated and encouraged by Mr. T. V. O'Connor, president of the International Longshoremen's Association. On several occasions subsequent to April 4, 1919, Mr. Hughes reviled T. V. O'Connor with obscene and profane language for aiding in the settlement of these controversies and accused said O'Connor of corruption and of ulterior and dishonest motives in the matter.

4. The strike of the towboat operatives lasted from March 4, 1919, to April 19, 1919. During the closing weeks of the strike a strong sentiment developed among the men in favor of returning to work upon the very liberal terms of settlement offered by the employers. During this period Mr. Hughes attended several meetings of the strikers and personally urged them to hold out a little longer, promising them more favorable terms. His action in this regard undoubtedly prolonged the strike and greatly increased the cost to all concerned. The men finally returned to work on terms less favorable than those rejected upon the advice of Mr. Hughes.

5. On April 16, 1919, Mr. Hughes requested representatives of our associations to meet the Secretary of Labor on the following day at No. 45 Broadway, this city, for a full discussion of all matters in controversy. On arriving at that meeting our representatives were surprised to find that the assurances of Mr. Hughes that the Secretary of Labor would be in attendance were false, and that, in fact, this meeting was being conducted by the Hon. John F. Hylan, mayor of this city. During the course of the proceedings before him the mayor frequently stated that he had been solicited to act in the matter by Mr. Hughes.

6. The strike of the harbor operatives, which began March 4, 1919, followed a wage award of Mr. V. Everit Macy, acting as an umpire of the National War Labor Board. The employees regarded this award as unfavorable to them and cast it aside with derision. Mr. Hughes aided and encouraged them in this course and was largely instrumental in establishing the principle that an arbitration award, if deemed unfavorable, may be treated as a scrap of paper. The identical proposition is involved in the present longshoremen's strike, and the stand of the strikers is amply justified by the attitude of your representative, who is now called upon to mediate.

7. The attitude of Mr. Hughes throughout the strike from March 4 to April 19 was that of grossest partisanship toward the Marine Workers' Affiliation. When the cause of the strikers was proceeding favorably, Mr. Hughes was always strangely absent. When discontent developed in the strikers' ranks, or when disaster threatened their cause, Mr. Hughes was present and assiduous in his efforts. His close relations with the leaders of the strike and his obvious bias toward them were little short of a public scandal.

We are prepared at any time or place to substantiate the charges made above. Permit us to express the hope that the present appointment of Mr. Hughes marks the end of his activities in maritime matters affecting the port of New York.

Very truly, yours,

(Signed) JOSEPH H. MORAN,
For New York Tow Boat Exchange.
(Signed) H. M. LEE,
For Lighterage Association of the Port of New York.
(Signed) JOSEPH H. SINGLETON,
For New York Boat Owners' Association.

THREATENED STRIKE OF COAL MINERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Resolutions coming over from a previous day are now in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I have a resolution, being Senate joint resolution No. 120, coming over from a previous day, which I am anxious to finally dispose of during the morning hour, but I am not desirous of interfering with the bill which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] says is of such great and pressing importance and which he desires disposed of this morning. So, if I may be permitted, I will defer calling up my resolution until the Senator from Iowa shall have been heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made.

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senate adopted a resolution offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] calling upon the Federal Trade Commission for particulars as to the authorship and circulation of a public statement previously issued by the commission, which attacked a Member of this body, the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. The reply of the Federal Trade Commission, I learn, was made to this body yesterday and laid before the Senate at that time. I was not present when it was received and have just read it this morning. The reply of the Federal Trade Commission assumes full responsibility for the public attack which it recently made upon the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] and its public circulation. I take occasion now, at the first opportunity, to say that I think it is outrageous for a branch of the executive department of the Government to make a scurrilous attack on the record and standing of a respected and honored Member of this body simply because he introduced a resolution, which the Senate adopted, asking for an investigation as to some of the employees of that branch of the Government. I think it entirely out of place and a violation of all propriety.

I do not know whether or not there are any socialists or Bolshevists who are employees of the Federal Trade Commission. I do know, however, that there have been socialists and Bolshevists who have been employees of this Government. There may or may not be such in the employ of the Federal Trade Commission, but the Senator from Indiana had a right to introduce his resolution for an investigation of that subject, and, as I have stated, the Senate put its seal of approval upon that right by unanimously adopting his resolution. In speaking now of the action of the Federal Trade Commission, which I condemn, I do not refer to its reply to the resolution of inquiry of the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES], which was proper, but to its published statement which called for the introduction and adoption of the resolution of the Senator from Washington and which attacked the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] apparently because he introduced a resolution to investigate some employees of the commission. That I brand as improper.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to a point of order, though I am very sorry to do so. The bill to which I referred a few moments ago is so important that I must ask for the regular order, in order that I may have an opportunity to present it.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Iowa will bear with me a very few minutes longer, I will conclude. I have said nearly all I intended saying.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure of that, but I fear that what the Senator from Montana has said may give rise to a good deal of discussion.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator from Iowa, then, is fearing others and not me. That being the case, I bow to his point of order. I have to admit, of course, his right to raise it at this time.

REIMBURSEMENT FOR RAILROAD EQUIPMENT.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 237, being Senate bill 3319; but before the request is granted I think it is due to the Senate that I shall explain, briefly, the nature and object of the bill.

Mr. President, the Government has expended in betterments and additions and for equipment in the railway service something like a billion dollars since it has been in operation of these properties. It will be imperatively necessary that the Government shall carry for a very considerable time, probably for 10 years, a large portion of these advances, for the railway companies will be utterly unable to repay these expenditures which have been made upon and for their properties and which are properly chargeable to capital account. Among the expenditures I have mentioned there are in the aggregate about $375,000,000 for equipment; that is to say, for engines, cars, and the like.

The President, the railway companies, and certain bankers have negotiated an arrangement through which about $225,000,000 of the expenditures for equipment can be funded for a period of 15 years. It is to be accomplished through the organization of a corporation which is to acquire the title of the equipment which is now in the Government and transfer that equipment to the several railway companies, which are to execute securities upon which the corporation will issue what is known as car-trust-equipment certificates. The bankers have agreed to take of these certificates an amount substantially equal to $225,000,000. That will return to the Government at this time that amount of money.

The Government will be compelled to carry in some form the remainder, or, together with the reserve fund that is to be established, substantially $150,000,000.

When the arrangement had been made and everything had been agreed upon between the parties, including the Government, the counsel for the bankers who were to underwrite these securities reached the conclusion that there was no authority in the act of March 21, 1918, for the arrangement which was proposed. The Railroad Administration was of the contrary opinion, that the President already had the authority required to enable him to carry out the plan which had been proposed and which was agreeable and satisfactory to all who were concerned. In that difference of opinion the negotiations were suspended, and no matter how well founded the view of the President and his advisers may be, if the bankers who are to advance the money or to underwrite the arrangement feel that the authority does not exist, the negotiation must come to an end and the plan must be abandoned.

The bill which has been introduced and which has received the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Interstate Commerce is designed simply to supply the authority which it is feared the present law does not contain, and that will enable the President to go forward with this funding operation.

I feel that I could not more completely explain the measure if I were to consume further time.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. May I ask the Senator a question for information?

Mr. CUMMINS. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Are the credits which are to be advanced by the bankers credited to the individual railroad companies separately or is it a pooling arrangement?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is not a pooling arrangement. The equipment to which I have referred which has given rise to a great deal of controversy and dispute among the railroads and as between the railroads and the Government has now been allocated or distributed to the various railroad companies.

Mr. NELSON. So that each road will have to pay its share?

Mr. CUMMINS. Each road will have to pay its own share.

Mr. NELSON. There is a further question I should like to propound. In reference to the advances to be made by the bankers or by the corporation referred to by the Senator, does the Government assume any liability in connection therewith? In other words, will it directly or indirectly guarantee those obligations?

Mr. CUMMINS. The Government does not directly or indirectly guarantee the trust certificates. The Government, it will be understood, is now the creditor of the railroad companies. It has no way of securing payment except from the railroad companies, and the railroad companies are entirely incapable at this time of repaying this vast sum of money. It is only about two-fifths of the entire sum which the railroad companies owe the Government upon capital account. The Government will not occupy any less advantageous position than it now occupies.

The bankers take these certificates, and the Government will get about $225,000,000 out of the operation. It will be remembered that the Government must then accept a subordinate position financially to these certificates, so far as the remaining $150,000,000 are concerned; but it has that position now, and it gets into the Treasury of the United States about $225,000,000 that otherwise it would be unable to secure.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Just for a question. The Senator has rightly stated, as I understand the facts, that the $225,000,000 will be covered back into the Treasury of the United States. That leaves approximately $150,000,000 which is undisposed of. Now, as I understand the situation, the director general's office purchased these locomotives and cars for the purpose of distributing them among the various roads in proportion to their several needs.

Mr. CUMMINS. He did.

Mr. POMERENE. Some little time ago a part of these cars had not been distributed or allotted to the roads. What portion of these still remain in the director general's control and have not as yet been allotted?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I shall have to answer that in this way: The dispute between the railroad companies and the Government has been settled and the distribution has been agreed upon; that is, the number of cars that each company is to take and the number of locomotives that each company is to take has been agreed upon. Just what the physical location of the cars may be, I do not know; but the matter has all been disposed of by common consent.

Mr. POMERENE. So that the only matter that remains unsettled is the determination of the character of these securities?

Mr. CUMMINS. That is all. The only question is one of authority. Does the President of the United States have the authority under the act of March 21, 1918, to do the thing which he desires to do? The lawyers in New York hold that he has not that authority; his own advisers say he has; and this bill is to remove the uncertainty or doubt with regard to the power.

I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not object to unanimous consent for the present consideration of this bill, but suggest, on the contrary, that it should be granted. I think the bill should be considered and disposed of very promptly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill the title of which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3319) to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to make provision for the reimbursement of the United States for the sums advanced to provide motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered by the President for the railroads and systems of transportation now under Federal control, herein called "carriers," pursuant to the authority conferred by the second paragraph of section 6 of the act of March 21, 1918, the President may, upon such terms as he shall deem advisable, receive in reimbursement cash, or obligations of any carrier, or part cash and part such obligations, or in his discretion he may accept for such motive power, cars, or other equipment, cash or the shares of stock or obligations, secured or unsecured, of any corporation not a carrier organized for the purpose of owing equipment or equipment obligations, or part cash and part such shares of stock and obligations, and he may transfer to such corporation any obligations of carriers received on account of motive power, cars, or other equipment, and he may execute any instruments necessary and proper to carry out the intent of the second paragraph of section 6 of said act of March 21, 1918, to the end that title to the motive power, cars, and other equipment so ordered by the President as aforesaid for the carriers may rest in them or their trustees or nominees.

In addition to the powers herein and heretofore conferred, the President is further authorized to dispose, in the manner and for the consideration aforesaid, of motive power, cars, and other equipment, if any, provided by him in accordance with any other provisions of said section, and of any obligations of carriers that may be received in reimbursement of the cost thereof.

SEC. 2. That any contract for the sale of any motive power, cars, or other equipment ordered or provided under any of the provisions of section 6 of said act of March 21, 1918, may provide that title thereto, notwithstanding delivery of possession, shall not vest in the carrier until the purchase price, which may be payable in installments during any period not exceeding 15 years, shall be fully paid and the conditions of purchase fully performed. Any such contract shall be in writing, and acknowledged or proved before some person authorized to administer oaths, and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission within 60 days after the delivery thereof, and shall be valid and enforceable as against all persons whomsoever.

SEC. 3. That nothing herein contained shall be deemed to abrogate or limit the powers conferred upon the President by said act of March 21, 1918.

SEC. 4. That the President may execute any of the powers herein granted through such agencies as he may determine.

SEC. 5. That this act is emergency legislation, enacted to meet conditions growing out of war and to effectuate said act of March 21, 1918.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, reference is made in the bill to section 6 of the act of March 21, 1918, which is the so-called Federal-control act. I ask that section 6 of that act be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEC. 6. That the sum of $500,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which, together with any funds available from any operating income of said carriers, may be used by the President as a revolving fund for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Federal control, and so far as necessary the amount of just compensation, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment, such terminals, motive power, cars, and equipment to be used and accounted for as the President may direct and to be disposed of as Congress may hereafter by law provide.

The President may also make or order any carrier to make any additions, betterments, or road extensions, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other equipment necessary or desirable for war purposes or in the public interest on or in connection with the property of any carrier. He may from said revolving fund advance to such carrier all or any part of the expense of such additions, betterments, or road extensions, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment so ordered and constructed by such carrier or by the President, such advances to be charged against such carrier and to bear interest at such rate and be payable on such terms as may be determined by the President, to the end that the United States may be fully reimbursed for any sums so advanced.

Any loss claimed by any carrier by reason of any such additions, betterments, or road extensions so ordered and constructed may be determined by agreement between the President and such carrier; failing such agreement the amount of such loss shall be ascertained as provided in section 3 thereof.

From said revolving fund the President may expend such an amount as he may deem necessary or desirable for the utilization and operation of canals, or for the purchase, construction, or utilization and operation of boats, barges, tugs, and other transportation facilities on the inland, canal, and coastwise waterways, and may in the operation and use of such facilities create or employ such agencies and enter into such contracts and agreements as he shall deem in the public interest.

Mr. ROBINSON. I call particular attention to the first and second paragraphs of that section, which are as follows:

That the sum of $500,000,000 is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, which, together with any funds available from any operating income of said carriers, may be used by the President as a revolving fund for the purpose of paying the expenses of the Federal control, and so far as necessary the amount of just compensation, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment, such terminals, motive power, cars, and equipment to be used and accounted for as the President may direct and to be disposed of as Congress may hereafter by law provide.

The President may also make or order any carrier to make any additions, betterments, or road extensions, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other equipment necessary or desirable for war purposes or in the public interest on or in connection with the property of any carrier. He may from said revolving fund advance to such carrier all or any part of the expense of such additions, betterments, or road extensions, and to provide terminals, motive power, cars, and other necessary equipment so ordered and constructed by such carrier or by the President such advances to be charged against such carrier and to bear interest at such rate and to be payable on such terms as may be determined by the President, to the end that the United States may be fully reimbursed for any sums so advanced.

Under the authority of section 6, as stated by the Senator from Iowa, there have been expenditures aggregating approximately $1,000,000,000, and this sum is now due the Government from the railroads. This bill proposes an arrangement by which a portion of that amount may be reimbursed to the Government through the activities of a car trust.

It is observable that section 6 of the Federal control act contemplates additional legislation, and without going into that subject in detail, it does seem to me that there is sufficient doubt as to the authority of the President to make this arrangement to justify the legislation which the Senate is now considering.

The bill relates to one of the complicated problems growing out of Federal control. It effectuates an amicable agreement which has finally been reached between the Railroad Administration and the carriers. The benefits that will accrue to the Government are in part, at least, that the Government promptly will be reimbursed in the sum of something like $225,000,000—I believe the Senator from Iowa has stated that—and the Government will therefore be relieved from carrying that sum in the future.

Mr. President, it is, of course, clear that the railroads themselves will be benefited by the arrangement which this bill carries out. It will relieve them from the immediate obligation to reimburse the Government for approximately $225,000,000 which, considered in connection with their other obligations, it is impossible, or at least impracticable, for them immediately to pay. They must be given time, and if the plan of this bill should be rejected and no other is adopted, this part of the debt of the railroads to the Government will have to be funded along with the remainder. In my judgment this is about the best arrangement that has been suggested, and the bill ought to be enacted.

Let me call to the attention of the Senator from Iowa some language in the bill, and ask him a question regarding it.

It is provided by section 2—

> That any contract for the sale of any motive power, cars, or other equipment ordered or provided under any of the provisions of section 6 of said act of March 21, 1918, may provide that title thereto, notwithstanding delivery of possession, shall not vest in the carrier until the purchase price, which may be payable in installments during any period not exceeding 15 years, shall be fully paid and the conditions of purchase fully performed.

This language is also found:

> Any such contract shall be in writing, and acknowledged or proved before some person authorized to administer oaths, and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission within 60 days after the delivery thereof.

I wonder if the Senator from Iowa can state whether it is the intention of this language to require both parties to the contract to swear to it or to acknowledge it, using the exact language of the bill, or whether it is merely intended that the proper officers of the carriers may make such acknowledgment?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the plan is that the Government shall transfer the title of these properties, the equipment properties, to a corporation which I assume is to be organized under the law of a State. The corporation is then to transfer conditionally the title of the property to the several carriers; and that contract, being one of sale, is to be acknowledged and filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. ROBINSON. Both by the Government corporation and by the carrier corporation?

Mr. CUMMINS. Both.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the information which I desired upon that point. Now, calling attention to section 5, this language—

> That this act is emergency legislation, enacted to meet conditions growing out of war and to effectuate said act of March 21, 1918.

What is the value and what is the effect of that language?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I think it has no value whatever, nor has it any meaning; but the bill which I introduced and which was before the Interstate Commerce Committee was prepared jointly, as I understand, by the Railroad Administration or its advisers, by the attorneys for the banking institutions which were to underwrite the certificates, and by the carriers; and it came to me with a memorandum that it had been agreed upon in that form by all these parties. I perceived at once that this last section has no effect whatever, or is of no value whatever, but I did not think it was sufficiently important to change it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not see any objection to the language, but I agree with the Senator from Iowa that it has very little if any legal effect.

I am satisfied that the bill ought to pass.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, the Government has purchased $375,000,000 worth of motive power—cars and other railroad equipment—and this is to be transferred to a corporation to be hereafter organized. That corporation is to pay to the Government $225,000,000 in cash, and the Government is to take the obligation of the corporation for another $150,000,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; that is not quite the arrangement. Assuming that the amount is $375,000,000—and it may vary; it may be $10,000,000 more or $10,000,000 less—the Government is to transfer to this corporation to be organized this property, and the corporation is then to transfer it to the several railroad companies to which it has been allocated by the Government itself by arrangement already made. The company is thereupon to issue car-trust certificates.

Mr. SMOOT. For $225,000,000?

Mr. CUMMINS. For about $250,000,000, and the Government is to subscribe to the stock of the corporation in a sum of about $150,000,000. The corporation then disposes of the car-trust certificates through the bankers who have already entered into an agreement to underwrite them. About $25,000,000 of the proceeds are to be deposited as a reserve fund with the Government; $225,000,000 of the proceeds are to be applied upon the general indebtedness of the railroads, extinguishing that amount of the indebtedness which the railroads now owe the Government, and the Government has in its possession, free and clear, about $225,000,000.

The carriers agree to pay all the interest charges, not only upon the stock but upon the car-trust certificates, and one-fifteenth of the principal each year, so that the whole sum at the end of 15 years is satisfied and discharged.

Mr. SMOOT. I can not see yet, Mr. President, but what the railroad companies will owe the corporation $150,000,000 instead of owing it to the Government as to-day. The Government turns over $375,000,000, in round numbers, of railroad equipment to the corporation that is to be organized. That corporation then transfers all this property to the railroads, according to their needs, as agreed to by the Government and the railroads.

Mr. CUMMINS. No; the carriers give the corporation of which I am speaking their obligations for $375,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly what I said in the first place, instead of the obligation of the railroads of $375,000,000 being with the Government, the railroads will be obligated to the corporation to be incorporated.

The CUMMINS. I think so.

Mr. SMOOT. The railroad equipment has been turned over to the corporation by the Government. Therefore it seems to me that the corporation should in some way pay $150,000,000 more than the $225,000,000, and not the railroads, because the railroads will have to pay it to the corporation and the corporation to the Government.

Mr. CUMMINS. The railroads execute their obligation to the corporation for the entire sum.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understand it.

Mr. CUMMINS. And upon the sum, and upon the additional title which is transferred, the corporation issues $250,000,000 of car-trust certificates. The bankers take them, and that amount is turned over to the Government. The Government subscribes for $150,000,000 of the stock of the company and carries for 15 years the debt that it now has in that form.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, the Government, instead of carrying an obligation against the railroads for the $150,000,000, subscribe to the stock of this corporation for $150,000,000, and they then in turn will take their chance, at the dissolution of the corporation, of receiving back that amount. No doubt they will receive it back, and they certainly will if the railroads have already agreed to take the property at $375,000,000.

Mr. CUMMINS. Exactly.

Mr. SMOOT. That is as I understood the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THREATENED STRIKE OF COAL MINERS.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 120) assuring the national administration of the unqualified support of the Congress in dealing with the impending strike of coal miners in the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 120.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	McCormick	Robinson
Ball	Hale	McKellar	Sheppard
Bankhead	Harris	McNary	Shields
Borah	Harrison	Moses	Simmons
Brandegee	Henderson	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Calder	Hitchcock	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Capper	Johnson, Calif.	New	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newberry	Smoot
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Spencer
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Swanson
Curtis	Kendrick	Overman	Thomas
Dial	Kenyon	Owen	Townsend
Dillingham	Keyes	Page	Trammell
Elkins	King	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Fall	Kirby	Pittman	Walsh, Mont.
Fernald	Knox	Poindexter	Warren
Fletcher	La Follette	Pomerene	Wolcott
Gay	Lodge	Ransdell

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] are absent on official business. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is detained from the Senate by illness in his family. The senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are absent on public business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, is the motion of the Senator from Colorado now before the Senate?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Colorado has moved to proceed to the consideration of Senate joint resolution 120.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to that.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which was read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 120) assuring the national administration of the unqualified support of the Congress in dealing with the impending strike of coal miners in the United States.

Whereas the officers of the United Mine Workers of America have ordered all miners in the bituminous coal mines of the United States to strike on Saturday, the 1st day of November next, notwithstanding efforts of the Secretary of Labor to secure some basis of negotiation suspending or preventing same; and

Whereas the representatives of said organization have arbitrarily rejected the President's earnest counsel for compromise; and

Whereas strikes in other fields of industry heretofore ordered and still unsettled threaten to continue indefinitely; and

Whereas demands for increased wages and shorter hours, accompanied by expressed or implied determination to enforce such demands, if necessary, by strikes in other fields of industry, have been and are being made; and

Whereas the threatened strike of the bituminous coal miners will, if carried into effect, interfere with, injure, or suspend nearly all the national pursuits and industries, inflict continued and incredible hardship and suffering upon all the people of the United States and provoke disorder, violence, bloodshed, and insurrection throughout the land; and

Whereas the enforcement of the law and the maintenance of order for the security of life and property and the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government and must be at all times vigorously and effectively safeguarded by the use of every means essential to that end: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the great emergency confronting us, and call upon them to vindicate the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, did the Senator from Colorado intend to address the Senate?

Mr. THOMAS. No, Mr. President; I think the proclamation of the Attorney General, if I may call it so, which was published in the morning papers, is all the argument that may be needed for such a resolution. I think it ought to be passed without objection.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I have no objection to the body of the resolution proper, with a slight change which might be made, because, as I understand the resolution, it does nothing more than indorse the action of the Government in maintaining law and order.

Mr. THOMAS. What change does the Senator recommend?

Mr. BORAH. The first change I was going to recommend was to strike out the preamble.

Mr. THOMAS. But the Senator stated that he had no objection to the body of the resolution, with a slight amendment, and my inquiry goes to that.

Mr. BORAH. The amendment which I had in mind was the amendment which the Senator and I discussed the other day, which I understood was satisfactory to the Senator; that is, to insert, after the word "Government," on page 2, line 7, the words "in using such constitutional means as may seem necessary."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if it will facilitate immediate action upon the resolution, I want to state to the Senate that I am not insistent upon the preamble. I think the preamble should remain in the resolution. That is a personal opinion, however. But, of course, I am more concerned about the resolution itself.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, in line 7, after the word "Government," insert the words "by resorting to such constitutional means as may be necessary."

Mr. THOMAS. "Constitutional and lawful means."

Mr. BORAH. Very well; that suits me just as well.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if he is willing to strike out the preamble?

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask whether the amendment submitted by the Senator from Idaho was agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, what is the part of the preamble to which the Senator from Idaho refers? Is it the first three lines?

Mr. BORAH. All the "Whereases," so as to restrict it to the resolution itself.

Mr. THOMAS. The preamble extends to the line numbered 1 on page 2. So far as I am authorized to do so, I am willing to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I move to strike out the title and the preamble, except the words "joint resolution," beginning with the word "assuring" and ending with the word "end," on page 2, at the close of the preamble.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that amendments to the preamble should follow the disposition of the resolution itself. The Chair is not entirely certain of that, but thinks the rules of the Senate so provide in effect.

Mr. BORAH. In this particular instance I would not vote for the preamble itself and would want to oppose the joint resolution with the preamble in it. The Senator from Colorado has a perfect right, of course, to amend the joint resolution in any way he desires.

The reason why I am opposed to the preamble is because, in my judgment, it recites and concludes the case against the miners, which I do not think we ought to undertake to do upon such facts as we have before us. Indeed, as a legislative body, we have nothing to do. So far as supporting the Government in maintaining law and order and protecting the rights in the district and protecting lives in the district, of course I desire to be recorded in favor of it, but I do not want to vote even in the form of a preamble for a statement of fact which seems to pass upon the question as between the operators and the miners. While perhaps the rule is as the Chair states it, I think we ought to settle the preamble in this case before we vote upon the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is so doubtful about the application of the rule that he will not enforce it unless the point is raised by some Senator. The proposed amendments to the preamble can proceed.

Mr. THOMAS. While I do not believe that the preamble to the proposed joint resolution has the effect which the Senator from Idaho has stated, I am willing to accept any method of securing favorable action upon the joint resolution itself that is possible, without making the motion myself.

Mr. BORAH. Then I make the motion, Mr. President, that all after the title, "Joint resolution" down to the word "Resolved," in line numbered 1 on page 2, be stricken out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wish to ask the Senator from Idaho if he sees any particular objection to leaving in the last clause of the preamble, on page 2? It seems to me to be germane and a rather appropriate description of the relation in the body of the resolution.

Mr. BORAH. That is an axiomatic proposition, with which I have no controversy. That is merely stating in the preamble what is contained in the resolution proper, to wit, the enforcement of law and the maintenance of order. I have no objection to that, if the Senator desires to leave it in.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As the Senator says, it may be axiomatic, but it calls the attention of the country to the fact that it is the paramount duty of the Government at all times effectively to safeguard life and property, and I think it is very proper to state it in this connection.

Mr. BORAH. I have no objection to that, because I am in favor of maintaining law and order.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that there certainly can be no doubt that the title may not be amended until after the joint resolution is passed, but in this instance I have no objection to doing that. I do not think, however, that we ought to fall into the practice of amending the title before a bill or joint resolution is passed.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent that the title be stricken out. I am not going to support the joint resolution with any such generalizations in it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. To which portion of the preamble does the Senator refer?

Mr. BORAH. I mean where it says, "assuring the national administration of the unqualified support of the Congress in dealing with the impending strike of coal miners in the United States," and so forth.

Mr. THOMAS. As I understand the motion of the Senator now——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Mexico will state his point of order.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Rule XXIII reads:

> When a bill or resolution is accompanied by a preamble, the question shall first be put on the bill or resolution and then on the preamble, which may be withdrawn by a mover before an amendment of the same, or ordering of the yeas and nays; or it may be laid on the table without prejudice to the bill or resolution, and shall be a final disposition of such preamble.

Mr. LODGE. There is no doubt about the rule, but that we can do what we desire by unanimous consent was my suggestion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair did not hear the point of order raised by the Senator from New Mexico. The Senator will state it again.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think I can relieve the situation. I will accept the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho to eliminate all matter in the resolution beginning with the word "assuring" on page 1 and including the first whereas on the second page.

Mr. POMERENE. Does not the Senator want to include in his motion the following words, "Therefore be it"?

Mr. BORAH. They are in now.

Mr. POMERENE. They should be included in the motion just made.

Mr. LODGE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. The Senator from Colorado is not required to make a motion; he can modify his own resolution.

Mr. POMERENE. I was just going to suggest that he would want to begin his resolution with the word "Resolved."

Mr. THOMAS. It does so begin. The preamble precedes instead of succeeding the word "Resolved."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho that the preamble of the joint resolution shall be considered before the disposition of the resolution itself?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the right to modify at this stage belongs to the mover of the resolution, and if he cares to modify it, it can be done, of course, under the rule.

Mr. THOMAS. I consent to the modification of the joint resolution by accepting the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho, and ask to strike out all in the resolution beginning with the word "assuring," on the first page, and extending to and including the first whereas of the preamble, on page 2, so that the resolution will begin with the last whereas, on page 2, and comprise that whereas and the resolution itself.

Mr. McCORMICK. I want to suggest to the Senator from Colorado, in view of the amendment to the preamble, that the emergency to which reference is made in line numbered 5 on page 2 might be any great emergency. I suggest that the words "confronting us" be stricken from the resolution, and that in lieu thereof the words be inserted "arising out of the impending strike of bituminous coal miners."

Mr. THOMAS. I accept the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. May I ask that the amendment be read as amended?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution as modified.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed, on page 2, in lines numbered 5 and 6, to strike out the words "confronting us" and insert in lieu thereof the words "arising out of the impending strike of bituminous coal miners," so that as amended the resolution has no title and reads as follows:

> Whereas the enforcement of the law and the maintenance of order for the security of life and property and the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government and must be at all times vigorously and effectively safeguarded by the use of every means essential to that end: Therefore be it
>
> Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the great emergency arising out of the impending strike of bituminous coal miners, and call upon them to vindicate the majesty and power of the Government by resorting to such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the joint resolution as amended be reported to the Senate?

Mr. FRANCE. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BORAH. Before the yeas and nays are ordered, while I have no objection to that, yet I wish to make just a brief statement in order that I may not be misunderstood hereafter.

The letter of the Attorney General, in so far as it states the duty of the Government with reference to upholding and enforcing the law with reference to the rights of citizens, meets with my entire and hearty approval. But, Mr. President, I disagree with the Attorney General upon some of the facts which he has stated in his letter. I do not know that it is necessary at this time to discuss them; perhaps it is not necessary to go further than to merely state them.

I think the contract under which these men were working has terminated. I do not believe it is in existence at this time.

It is not existent for the reason, first, that so far as this contract is concerned the war is over, and, even if that were not true, the action of the Government with reference to this particular contract heretofore has, in my judgment, terminated it. I do not want, therefore, by reason of what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has stated, that the statement of the Attorney General is sufficient and ample to cover the entire matter, to be understood as admitting that the contract under which the miners were operating is still in existence. That is a debatable question, in my judgment, to say the least.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. I, perhaps, ought to say, preliminarily, that I do not agree with the Senator from Idaho that the war has terminated or that this contract has terminated; but I desire to call the Senator's attention to the language following that statement in the Attorney General's letter in which he says that there are other contracts in which there is no such limitation. I may not state the exact language, but that is the substance of it.

Mr. BORAH. I do not admit the fact. There is no other contract under which strikes are being ordered. I may be in error, but I have that statement from those who ought to know.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Idaho is mistaken about that in so far as some of the mines in Colorado are concerned.

Mr. BORAH. Of course, I have not seen the contracts, but I have the statement from those who are in a position to know, who claim that those contracts are not being disregarded. What I have reference to when I say that the contract is no longer binding is the contract to which the Attorney General refers in particular, leaving out now the disputed proposition as to whether there are other contracts which are under different conditions and are expressed in different terms; but the contract to which the Attorney General refers as not being terminated, in my judgment, is terminated; at least it is a debatable question, and I do not want to be concluded upon it by any vote that I cast here to-day.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, of course I am in favor of the adoption of every lawful means by the Government to protect persons and property in times of disturbance in this country. Before proceeding I should like, if I may, to have the attention of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] for just a moment, inasmuch as the suggestion I am about to make concerns his resolution. There was inserted, at the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in the latter part of the joint resolution, where it calls upon the Government to vindicate the majesty and power of the Government, a provision that it should do so in a lawful and constitutional manner. There is no such provision in the first part of the joint resolution, in which we pledge our support unqualifiedly. While, of course, I am not assuming that the Government will adopt any unlawful means, I am aware that in times of great excitement, where great conflicting interests depend upon the exercise of severe measures of restraint, there is frequently a difference of opinion as to whether some means employed by governments in times of emergency may or may not be lawful. Unless the resolution has been amended without my knowledge, it now provides:

> That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the great emergency—

And so forth.

That, Mr. President, absolutely pledges us to an unqualified support of anything that the Government may do.

Mr. THOMAS. But the Senator from Connecticut has overlooked the first amendment which was offered by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH].

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should be glad to have my attention called to it.

Mr. THOMAS. The first amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho refers to that identical question.

Mr. BORAH. My amendment reads, "by resorting to such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But the Senator from Idaho put that in the place where we call upon the administration "to vindicate the majesty and power of the Government"; but he did not put it in the place where we pledge ourselves unqualifiedly to support the national administration, and so forth. While I intend to give every support possible to any lawful action of the Government, I feel a little hesitant concerning the phraseology, because I would not support the Government in what I thought was an unlawful procedure any more than I would support the coal miners in an unlawful procedure.

I want the language so framed that if the Government at some time shall do something that I think is a gross violation of the constitutional right of an American citizen, I shall not have this thrown in my face and be accused of a breach of faith on my part. I do not think we ought to pledge unqualified support to some excited military commander or some Attorney General who may take an entirely different view of the Constitution of this country from that the Senate takes.

I desire to make a suggestion, which I do not think will weaken the resolution at all, but which will make it more agreeable to me at least. In line 5, on page 2, after the word "support," or at any other place where it will accomplish the purpose, I suggest the insertion of some language like this, "in the use of all lawful means," so as to read, "support in the use of all lawful means in the great emergency confronting us."

Mr. BORAH. I think that is a very good suggestion, but as the sentence is punctuated, the amendment which I offered covers the same thing. However, I myself have no objection to the amendment suggested by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the punctuation makes the language susceptible of that construction, I shall certainly not press my amendment; but in line 6, as the Senator will notice, after pledging our support, it proceeds to a different proposition and says, "and call upon them to vindicate the majesty and power of the Government," and so forth.

I will propose an amendment if the Senator from Colorado himself does not wish to modify his resolution to meet the suggestion.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I feel perfectly certain that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho covers the identical objection, and I am unable to perceive the necessity of duplicating it, as would be the case if the suggestion of the Senator from Connecticut were acted upon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, in view of that statement I will not offer the amendment. I have the assurance of the Senator from Colorado that he thinks that is the sense of the joint resolution now. All I want to preserve is my right to criticize an unlawful act of the Government.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that is unquestionably the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, but if it will suit the Senator from Connecticut better, I am perfectly willing, with his consent, to transpose the amendment by inserting it between the word "support" and the word "in," in line 5.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator from Colorado, if I understand him, suggests to the Senator from Idaho that the amendment which was agreed to in the place where the Senator from Idaho suggested it be inserted should be transposed so as to follow the word "support," in line 5, and thus modify the whole provision.

Mr. BORAH. That is perfectly satisfactory to me.

Mr. THOMAS. Very good; that is agreeable.

Mr. McCORMICK. Let the joint resolution as amended be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the joint resolution as amended.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the joint resolution by inserting the words "by resorting to such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary," to follow the word "support," in line 5——

Mr. THOMAS. Now, let the Secretary read the resolution as amended.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support by resorting—

Mr. BORAH. Instead of the words "by resorting to," I suggest that the words "in the use of" be employed. That would be better language.

The Secretary read as follows:

That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary in the great emergency arising out of the impending strike of bituminous coal miners, and call upon them to vindicate the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Illinois has suggested to me the striking out of the words "and call upon them to vindicate," in line 6, and substituting therefor the words "in vindicating."

Mr. McCORMICK. "And in vindicating."

Mr. THOMAS. "And in vindicating." That suggestion I am very glad to accept.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that transposing the amendment offered by the Senator from Idaho in its modified form it appears to me will make the meaning rather obscure. I therefore suggest to the Senator that the word "in" be stricken out and the words "to meet" be inserted.

Mr. THOMAS. In what line?

Mr. SMOOT. On page 2, line 5, after the word "necessary," at the end of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho, insert the words "to meet," so as to read "to meet the great emergency confronting us."

Mr. THOMAS. "Unqualified support to meet"—that is not grammatical.

Mr. SMOOT. "To meet the great emergency confronting us," so that it would read in this way:

That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the great emergency confronting us.

Mr. THOMAS. I accept that suggestion.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Idaho what support Congress can give the Department of Justice or any other branch of the Government in carrying out the laws? Have they not full power now to execute the laws? What does this joint resolution amount to?

Mr. BORAH. This is not the joint resolution of the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator was discussing it, and I was wondering just what support we could give the administration.

Mr. BORAH. I presume it would be a moral support.

Mr. THOMAS. Precisely.

Mr. KENYON. Moral support?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; but, of course, as a legal proposition we are not giving them any additional support at all.

Mr. FALL. What is the difference between a moral obligation and a legal obligation?

Mr. GORE. That is a point in casuistry.

Mr. KING. The question might be referred to the league of nations society.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of both the Senator from Idaho and the Senator from Colorado to the fact that the amendment as now proposed strikes out the title of the joint resolution. I think that under the procedure and practice of the Senate, and, in fact, of both Houses of Congress, a joint resolution should have a title. For instance, the rule provides for the reading of bills the first and second time by title only, and that rule applies to joint resolutions. I desire to suggest that some title appropriate to the joint resolution as it has been agreed upon or is about to be agreed upon should be inserted as a part of the amendments that are being arranged.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair desires to state that it is the joint resolution that is now before the Senate; the preamble is not before the Senate at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was not speaking of the preamble. I was speaking of the title.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not know that the Senator from Arkansas was here, but I called attention to that point, and the title—which, of course, under the rule must be dealt with last—was stricken out by unanimous consent. Of course, we can do anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly; and I presume by unanimous consent we can adopt a title after we have adopted the joint resolution.

Mr. LODGE. I think we are bound to do so.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator, then, agrees with me that the joint resolution must have a title?

Mr. LODGE. I should say so, offhand.

Mr. BORAH. Well, we can name the child after it is born.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I am perfectly willing to meet that difficulty, if it can be done, by making this a concurrent instead of a joint resolution. I understand that a concurrent resolution does not require a title. I inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts whether that is the case or not.

Mr. LODGE. I should suppose that any resolution would require a title. I have not the rule before me.

Mr. THOMAS. I do that in deference to the Senator from Idaho. Personally I am satisfied with the title to this joint resolution. I think the Senator's amendment went too far, but for the purpose of securing immediate action I was willing to accept it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I think by all means it ought to be a joint resolution, as it is a reassurance to the Chief Magistrate of this country. If it is a joint resolution, it will be sent to him. If it is a concurrent resolution, it will rest in our archives.

Mr. THOMAS. It will go to him anyway.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I had risen to suggest the action just proposed by the Senator from Colorado that this be changed from a joint resolution to a concurrent resolution. It would only be a joint resolution on the assumption that it required the President's signature. A concurrent resolution, of course, does not require the President's signature. It seems to me that a resolution of reassurance of this character ought not to call for his signature. It is purely an expression of congressional support, looking to the equal punishment of the offending and the equal protection of the unoffending.

Mr. LODGE. The rule simply says "a resolution." It does not confine it. It says "a bill or resolution." That covers all resolutions.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I desire to ask whether or not the statement of the Attorney General has been put in the RECORD?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised that it has not.

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Attorney General is the legal adviser of the administration. He states pretty clearly his idea as to the legal effect of the present situation. I ask that the statement of the Government's side, as appearing in the Washington Post this morning, together with the statement of the miners' side, may be inserted in the RECORD. The article is headed, "Two sides to the coal strike."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would suggest to the Senator that it might be well in connection with that statement to have inserted also the proclamation of the President which preceded these statements.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that has been put in the RECORD.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not sure. I did not request it, and I do not know that anyone has done so.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I do not see that here, but I have no objection to its going in.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that would be wise.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, that went into the RECORD in the House day before yesterday.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Washington? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 30, 1919.]

THE TWO SIDES TO THE COAL STRIKE.

The United States Government's Side.

Attorney General Palmer issued the following statement outlining the Government's attitude toward the coal strike at the Department of Justice at 8 o'clock last night after a long conference with Secretary Wilson, Director General Hines, Secretary Tumulty, Dr. Garfield, Assistant Attorneys General Francis P. Garvin and C. B. Ames:

"There can be no doubt that the Government has the power in the public interest, under the law, to deal with the projected strike of the bituminous coal miners without infringing upon the recognized right of men in any line of industry to work when they please and quit work when they please. The illegality of this strike can and will be established without in any way impairing the general right to strike, and the general right to strike is not in issue in any sense whatever in the present situation.

"This is true because the circumstances differentiate this case from the case of any other strike that has ever taken place in the country. It does not follow that every strike is lawful merely because the right to strike is recognized to exist. Every case must stand upon its own bottom and be governed by its own facts. Therefore, when the President said in his statement last Saturday that 'such a strike in such circumstances' is not only unjustifiable but unlawful, reference was had only to the conditions in the pending situation.

"The proposed strike was ordered in a manner, for a purpose, and with a necessary effect, which, taken together, put it outside the pale of the law. After the war began the production of fuel was regarded as one of the subjects of such peculiar public importance as to justify a special statutory enactment.

"The Fuel Administration was created to supervise the subject, and matters of wages as well as prices were considered and sanctioned by the Fuel Administration. After the cessation of hostilities the Fuel Administration suspended certain of its orders, but did not terminate them, and they are subject to reinstatement at any time upon the President's order, and the statute under which the orders were made is still in full force.

RECALLS VIOLATION OF CONTRACT.

"With this situation existing, the convention of United Mine Workers at Cleveland, last September, decided to annul all wage contracts on November 1, and took the unprecedented step of deciding in advance of any opportunity for consultation either with the Government or with the coal operators, to strike on November 1, unless satisfactory new arrangements should be made.

"Without any expression from the workers themselves, the organization promulgated a demand for a 60 per cent increase in wages, a six-hour day, and a five-day week, and authorized a strike to be effective November 1, before the demands were even presented to the operators. The demand for a new wage agreement covered only a part of the coal fields, but the strike order was sent broadcast to workers in other fields where operators had been given no opportunity to even consider demand for increased wages or decreased hours.

"All this has been done while the miners in every field, through their right of collective bargaining, had entered into a solemn contract with the operators fixing wages and hours for a definite period which has not yet expired. The operators, upon the insistence of the President, indicated their willingness to negotiate and arbitrate providing the strike is deferred, while the miners rejected the President's request for arbitration as a means of settlement, and refused to defer the strike. Some of the wage contracts were made with the sanction of the Federal Government, operating through the Fuel Administration, to run during the continuation of the war, or until April 1, 1920. Many others, however, run until a time still in the future without regard for the continuation of the war.

"While it is perfectly plain that the war is still on and any contract running until its conclusion is still in force, whatever weight may be given to the argument that the successful operation of the war no longer requires such contracts, it has no application whatever to the large number of such contracts which expire at a fixed date without regard for the war period.

POSITION OF CONGRESS AND COURTS.

"The armistice did not end the war, and the courts in many cases have held that the war-emergency statutes are still in force. The same rule must apply to war-emergency contracts. The Congress has held to this position so late as October 22, when an act of Congress was approved making even more effective the food and fuel control act.

"The suspension of the restrictions as to the price of coal is not necessarily permanent, and conditions warrant a renewal of those restrictions at this time; and yet the Government, if it reinstates the order fixing a maximum price, would be absolutely helpless to protect the people against exorbitant prices of the product if the contracts made under its sanction should now be deliberately broken.

"This does not mean that a change could not be negotiated and either agreed upon or arbitrated if proper protection of the public be accorded in the settlement, but it does mean that the public welfare in the war-time emergency must still be the permanent interest to be served by both parties. The Government is the protector of the public welfare.

"The proposed strike, if carried to its logical conclusion, will paralyze transportation and industry; it will deprive unnumbered thousands of men who are making no complaint about their employment of their right to earn a livelihood for themselves and families; will put cities in darkness; and if continued only for a few days will bring cold and hunger to millions of our people; if continued for a month, it will leave death and starvation in its wake. It would be a more deadly attack upon the life of the Nation than an invading army.

MORE DEADLY THAN INVADERS.

"By enacting the food and fuel control act Congress has recognized the vital importance in the present circumstances of maintaining production and distribution of the necessaries of life and has made it unlawful for any concerted action, agreement, or the arrangement to be made by two or more persons to limit the facilities of transportation and production, or to restrict the supply and distribution of fuel, or to aid or abet the doing of any act having this purpose or effect. Making a strike effective under the circumstances which I have described amounts to such concerted action or arrangement.

"It is the solemn duty of the Department of Justice to enforce this statute. We have enforced it in many cases. We must continue to do so, irrespective of the persons involved in its violation. I hope it will not be necessary to enforce it in this case. Indeed, I am hearing from many sources that large numbers of the miners themselves do not wish to quit work, and will not do so if assured of the protection of the Government, of which they properly feel themselves a part. It is probably unnecessary for me to say that such protection will everywhere be given, so that men may exercise their undoubted right of continuing to work under such terms and conditions as they shall see fit. The facts present a situation which challenges the supremacy of the law, and every resource of the Government will be brought to bear to prevent the national disaster which would inevitably result from the cessation of mining operations."

The Miners' Unions' Side.

INDIANAPOLIS, October 29.

The following statement was issued by the chiefs of the United Mine Workers after their conference here to-day:

"The conference of United Mine Workers, composed of members of the international executive board, the scale committee of the central competitive district, and the district presidents, United Mine Workers of America, gave most profound consideration to the statement of the President of the United States, which appeared in the public press recently, relative to the impending strike of bituminous miners set for November 1. No communication was received by the international officers of the United Mine Workers of America from either the President or any representative of the Federal Government.

"A canvas of the entire situation shows that a strike of bituminous miners can not be avoided. A regularly constituted convention of representatives of United Mine Workers held at Cleveland, Ohio, on September 25, ordered a strike of bituminous mine workers to become effective November 1 in the event a wage scale was not negotiated before that time.

ACCUSE THE OPERATORS AGAIN.

"The highest authority of the organization have acted in this manner, and no representatives of the organization have authority to set such action aside. The facts are that the same supreme authority which ordered the pending strike is the same as that which approved the contract which has now expired.

"The responsibility for the strike rests with the coal operators. They have refused to negotiate a wage agreement, notwithstanding the fact the mine workers' representatives have urged and beseeched them to do so. The fundamental causes which prompted the mine workers to take this drastic action are deep seated. For two years their wages have remained stationary. They appealed one year ago to the Federal Fuel Administrator, Dr. Garfield, and from him to the President of the United States, for an increase in wages sufficient to meet the increase in the cost of the necessaries of life. Their appeal was rejected and their request refused. Notwithstanding this, they continued mining coal until now their contract expires, when they are determined that their grievances must be adjusted in a reasonably satisfactory manner.

"The courts have held that the workingmen have a right to strike and may quit work either singly or collectively for the purpose of redressing grievances and righting wrongs. The Constitution and guaranties of this free Government give men the right to work or quit work individually or collectively.

ACTING UNDER THE CONSTITUTION.

"The mine workers, therefore, are but exercising the right guaranteed by the Constitution and which can not be taken away by the representatives of government when they quit work or when they refuse to work until their grievances are adjusted. The mine workers' representatives are ready, willing, and anxious to meet the coal operators for the purpose of negotiating an agreement and bringing about a settlement of the present unhappy situation. They will respond at any time to call for such a meeting and will honestly endeavor to work out a wage agreement upon a fair and equitable basis, which agreement alone will put the mines in operation and guarantee the Nation an adequate supply of coal. We assert that the mine workers have no other purpose in view—other than to secure a working wage agreement. All of their demands are incorporated in the wage proposal submitted to the coal operators, and each and all are subject to negotiation.

"Conscious of the grave responsibility resting upon the representatives of the coal miners, we have no other alternative than to carry out the instructions of the United Mine Workers' convention. The issue has been made, and if it must be settled upon the field of industrial battle, the responsibility rests fairly and squarely upon the coal barons alone."

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado if this should not be a concurrent resolution instead of a joint resolution? It requires the signature of the President, I assume, as a joint resolution, while a concurrent resolution would not require his signature.

Mr. THOMAS. A few moments ago the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] suggested that it should be a concurrent resolution instead of a joint resolution.

Mr. KENYON. I did not hear him.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator gave as his reason that inasmuch as this was a pledge of support to the administration its validity should not require the signature of the President; and I ask leave to make it a concurrent resolution if that should be its appropriate form. What I am concerned about is getting the resolution passed. It is not material about its designation as a joint or a concurrent resolution. I intend, after it is passed upon, to present a title to the resolution for consideration.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has said that his desire was to have the resolution passed. Of course, I can understand that, or he would not have introduced it; but I must say that I can see no necessity for it.

We are all here sworn to support the Constitution and laws of the United States. We are a distinct department of the Government of the United States. It is the duty of the administration to execute the laws and the Constitution of the United States, and, of course, it is our duty to sustain them in the execution of such laws. Unless something has occurred here in this body recently, they should not need any assurance of the fact that the Congress of the United States will stand by the laws and the Constitution of the United States. That should go without saying, or else the Congress of the United States should be dissolved by the council of the league of nations or some other power or authority. So long as we are here, we are supposed to be engaged in lending our support.

If the purpose is to give notice to those who are seeking to interfere with the due process of the law in the United States, if that is the purpose of the joint resolution, then it is directed to the wrong parties. It should give the notice directly to the United Mine Workers of America and others that the Congress of the United States agrees with and will support the administration in the administration of all the laws of the United States. How it can be necessary, however, to give such notice to those who are proposing to violate, if anybody is proposing to violate, the law, or under what theory it may be necessary to give the administration the assurance that the Congress of the United States will stand with the administration and uphold their hands in the performance of their duties under the Constitution and the laws, I do not know.

I must say that it seems to me entirely unnecessary—unless, as I say, by virtue of the recent occurrences here in the Senate, such reassurance is necessary—to utter a word upon the subject. Unless some one is convinced—as I may say that while not yet convinced I have been somewhat led to think recently—that occurrences here in the Senate would tend to merge the bars upon that flag into the red flag of socialism, and to dim the stars upon it; unless something of that kind has occurred which renders it necessary for us to give a reassurance of our adherence to the Constitution and to the laws of the United States, I shall vote against the joint resolution.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I think I understand the purpose of the Senator from Colorado in introducing this resolution. That there is a serious menace now confronting the United States, no man in this body or in the United States doubts. People have been calling upon us for protection—I assume they have been calling upon you the same as they have upon me—to pass some kind of legislation to safeguard the general welfare. We have assumed that there was sufficient law to deal with its infractions. Now, I think that inasmuch as the question is up the least the Senate can do under the present situation is to express its approval of what the President stated and what we understood him to say the other day, namely, that he was going to enforce the law against its violators, and we all know what he had in mind.

So far as I am concerned, I am very desirous of going on record in favor of this declaration as incorporated in the resolution introduced by the Senator from Colorado, and I do not care to haggle over the verbiage of it, either. I want to go on record as favoring law enforcement, and serving notice not only upon the administration but upon all law breakers of the country that we propose, as far as we can, to encourage all proper means and methods for enforcing the law and protecting the rights and welfare of the people.

Mr. BRANDEGEE obtained the floor.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me one moment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield; certainly.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to ask the Senator from Michigan if it has not been hitherto considered safe for the Congress to assume that the executive department would carry out the statutes which are enacted by this body?

I am not a lawyer, but I have labored under the impression that our business was to enact statutes and that the executive department was charged with the duty of enforcing them. I must admit that during the course of the war the Government seems to have been subverted. It has seemed to me to have become the practice for the Executive to interfere with the legislative business in the way of dictating, in a sense at least, or at least by strongly advising, legislative measures. I am under the impression that our Government will operate more efficiently in the performance of all of its functions if we adhere to the doctrines of the fathers that the legislation should arise from the people, should be enacted by the legislative body, and enforced by the Executive. I should like, personally, to know the object of this measure, and if there is any evidence that the executive department is unable, for any particular reason, to execute the statutes which have been enacted?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is that a question?

Mr. FRANCE. Yes. I desire to ask the Senator that question, as to whether there is any evidence of any breakdown in the executive department which would indicate the necessity of the legislative department assuming to direct or support or help in any extraconstitutional way the executive department to take proper action?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss at this time the question as to whether one department of the Government has infringed upon another or not. The passage of this resolution will not invade executive prerogatives. I confess that I have some serious doubts as to whether there is sufficient law at the present time to govern and control a situation such as impends, but I have been unable to prepare a remedial statute. I know of no proposition prepared by any other Senator. I am not in favor of unconstitutional means being employed. There must be some lawful way to protect the people. I remember, however, a few years ago, when this country was confronted with a similar disturbance, that when President Roosevelt appointed a commission to determine the facts and settle the strike, he was charged with having acted without authority of law. Anyway, he acted and the country approved, for that commission was potential in settling the disturbance.

I am not advising the President or instructing him to enforce the law. He has made a statement, if the papers published it correctly, which met with my approval, and I want the country to know that the United States Senate is in sympathy with that proposition. I would like to inform the President that if existing law is not adequate he can secure additional legislation when he shows its need. If it were proposed to pass a law now, we could express our ideas through that law; but no Senator proposes such a remedy at this time. Many think that existing law is sufficient. The President has said that he was going to enforce the statutes, and I want to believe him; and I want to approve now, and especially since this resolution has been presented to the Senate, the course he has said he would take. If you vote it down now, you say to the country that the Senate is not in sympathy with the proposition of law enforcement. There might have been some argument as to the propriety of introducing the resolution, but it is here, and being here I want to vote to approve its sentiment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am very glad I yielded, because the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] has almost completely expressed my views upon this question.

However, without criticizing at all the action of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], which is usually very wise and always well-intended, I want to say that I do not think it was really necessary to introduce this resolution, because it is a resolution expressive of confidence and of assurance of support in the administration to see that the Constitution and laws of this country are enforced. Every Senator takes an oath to that effect every time he is elected to the Senate, and really I do not think it is necessary to renew the oath every few days, and I do not think it gives any additional sanctity to the oath to adopt a resolution stating that we are still of the same opinion. Of course, every Senator is going to enforce the laws and the Constitution and uphold the hands of those whose duty it is to do so outside of this Chamber. Although I agree with the Senator from Michigan and I do not think it was necessary to ask us to redeclare our allegiance to a Government of law and order, now that the resolution is here it ought to be passed, in my opinion.

When the question comes up whether we are in favor of law and order or not, I think we had better vote, even if it is a work of supererogation, that we are in favor of law and order, if anybody doubts it; and that is what this resolution calls on us to do. I am in favor of the resolution as it has been amended, and I think it would be a mistake for the Senate as a body to vote it down now, irrespective of the action of individual Members of the Senate, although I appreciate the theory upon which some Senators may think that they ought to vote against it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I had concluded not to speak upon this subject, and would not except for the issue that has been raised between the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE]. Personally I have no doubt about the law being sufficient to handle this situation, and I shall be only too happy if the Attorney General carries out his statement that he intends to enforce the law; and knowing the Attorney General as I do know him, I believe that he will enforce the law. I am satisfied that these men who are bringing on this strike can be punished criminally under the conspiracy statutes. They can be punished under section 9 of the Lever bill. The Government under the broad equity powers which our courts have can reach this situation.

Bear in mind, please, that the situation is very different from what it has been in the past, in this, that the railroads, for instance, are now under the control of the Government. They are a Government agency. It is the duty of the Government to see that our people can perform their ordinary duties and be protected in them. The situation is not very different from what it was at the time of the great strike in Chicago, except that the Government has more power now to deal with the strike than it did have then. I just want to read one paragraph from the decision of the Supreme Court in re Debs, in One hundred and fifty-eighth United States, page 582. After reviewing the decisions of the courts, Mr. Justice Brewer said:

> It is obvious from these decisions that while it is not the province of the Government to interfere in any mere matter of private controversy between individuals, or to use its great powers to enforce the rights of one against another, yet, whenever the wrongs complained of are such as affect the public at large, and are in respect of matters which by the Constitution are intrusted to the care of the Nation, and concerning which the Nation owes the duty to all the citizens of securing to them their common rights, then the mere fact that the Government has no pecuniary interest in the controversy is not sufficient to exclude it from the courts or prevent it from taking measures therein to fully discharge those constitutional duties.

The Government now has a pecuniary interest in these railroads. It is our business to operate them for the common good of our people and to see to it that the people do not freeze. There can be no question about it, and, as it seems to me now, the issue is this, Shall the Government control Lewis or shall Lewis control the Government? I am for the Government on that issue. Every vote against this resolution, in my humble judgment, is a vote that will have the effect, whatever the purpose, of encouraging the present strike.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment. I am entirely willing to admit that this is simply a reiteration of our duty, which we would perform, I hope and trust, in any event, under our oath. I am quite ready to admit that it is a matter of sentiment. But men are largely governed by sentiment, and I think this is a very appropriate moment to say that the Congress of the United States is prepared to stand behind the administration in the enforcement of the law. I hope they would do it, anyway, but I think it is a good time to just say that, and say it over to the people of the United States.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, in voting for this resolution I do not want it to be understood that I am accepting the construction which seems to be placed upon it by some of those who are advocating it. In voting for the resolution I do not determine by any means that it is a fight between Lewis and the Government. The evidence might show it to be a fight between the operators and the Government. I do not know yet what the facts are sufficiently to say that it is a question of whether Lewis will run the Government or the Government will run Lewis. I am simply voting for the resolution because I believe in enforcing the law and maintaining order, regardless of whether it affects Lewis or affects the operators. That is as far as I want to be understood as going in voting for this resolution. I shall not prejudge the miners, but I shall always avow maintenance of law and order regardless of classes or interests.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, laying all legal technicalities and all mere verbalities aside, the American people are faced at this moment with this situation: That owing to a controversy between the coal miners and the coal operators there is a threat to freeze to death the American fathers and mothers and children. That constitutes a conspiracy to commit murder. That is a very grave statement to make, but it is none the less the truth. All men are responsible for the natural and probable results of their acts, individual or collective. The fact that November 1 was fixed as the date for its inception clinches the statement which I have just made. From April to April has hitherto been the coal-working contract year. November 1 is about the day on which even in the middle South fires must begin to burn to warm the family for the wintertime. One of the suspicious things about this is that not only are increased wages and shortened hours demanded but the date of expiration of contracts between the workers and the owners of the mines is sought to be changed from April 1, when the people, the public, have a chance, to November 1, when the people have no chance.

Mr. President, we are called upon, regardless of the merits of the controversy between these people, owners and employees, to submit to being frozen to death during the approaching winter; not exactly all of us, but most of us. The threat does not go to Mississippi, remember; I am not speaking for Mississippi. Mississippi has plenty of wood to burn, and Mississippi can get along without a pound of coal, except for her factories and railroads. Her factories, of course, would have to close down. Even the railroads would have to stop transportation, because they could not readjust locomotives to wood burning quickly. But the little children in the house could be kept warm. But what are you going to do with the great Middle West, the prairie States, that never had wood enough, even in pioneer times, but had to import coal or wood, one or the other, from some other part of the country, in order to keep the fires burning to keep the children alive.

Mr. President, I do not care what the purposes of these men were; I am not questioning their motives. I am simply dealing with the consequences and effects of their action. If a successful strike to cut off the production of bituminous coal could go into operation upon November 1 and continue in operation until the men engaged in it had overpowered the Government of the people, and then the people themselves, no tongue, much less a tongue as weak as mine, could describe the suffering that would take place in what used to be called the prairie States.

Not only that, Mr. President, but since that time the forests have been cleared in the old forest States. They have not wood enough to keep the people alive, even if they could get the wood to the firesides and adjust them to its burning. Not only that, but the factories would have to close down. Not only that, but the railroads would have to close down, and transportation would be cut off. We would not only be reduced to the old stagecoach period, but we would be in a worse condition, because we would not have any stagecoaches ready.

Mr. President, there is a higher thing in the United States than either capital or labor, than either employers or employees, in industrial pursuits, in transportation, or in coal mining. There is a thing of more importance than both of them put together, not only of more importance but outnumbering them in manifold measure, and that is the common weal, which, when in its aggregate form, we call the Commonwealth of the United States—the general public.

Mr. President, the administration has announced its determination to execute the laws regardless of fear or favor, regardless of capital or labor, regardless of capitalists or operatives, and a resolution coming from the legislative branch of the Government merely expressing its sympathy and its desire to cooperate with the Executive in that great work certainly can not do any harm. I differ with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] when he says that he has some doubt as to whether it ought to have been introduced. I think it ought to have been introduced. I wish I had thought of it myself. If I had, I would have introduced it.

It is time that the great American public was expressing itself, the great middle classes. It is not only well that the President of the United States issued his late letter, it is not only well that the Attorney General has issued his opinion, but it would be well that the legislative branch, the Congress, should issue its opinion, declare its purpose, if for no other reason than simply for the moral weight accompanying it and for the sake of the reinforcement given to the executive branch of the Government.

I want to go one step further. I not only want to see the legislative branch of the United States Government back up, bolster up, and encourage and add its moral weight to the action of the executive branch of the Government, but I want to see the people do something. Well, you say, what can the people do? I say that they can do this, and I ask attention to it: The doctor, the lawyer, the groceryman, the man who keeps the tailor shops and the clothing stores in the country, the druggist, the schoolteacher—everybody not connected with either one of these two mad adversaries, who would endanger civilization in their quarrel, across the lines of which lies the interest of the public—have something to say, or, at any rate, if they are men and women of the right type, ought to have something to say. I would advise them in every locality where this strike takes place to meet in solemn assembly, as our forefathers met before and during the Revolution, and to pass resolutions that they will sell no food, no clothing, no shoes, that they will furnish no drugs, to either capitalists or laboring men who do not agree to leave the controversy between them to arbitration, and fair arbitration at that, unless they submit to an industrial peace league, if you please; a people's boycott, you may call it, if you will, should follow.

There are times when governmental action does not answer every purpose, because the man against whom the issue is decided says, "It was the Government; you had to call the Government in in order to put me down." Let us put them both down. Neither of them is altogether right. Let not the law alone do it—the administrative and the Executive—but let the people form unions of their own, if you choose to call them so, make a strike of their own, if you choose to call it so, and let them agree to furnish neither food nor clothing nor drugs nor doctors' service nor legal service nor anything else to either of the mad parties to this blind controversy, who are threatening civilization and the other institutions of the United States, until they quit it; and the time for knowing when they have quit it will be when they agree to leave to fair arbitration the questions in controversy between them, going on with the work of mining and transporting coal in the meantime, while the arbitrators, representing the public, are hearing and deciding.

I do not believe the miners have been solely at fault. I have a notion that when they entered into the original contract and said it would last until the end of the war, both sides probably meant until the end of the fighting, not thinking about the technicalities of it. But whatever may be involved upon the merits of the question, let the people in every locality absolutely refuse to feed or clothe or doctor or legally advise or furnish medicine to those engaged on either side in this conspiracy to murder the people by freezing them into submission. Let the public strike just a little bit just now—not strike by its own initiative by refusing public service to the Republic, not strike by freezing, but simply by saying, "In our opinion, when you threaten to freeze the American people you become, regardless of law, regardless of the war, regardless of disease, regardless of all merely technical things, criminals in the eyes of God and of men, and especially in the eyes of God."

I wish to God that I had the voice, the influence, the character, the standing that could arouse the great American public to the importance of this trouble, not only in itself but as it applies to the future. No man with common sense denies the right of any man to quit work. No man with any spirit of modern progress in him denies the right of any set of men to strike. But there are limitations to every right. I have the right to do what I choose, provided I do not injure you in doing it. These people have the right to their miserable quarrel—and, by the way, it has ceased to be a quarrel between them; it is now a quarrel between both of them on the one side and the public on the other side. They both have the right to fight like Kilkenny cats, "cats which in Kilkenny fought until of cats there weren't any," but they have no right to fight until there are none of us left.

I am not speaking for my own people nor for myself. I can go down to the plantation and burn wood, and all the balance of my people can do likewise. They can not hurt us in our homes. But, Mr. President, think a moment! New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, Cleveland, Baltimore, and the great cities of this country depending from day to day, among the poorer classes, upon a bushel or 5 bushels of coal to keep themselves warm! The cause of labor is a great cause; there is no doubt about that. God knows I sympathize with the under dog all the time. I resolve every doubt in his favor, but the cause of human lives, of women, and little children is a greater cause than all the causes and quarrels between capital and the greatest proletariat that have ever happened since the beginning of the world.

I had the honor some time ago to say upon the floor of the Senate that the time had come when the public must take charge. I want to say that the time is rapidly approaching when there must be an industrial league of peace and when men shall not be permitted to take their quarrels into their own hands in connection with these great controversies which affect the health and life of the public, but both sides in such cases should be forced to submit to some form of fair arbitration, where common sense and common justice and peace and mercy under the agencies of God shall prevail.

Mr. President, draw three pictures for yourself, if you please. The fat old capitalists gathered around the table saying, "Well, let them strike and go to the devil; they can not hurt us." Labor agitators, for the most part hyphenates or aliens of one sort and another, gathered in another place, saying, "We have the whip hand and we can starve the American people to death in a month if we begin on the 1st of November and stand by one another." Then look at the third picture—the seamstress in her little apartment, the shoemaker and his wife and children, the brick mason and his people, the dry goods clerk wherever he happens to live. Look at these two people striking at one another, the two of them masters of the industry, the capitalist able to get his coal and the miner able to get his coal, by agreement more or less subterranean, and these other people whom I have described—the innocent bystander—shivering, while the mother piles upon the children all the blankets and all the extra clothing that she can get, while she herself goes cold.

Mr. President, this war has brought upon the world a new era in a great many respects. The old relationship between capital and labor must be readjusted. The old way of settling these things can not continue. In justice to labor it can not continue; in justice to the public it can not continue; and, taking it at a far-flung battle-line distance, in justice to capital, it can not continue. But, notwithstanding that fact, the readjustment must be made sensibly and slowly and gradually and commonsensically, if I may frame that adverb.

The American people, whatever else may happen, are not going to adopt soviet government; I do not believe they are going to nationalization of raw materials and of the necessities of life, though that may some day happen; but certainly they are not going to government by class.

In Russia there were two parties—the Bolsheviki and the Mensheviki, as they call them. One—the Mensheviki—stood for all the people; that is, a majority of all the people of all classes; the other stood for a class. Mr. President, speaking for myself and, as I earnestly believe, for the American people, I will no more submit to the rule of the proletariat as a class than I will submit to the rule of soldiers or sailors as a class; I would no more submit to either than I would submit to the rule of lawyers or doctors or livery-stable keepers, respectively, as a class.

The whole theory of Anglo-Saxon civilization, beginning away back yonder in Great Britain, carried by every Englishman wherever he went, to every part of the world, is the theory of the government of the people, under representative institutions, more or less limiting that government. So far as the removal of limitations is concerned, let the good work go on; but let there be no interference with the great fundamental principle that it must be a rule of the majority, and a majority constituted of all classes, from the man who fills the pulpit on Sunday down to the man who cleans out the sewers on Tuesday. That is the Anglo-Saxon and British theory that has accompanied the race around the world and that finds its home now not only in the old country but in Canada, in Australia, New Zealand, and South Africa, and supremely and at its best, perhaps, herein America, amongst the children of the English-speaking race which rebelled and taught the father of this household that he must respect the rights of his children.

My call would be upon the people everywhere to help the Executive and to help the legislative; to have public meetings and denounce both sides of this controversy, saying, "If you do not by a certain date"—say the 10th of November—"agree to arbitrate the controversies between you"—meantime going on with coal mining—"you shall have no food; you shall have no clothing; you yourselves shall have no fuel; we will take what you have selfishly provided against us and for yourselves; you shall have no medical attention; you shall have nothing except the services of the undertaker, if you happen to die or the services of the priest while you are dying, if you believe in the need of absolution."

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to change this resolution from a joint resolution to a concurrent resolution. I think that can be done under the provisions of Rule XXI.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have no objection to that. I think the Senator is doing precisely the right thing, but Rule XXI provides that—

> Any motion or resolution may be withdrawn or modified by the mover at any time before a decision, amendment, or ordering of the yeas and nays.

It is, therefore, not necessary for the Senator to ask unanimous consent, for, as the mover of the resolution, he has the right to modify it.

Mr. LODGE. Not after the resolution has been amended.

Mr. FLETCHER. But the resolution has not been amended.

Mr. LODGE. It has been amended.

Mr. FLETCHER. Even so, I think the mover may modify it.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will look at the rule he will find that under the rule the right of modification is prior to any action on a bill or resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). The Senator from Colorado asks unanimous consent that the resolution be changed to a concurrent resolution. Is there any objection to the change suggested by the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is changed accordingly.

Mr. THOMAS. I now move to insert as the title of the resolution:

> Concurrent resolution assuring the administration of the support of the Congress in dealing with the impending strike.

I have submitted the changed title to the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and it has received his consent.

Mr. LODGE. That modification, of course, properly should come after action on the resolution, but by unanimous consent it can be made now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado ask unanimous consent for the consideration of his amendment now?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Colorado? The Chair hears none, and the title of the resolution is amended as suggested by the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong a futile debate on what appears to me to be a perfectly useless measure. I am not one of those who believe that the executive departments have so completely broken down that they need to be assured of the support of the legislative branch of this Government at this time by any such measure as this. I must confess that there are many evidences that the executive department has lamentably failed during the recent months to meet the responsibilities which have been placed upon it; but I am not prepared to go so far as to say that it is so disorganized and demoralized as to be in need at the present time of any such support as this which we are offering in a resolution, which proposes no legislative remedy, and which, apparently, if I may judge by this debate, has been drawn and supported by Senators who, because of their many other duties, are absolutely unaware of any of the conditions which have brought about this most unfortunate situation.

It is always very easy when an emergency such as this arises to intensify the misconception and the misunderstanding by abusing the other fellow. For myself I must say that I think an emergency has arisen in this country which can not be met by an antagonistic spirit, by condemning the other man. The time has come when every man must look to his own conduct and to his own responsibility to see whether he may possibly be in part responsible for the situation which has been created.

It is very easy to blame the leaders of the miners; it is very easy to condemn the industrious and courageous miners working deep beneath the surface of the earth, and to say that they are responsible for bringing about an intolerable situation. It is very easy for us to assume that we have within our breasts more of the milk of human kindness and that we have more sympathy for the children who may suffer from lack of fuel than have the miners themselves, who, sirs, have frequently experienced in their own homes the suffering which comes from poverty. The situation has not been created entirely by the miners. It has been created by lack of administrative capacity on the part of certain agencies of the Government. I am not prepared to say that the miners are without blame; I am sure that the operators are not without blame, and I know that the Government is far from being blameless in the causing of this situation.

Now, I wish to introduce—and I said I would speak only briefly—portions of three letters simply to illustrate how these great controversies arise and how they may be the result of a lack of cooperation between the various interests concerned. There has been here a lack of cooperation between the operators, the Government, and the miners.

First, I introduce a letter written July 12—which, mind you, was long before there was any talk of a coal strike—from the secretary of one of the trade-union councils of my State:

ALLEGANY TRADES COUNCIL OF ALLEGANY COUNTY, MD.,
Cumberland, Md., July 12, 1919.

To the CONGRESSMEN AND SENATORS
FROM THE GREAT STATE OF MARYLAND.

DEAR SIRS: It has been published in the newspapers about the coal shortage this winter.

I beg to inform you that if there is any coal shortage and suffering it will be up to the coal barons, as at present the Georges Creek region is not working more than 20 per cent of the miners in this region, and then on short time.

The coal barons blame the slump on the miners for digging dirty coal. I wish to inform you that the law of this State gives the mining company the privilege of cutting 500 pounds of coal off of every car the miners send out of the mine if the coal is dirty, with a company man as judge.

The Hunkin-Conkin Construction Co. is trying to get a work train on the Cumberland & Pennsylvania Railroad to bring those miners to this city to work on the Kelley Springfield Tire Co. plant as laborers, at 35 cents per hour, and then they say a coal shortage. Why?

Hoping you will give this your kind attention.

I remain, yours,
[SEAL.] (Signed) JOHN O. FISHER, Secretary,
64 South Mechanics Street.

Mr. President, the miners sincerely believe that the operators, or, as they call them, the "coal barons," are responsible. Let me read next an extract from a letter from one of the operators, a very prominent and a truly patriotic man, as sincere and as good a man, I believe, as the miner who wrote the other letter; and that is complimenting the operator, because I know of the miner, and I know the kind of a man he is:

The writer is general manager of two companies operating in Maryland, the ——— Co. and the ——— Co., and one company operating in Somerset County, Pa., the ——— Co., and I wish to state to you herewith the true condition of our car supply from July 1 to August 15, inclusive.

The ——— Co. during the month of July, out of a total of 208 working hours, had a car supply for 144 hours' work—lost 64 hours on account of having no cars. The same company, from August 1 to 15, inclusive, out of a total of 104 working hours, had cars to operate only 43 hours; lost 2 hours on account of wreck and lost 59 hours account of no cars.

The ——— Co. during the month of July had a total of 208 working hours, had a car supply to operate only 95 hours, and lost 113 hours on account of no car supply. The same company, from August 1 to 15, inclusive, with a total of 104 working hours, had a car supply to work only 31 hours; lost 73 hours account no cars.

The ——— Co. during the month of July, out of a total of 208 working hours, had a car supply for 106 hours, and lost 102 hours account no cars. The same company, from August 1 to 15, inclusive, out of a total of 104 hours, received cars enough to work only 38½ hours; lost 3 hours account of wreck and lost 62½ hours account no cars.

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD, without reading, other paragraphs from this letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WOLCOTT in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

You will note from the above statement that July 1 to August 15, inclusive, the ——— Co. had railroad cars to work 187 hours and lost during the same period 123 hours account of not having railroad cars, or worked 60 per cent of the time and lost 40 per cent account no railroad cars. This company has a present car rating of 235 net tons per day.

The ——— Co., from July 1 to August 15, inclusive, had railroad cars sufficient to operate 126 hours and lost 186 hours account not having railroad cars, or worked approximately 40 per cent time and lost approximately 60 per cent time account railroad car shortage. This company has a present car rating of 220 net tons per day.

The ——— Co., from July 1 to August 15, inclusive, had railroad cars sufficient to work 144½ hours and lost 164½ hours account not having railroad cars, or worked approximately 46 per cent of the time and lost approximately 54 per cent of the time account shortage of railroad cars. This company has a present car rating of 280 net tons per day.

As the rules of the United States Railroad Administration, car-service section, their Circular C831, require that all coal cars be distributed equally on a percentage basis among all operators in the various districts, and if these rules are being carried out, the experiences of the above-mentioned companies necessarily represents the true performance of all coal companies in these two producing districts—that is, the Somerset district of Pennsylvania and the Georges Creek district of Maryland—and in view of the above-mentioned experiences, and in further view of the fact that the United States Railroad Administration require every coal company to furnish them a statement each day of the total number of cars received, the number of hours worked each day, and the number of hours lost each day, with the reason therefor, of which the statements made above are a résumé, Mr. Hines necessarily has at his disposal every day the true conditions of the car situation; and it is beyond the comprehension of any fair-minded person how Director General Hines could make the statement to the Senate committee or to the public in general that there is no serious car shortage, when the true condition has been, at least, a 50 per cent car shortage for the past six weeks; and I sincerely trust that you will convey this information to the Hon. Senator POMERENE, and, if possible, have Mr. Hines advise why our mines are idle approximately 50 per cent of the time when we are making requisitions for cars every day and do not receive the cars and are advised by the railroad officials that we do not receive the cars because they do not have them to distribute.

Certainly if Mr. Hines is sincere in his statement to Senator POMERENE and the Senate committee that there is no car shortage, then we would like to know why we are not being furnished cars sufficient to operate our mines every workday.

Mr. FRANCE. These extracts show that the mines in that region were unable to operate owing to a shortage of cars. Whose fault was that? Was that the fault of the man who got up in the early morning or in the middle of the night, perhaps, to go to the Maryland mine to work in the dark damps of the mine? He wanted to work. There was no Bolshevism in him when he put on his mining suit and put his lamp on his head and got ready to go down in the mine and do an honest day's coal digging. He was estopped because of the incompetence of a Railroad Administration which had not furnished the cars; yet we sit here in Washington and accuse the miners, because now they are discontented, of Bolshevism, and pride ourselves, sir, that our patriotism and our love of country is greater than theirs. Some of us are tempted to do that, if I may judge by this debate.

Now, let us see what the Railroad Administration says. The Senator from Ohio and myself, both being interested in the miners, took up this matter with the Railroad Administration. Shall we unqualifiedly condemn them? The Railroad Administration wrote me this letter:

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, August 23, 1919.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Replying to your favor of the 18th instant with reference to shortage of coal cars, particularly in the Allegany County coal region of Maryland.

The increased demand for coal started about the middle of July, and necessary arrangements were made to take care of same, both in the matter of allotment of new equipment and operating arrangements for repairs to bad-order coal cars and distribution to the various roads to meet their requirements.

Just about the time this increased demand started in we had intermittent shop craft trouble, and this finally culminated in a somewhat general strike of these men, which seriously interfered with the car-repair program and tied up the operation of some mines badly, preventing the usual circulation of empty cars to the mining regions. The Baltimore & Ohio road, which distributes the cars to the region referred to in your letter, was likewise affected. The cars referred to as standing around were some 500 bad orders which had accumulated during the shop trouble.

There has been considerable improvement in the car supply on this road during the past 10 days, which we expect will be continued.

Yours, truly,
(Signed) WALKER D. HINES.

HON. JOSEPH I. FRANCE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Well, now, who is to blame? We do not know the causes which led to that shop trouble, which led to the accumulation of cars out of repair, which led to the cars not going to the mines, which led to the miners not having cars to fill, which compelled the operators to close the mines.

I only present these facts to show you that this coal miners' strike raises a complicated question, and that Government officials may be to blame as much as the men may be at fault who are working in the mines, if they are at fault, which I am not prepared to admit.

I do know that so far as Maryland is concerned the miners have testified that they have not been able to work, and the operators confess that they have been compelled to reduce the working hours because of the shortage of cars. We do know that a governmental agency is at fault for some of the difficulty. I do not say that the closing down of certain of the mines during the months of July and August for so considerable a period had anything to do with the general coal strike; but I do say that it is time for us to examine into all aspects of this question before seeming to take sides in such a way as would tend to cause one class of our citizens to feel that they were being unjustly discriminated against, or that their case was being prejudged.

I do not wish the Congress ever to do anything which will intensify the widespread and ever wider-spreading conviction that in some way the Government does not represent the people. We observe on every hand evidences of profound unrest, and I believe that the profound unrest which we observe has a deeper underlying cause, and I believe that cause is one for which we ourselves are responsible. I believe it is this: If I understand the theory of our Government properly, it is a Government founded upon the theory that the people themselves are sovereign, upon the theory that legislation should arise from the people, that the popular will should be expressed to representatives in the legislative bodies, and that those representatives should enact the popular will into statutes and then that it is the duty of the Executive department—the chief duty, perhaps the sole duty—to see that those statutes are executed in a broad and comprehensive manner.

If that is the theory of our Government, we must all admit that during the period of the war our Government has been practically subverted. The legislation, instead of originating with the people, instead of being enacted by the legislators as a result of a popular mandate, has originated with the Executive and has descended to the legislative, and by the legislative body it has been imposed upon the masses of the people. That, I think, is a clear subversion of the whole theory of our Government; and it is, I believe, as a result of such subversion of the Republic, as a result, so to speak, of attempting to stand the pyramid upon its apex, that this profound unrest has taken place. The people feel that the Government is not responsive to their needs and to their wish.

I know that perhaps this seems somewhat academic, but I think it touches a very real and vital question; and, so far as I am concerned, the sooner the condition is cured, the better I shall be satisfied.

Lincoln said: "The people of these United States are the rightful masters of both Congresses and courts; not to overthrow the Constitution, but to overthrow the men who pervert the Constitution"; and, so far as I am concerned, the sooner the American people rise in support of the great Constitution, and the sooner they overthrow the men who have perverted it, the better I shall be satisfied, because I realize that standing upon the broad principles of that Constitution we have a government which is permanent and rational, and which always will be responsive to the popular will.

We must very shortly, sirs, give up government by intimidation, government by repression, and restore government by the people, government by discussion; and there can be no government by discussion until every statute is removed which prevents free and fearless discussion.

I am not opposing this resolution; but I do wish to say that I consider it utterly useless, and I do wish to say that it is not fair that the case of the miners should be prejudged until all of the factors have been carefully considered which have brought about this great and serious difficulty. Certainly I have already indicated to you that one of the great governmental agencies—the Railroad Administration—created by our act has in part broken down. Personally, I think that act was unwise. Personally, I think it was a colossal blunder to turn the railroads over to the Government for administration and operation; but if it was a blunder that blunder has been committed. Certainly, so far as the supply of coal cars to the mines is concerned, the administration has failed. Whether all of the failure can be attributed to the strike in the car shops, to which reference was made, I do not know; but the strike in the car shops has not been examined into, and it might have been founded upon most excellent reasons.

So, therefore, the whole question should not be prejudged; for I feel that we can get better results from letting the miners, from letting the operators, from letting all of the Government officials concerned in connection with this situation know that we are disposed as a legislative body to do everything we can to see that all of them are given fair consideration when they come before the bar of public opinion to present their case.

Personally—be it radical or not, I do not know—I have shared the view that there might some time come a happy period in the history of men's affairs when he who did the most dangerous and burdensome work for the community would be among the best paid and would work the shorter hours.

If it is a fair day's work for the intellectual worker, employed at tasks congenial to him, to continue at those tasks for 12 hours in a comfortable office, surrounded by his books and his secretaries, certainly a five or six hour day to the man who goes into the damps and dangers of the earth to work constantly at the hazard of his life does not seem to be too much in the way of generosity.

I am in favor, as a medical man, of a short day for the miner, and I believe that the interests of the community at large would be subserved by a recognition of the fact that no man can continuously mine coal for any great number of years without sacrificing much of his health, if not his life, as a result of engaging in that occupation. The miner's working life is a short one, comparatively, and the character of the work must be taken into consideration when we are discussing the subject of hours and pay.

I am not attempting to discuss this question in any large way, but I do feel that before this resolution passes the miners should be assured that we do not call them pariahs, that we do not prejudge their case, that we do not impugn their patriotism. I feel that we should clearly announce that this resolution does not mean that.

I need not say these words for the Maryland miners. They know my attitude toward them. They know that I will stand here, or in any legislative body in which I have the honor to be, and contend for a fair deal for the miners and for a fair consideration of their claims. I did feel that before this resolution passed something should be written into it as an evidence that this is not a simple controversy between a trade-union leader and the Government, but that it is a great problem, to be met in a broad spirit, a great difficulty to be removed, not by repressive but by constructive, upbuilding methods, based on a true knowledge of conditions.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of the resolution as printed, on line 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment, which the Secretary will read.

The SECRETARY. Add, at the end of the concurrent resolution, the following words:

And we hereby assure the coal miners that they will in like manner be protected in the exercise of all lawful means in any effort to secure their rights.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. On that amendment, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gay	Lenroot	Shields
Ball	Gronna	Lodge	Smith, Ga.
Bankhead	Hale	McKellar	Smith, Md.
Borah	Harris	McNary	Smoot
Brandegee	Harrison	Moses	Spencer
Capper	Henderson	Myers	Sterling
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	Nelson	Sutherland
Colt	Johnson, Calif.	New	Swanson
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newberry	Thomas
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Townsend
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Trammell
Dial	Kellogg	Overman	Walsh, Mass.
Dillingham	Kendrick	Owen	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	Keyes	Page	Warren
Fall	King	Poindexter	Williams
Fernald	Kirby	Ransdell	Wolcott
Fletcher	Knox	Robinson
France	La Follette	Sheppard

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to announce the absence on official business of the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Seventy Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin will be rejected, because I think that if the resolution should pass thus amended it would commit us to an expression of opinion as between contending parties. But I join with the Senator in the request for a yea-and-nay vote, which I hope will be granted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask to have the Secretary report the amendment which I offered.

Mr. KNOX. I would like to have the resolution reported in connection with the amendment, so that we may know how the resolution would read as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution as it has been modified by the Senator from Colorado. Afterwards the Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The SECRETARY. The concurrent resolution as it now stands reads as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the great emergency arising out of the impending strike of bituminous coal miners and in vindicating the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] offers an amendment, as follows:

Add at the end of the concurrent resolution the following words: "And we hereby assure the coal miners that they will in like manner be protected in the exercise of all lawful means in any effort to secure their rights."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Upon that, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I move to amend the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin by inserting in place of the words "the coal miners" the words "all citizens," and after the word "lawful" to strike out the remainder of the amendment and to insert the word "rights," so that the amendment as amended would read:

And we hereby assure all citizens that they will in like manner be protected in the exercise of all lawful rights.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Nebraska what new thing that adds to the original resolution?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is my purpose to avoid singling out any particular class of individuals for a senatorial assurance that they will be protected in their rights.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I agree with the Senator that that should not be done; but I am asking what there is in the original resolution as presented by the Senator from Colorado that does not protect the interests and rights of every citizen in the United States without class distinction?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it does. It is entirely satisfactory to me as proposed by the Senator from Colorado, but I am making this motion to amend the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the resolution was introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] and amended at the suggestion of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. The preamble was stricken out down to the last "whereas" on page 2. A further amendment suggested by the Senator from Idaho comes after the word "support" in line 5:

In the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may seem necessary.

Mr. President, in that form, with the elimination of the preamble, no body of men in this country was designated against whom this resolution could be presumed to be directed. But at the suggestion of the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] the resolution was further amended to designate especially the miners and the impending strike which it is understood has been ordered by that organization. Hence as the resolution stands, now to be voted upon by the Senate, it is plainly directed against the coal miners' organization of this country. I submit that in a measure it prejudges this organization and assumes that it is about to engage in an unlawful act.

Mr. President, up to this hour it is lawful for labor to strike. It is the only weapon that labor has for the betterment of its conditions in dealing with the great organizations of capital which have been permitted to be built up in this country, so powerful that no individual laborer can protect his individual interests for a moment in dealing with it or bargaining with it.

I do not believe that it is just, upon the eve of this strike, by any suggestion that Congress may make, to intimate that unlawful proceedings are to result from it. I am not impressed with the opinion of the Attorney General which has been issued. He has failed to designate any particular statutes or any special laws that are to be violated. I am entirely content that a resolution should pass, if it is deemed necessary by the Senate and by the Congress, pledging support to the enforcement of law and order in this country, but I protest against the passage of a resolution which implies in advance that the proposed strike of the miners is unlawful. We have no right to make that assumption.

I have been a member of this body for some twelve or thirteen years. I do not remember to have heard Senators upon this floor protest against the increase in the price of coal upon the people of the United States. Unlawful organization has advanced the price of anthracite outrageously. When there was no monopoly controlling it the price of anthracite coal at the seaboard was $2.50 a ton. It is now selling at from $12 a ton to twenty-odd dollars a ton, depending upon where it is delivered. I have heard no protest from Senators upon this floor against the extortionate prices levied upon the public.

Bituminous coal, when mined under conditions of competition, sold at 70 and 80 and 90 cents a ton at the mouth of the mine, and was delivered at $1 to $1.50 per ton to consumers. It is now quoted all over the country at from $5 to $9 and $10 a ton, and even more than that in some localities, and no one has risen here to protest against the action of the mine owners.

But some one will say that these excessive prices for coal result from the increased cost of production due to the high wages paid to labor. Mr. President, this talk about high wages paid to labor is without any just foundation. The actual wages paid to labor in the United States have steadily declined for 20 years. What does it profit the laborer if you give him, as they have given these coal miners, an advance of 30 to 70 per cent in their wages, and then take from them 150 to 200 per cent in an advance in the cost of living? This enormous increase in the cost of living has been brought about through monopoly control of the necessaries of life. By that increase in the cost of providing for a family there has been taken away from the workers nearly twice as much in the aggregate as they have been given by the increase of wages.

I have not full information as to the condition of these miners, but I have ascertained, after such limited investigation as I could make, that they have reached the point where the wages paid to them and the time they are allowed to work will not buy food enough to properly nourish their families.

I do not ask to have their case prejudged in their favor; neither do I think it just to pass this resolution in a form to condemn them in advance of a full hearing and a fair determination of all the facts involved in the controversy between them and the mine owners.

Mr. President, I do not believe that these miners are about to do an unlawful thing. I have never met one of these coal miners; I have never interviewed one of their officers except for a few minutes, when I met the vice president of this national organization in the marble room. I sent for him myself and I put this question to him: "What is it you people complain of? I would like to know. I have but a moment because of pressing business upon the floor." The answer was this: "Chiefly because we can not get work enough to support our families and feed them and take care of them and shelter them." I have seen none of the other leaders, and I have no more information upon the subject excepting that to be found in the newspapers.

I do not object to the passage of this resolution. I believe in the enforcement of law against mine owners as well as miners.

I want to see this whole subject investigated, all the facts laid before the public, to the end that the public may judge as between the claims of the miners and the mine owners. The men certainly indicated a degree of support to the Government that ought to exempt them from the charge of being lawless. During the war period they were ready to enter into an agreement that should give the Government and the people of the United States an ample coal supply during that period of stress, and they made an agreement that there should be no change in the wages which they were to be paid for labor during the period of the war when it was actually on. They lived up to that agreement until it expired. I suppose when they made that agreement they thought that when the war was over there would be a decline in these excessive prices charged for the necessaries of life; but what do they find? They find prices have gone up day by day, month by month, steadily higher and higher and higher, and the Government does nothing effective to stop it. The Government moves slowly, and it moves very cautiously, when it moves against the coal operators and the United States Steel Trust; but it moves summarily when any body of wageworkers in the country are asserting their rights.

Mr. President, I believe that the amendment which I offered should be agreed to. I believe that if the coal miners are named in the body of the resolution the amendment I have offered should be agreed to, assuring to the miners like approval in all of their lawful undertakings to secure justice.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it is perfectly obvious that this resolution is directed to the coal miners. In view of that, I think the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] ought to stand.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am not entirely familiar with the changes that were made in the resolution as introduced by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], but as I read the resolution it contains no distinction between classes of our citizens. If some people tremble at any of its provisions it will not be those who are not proposing to break the laws or inflict disaster and destruction upon the country.

That there is an impending danger to the country now threatening which the administration and various committees have sought to moderate and compose, there is no question. I regard the threatened coal strike as a serious matter, if it be carried out as it has been proclaimed it will be carried out, more serious to our people than the late war so far as affecting our institutions and the health, happiness, and welfare of our people are concerned.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] states that prices of commodities have far outrun wages. I refer the Senator to the Secretary of Labor, who appeared before a subcommittee of the Committee on Interstate Commerce the other day. He said to us that he had made careful figures, closely calculating the cost of everything affecting living, and that labor earnings had more than kept pace with the cost of living; that the miners to-day were better off than they ever were before in the history of this country. He further stated that if we were to assume—and he did assume, and not only assumed but proved—that actual wages had met the increased cost of the actual necessities of life, then, in addition to that, there never was a time when labor was insured such constant employment as it is to-day, and that it never received so much for overtime. Secretary Wilson spoke from the record. He is a union miner; he came to Congress as a union miner; he was put into the Cabinet as a representative of organized labor in this country. He made these statements to us, and I believed him, because he had taken great pains in collating all the facts that were necessary to establish them.

Mr. President, there is not a man in the Senate who desires to do an injustice to labor or to anybody else; but I submit that the Senate ought to act courageously on this proposition and apply it to all labor and all employers. I am perfectly willing to designate no class, but to make the language so comprehensive as to include every lawbreaker and public enemy. I do not like to designate classes. I think the benefit of the resolution, if it has any benefit in it at all, is to convey to the miners, to the operators, and to the people of the country generally the fact that the United States is in favor of an impartial, complete, and fearless administration of the laws.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I am wondering whether the Senator from Michigan was present this morning when the resolution was changed upon the suggestion of the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] to specify the coal-miners' strike, writing into the resolution for the first time a pointed designation of a particular class of citizens of this country to which it was directed? If the Senator was here at that time, I did not hear him then protest that all American citizens should be treated alike in the resolution and that nobody should be singled out or designated.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I was not then present.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I should like to ask if the Senator would favor striking out the reference to the coal miners?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would like once more to hear the inserted language. Does the Senator from Wisconsin state the resolution now refers in terms to the coal miners now threatening a general strike?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; to a coal strike; it specifies a particular strike. With some hundreds of strikes already on in the United States, it singles out one in particular and directs the resolution against it.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But, Mr. President, the one situation that threatens the country to-day is the coal-miners' strike. That is the one thing that will be on the country day after to-morrow. If the Senate wants to sit here and take no action whatever, express no opinion, it can do so by a majority vote; but, so far as I am concerned, the question now being here, I am in favor of taking cognizance of that fact. If the language of the resolution is offensive to the Senator, I had just as soon the designation should be applied to the danger which threatens us. I take it that is what we are considering.

I do not want this resolution to be construed as referring to the league of nations as the "emergency" matter which is now before us. I myself thought it better, although I was not here when the amendment was made, that we should confine it directly to the subject that we have in mind. I do not want by that to prejudice the miners or the operators. I want it to apply to both with equal impartiality. That is, I want the law enforced equally against both. But this resolution is simply an approval of prompt, efficient enforcement of law to preserve the public welfare. If any class does an unlawful or unconstitutional thing, I want the administration to take prompt action.

I agree with a great many Senators who have criticized this resolution on the ground that we are practically volunteering advice to the administration to do its duty; but, I repeat, the question is now before us and I think we can not back away from it.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. If some other Senator has an amendment to offer in lieu of the one which I have proposed which will serve to particularize the emergency, certainly I shall not stand in the way of the adoption of such an amendment. The preamble, which happily was stricken out, indicated that the resolution was introduced to meet a certain situation. When the preamble was stricken out, I offered an amendment, which, perhaps, might be improved, in order that at some future time the emergency might not be construed as any one of the many emergencies which confront a great Government like ours. Certainly I want order preserved and justice done not merely in this strike but as between any of those contending in the industrial field to-day.

I have not heard the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], which was read just before I came on the floor, but I assume that it is intended to secure equal justice and equal protection for all citizens of the United States, no matter who they may be.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If I may interrupt the Senator just a moment——

Mr. McCORMICK. I have concluded.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Suppose we say "to meet the great emergency confronting the industrial life of the Nation to-day." Would that satisfy the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes. I would be inclined to withdraw my amendment if that language were adopted.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That would meet with my approval if it would be satisfactory to other Senators.

Mr. THOMAS. I accept the suggestion.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have no objection to the substitution of those words.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution be read as it is now pending before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution as it has been modified by its author, the Senator from Colorado; it has not been modified by the adoption of any amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas the enforcement of the law and the maintenance of order for the security of life and property and the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government and must be at all times vigorously and effectively safeguarded by the use of every means essential to that end: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the great emergency arising out of the impending strike of bituminous coal miners, and in vindicating the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] be read. It was offered when I was temporarily out of the Chamber, and, I believe, is the pending amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to add the following words:

And we hereby assure the coal miners that they will in like manner be protected in the exercise of all lawful means in any effort to secure their rights.

To which Mr. HITCHCOCK offered an amendment reading:

And we hereby assure all citizens that they will in like manner be protected in the exercise of all lawful rights.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the President of the United States and the Attorney General have said that the strike of the coal miners which has been ordered is unlawful. I agree with them and see no reason why we should be timid about saying so, if that is our sentiment.

The existing contract against which the coal miners propose to strike is a contract for the duration of the war, and the Attorney General of the United States has ruled in a number of instances that the war will not terminate until peace is declared.

I am very heartily in favor of this resolution. I think it time that all branches of the Government determine to enforce law and order in this country and to uphold a stable Government. I think it timely and well that a declaration to that effect be made not only by the President and the Attorney General, who have made it, but by Congress.

For weeks past this country has been on bended knees to organized labor which is striking or threatening to strike; for weeks past the Government has been tearfully and imploringly begging and pleading with the bituminous coal miners please not to strike. "Please do not strike and freeze us to death" has been the attitude of this country for weeks past as a suppliant at the feet of its masters. I think the time for that sort of thing has passed, if it ever existed. We have been endeavoring to confer, compromise, arbitrate, mediate, and conciliate, and all without any effect whatever.

The condition is that about half a million bituminous coal miners, at the highest estimate, have had 109,500,000 people in this country on their knees to them as suppliants, although the majority of these 500,000 bituminous coal miners, if there be that many, are ignorant foreigners, most of them illiterate, unacquainted with our institutions, and having no appreciation of the binding force of obligations and contracts, led by a few designing leaders and agitators who appear to want to plunge the country into industrial trouble and chaos, regardless of the consequences to the miners or the public or the Government, for some sinister purpose that appears to be behind their motives.

I think we have conferred and attempted to compromise and conciliate and arbitrate and mediate too much already. I think that has gone too far. There has been entirely too much begging and supplicating on behalf of the Government, which represents the 110,000,000 people of this country, to perhaps a half million bituminous coal miners, at the highest estimate, who show no regard for their contracts and apparently no regard for the welfare of the country. According to statements made before the subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Interstate Commerce, of which subcommittee I happen to be a member, which has been investigating the coal situation, the striking bituminous coal miners are now getting an increase of wages of 70 per cent above their prewar wages, and they now come and ask for a further increase of 60 per cent, which would make an increase of 130 per cent above the prewar wages.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. GRONNA. I trust that the Senator will not justify his position by saying that the wages of labor have increased 70 per cent. The Senator from Montana, I am sure, upon reflection will know that the wages of labor must increase in proportion to the increased cost of the articles they buy; and the Senator has very often stated on this floor during this session—and I agree with much of what he said—that the volume of money has increased from $15,000,000,000 to $45,000,000,000, or exactly 300 per cent. The deposits of the world have increased from $27,000,000,000 to $75,000,000,000. In other words, the cost to the laborer to live has increased 300 per cent; and there is not a Senator on this floor who can justify his position by saying that the wage of labor has increased 70 per cent.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, statistics issued by the Department of Labor, which are accepted as accurate and official, and are not unfriendly to labor, show that in the last four or five years the cost of living in this country has nearly doubled; that it has increased about 85 or 90 per cent. I say statements before a subcommittee which has been investigating coal conditions, and of which I happen to be a member, show that the bituminous coal miners are receiving now 70 per cent higher wages than before the war. That is not quite as much as the cost of living has increased in the last four or five years; but they are asking for a further increase of 60 per cent, which would be an increase of 130 per cent over prewar wages, and Government statistics show that the cost of living in this country since prewar times has not increased 130 per cent; it has not increased quite 100 per cent.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. MYERS. I yield, with pleasure.

Mr. DIAL. How many days a week do the miners propose to work and how many hours a day?

Mr. MYERS. I was going to get to that in a minute. There has been no such increase in the cost of living in this country as to justify an increase in wages to the bituminous coal miners of 130 per cent above prewar times. There is nothing to justify it. In addition to that, the miners have arbitrarily made a demand for a six-hour day from bank to bank and five days a week, a 30-hour week. That is in addition to their demand for a 60 per cent increase in wages on top of the 70 per cent increase they are already getting.

Now, is there anybody here who will say that those demands are reasonable demands; that there is anything in the existing condition of affairs that makes those demands reasonable or even decent? I say they are not decent demands, in the face of the conditions that now exist, and coupled with the very plain determination of the miners to take the people of this country by the throat, throttle them, strangle them, freeze, and starve them into submission. I say the demands are unreasonable and indecent, entirely beyond the pale of all reason and decency. No wonder the President says their strike is unjustifiable and unlawful. I for one am tired of seeing 110,000,000 people of this country get down on their hands and knees and crawl to a half million people, a small segment of the population, and tearfully beg at their hands, "Please do not strike and freeze and starve us to death." I agree with the President and the Attorney General that this strike is unlawful and that the time has come to use force. I believe that force should be met with force and that iron should be met with iron. Lawlessness and defiance of authority call for stern measures. There should be no shrinking.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, does the Senator understand that the Attorney General and the President have advised force?

Mr. MYERS. I take it from what they have said that they purpose using force if necessary, and so far as lawful. I am for all the force that may be necessary.

Mr. BORAH. If that construction is placed upon this resolution, it will not pass the Senate if I can help it.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator may put his own interpretation upon it. I say the President and the Attorney General have said that this strike is unlawful. In that I agree with them. They have said that all the power of the Government will be brought to bear, so far as they are able, to maintain law and order. If it takes force to do that I am in favor of it, and I suppose they are, too. I am in favor of the use of any lawful power to maintain the dignity and the honor of this country and to maintain law and order and a stable condition of government; and I think the time has come to declare that the law will be enforced, and stable government will be upheld, no matter what it may take to do it. The President and the Attorney General have so declared, and I am with them, and I think it would be quite timely, appropriate, and proper for us to declare that Congress is with them. I believe the people of the country are with them in their declaration. I do not believe the people of the country will supinely be overridden or overawed by a small class of the population, bent upon holding up the country by unreasonable demands or inflicting industrial anarchy. Let Congress do its duty fearlessly and declare to the world its determination to uphold the Government against all assaults.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment which I proposed, and which I understood was accepted by the Senator from Colorado, may be stated to the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, as the Chair knows I have been trying all day to secure the passage of this concurrent resolution in some form that will not diminish its force or purpose; and because of that desire I have kept strangely quiet during the discussions that have punctuated its consideration.

During the remarks last made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] he suggested that certain words forming part of one of the amendments suggested by the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], referring to "the emergency caused by the threatened coal strike," be changed to the expression "the present industrial emergency." I understood the Senator from Illinois to say that that was satisfactory to him, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] says it is satisfactory to him, and that if it is inserted in the concurrent resolution in place of the words suggested by the Senator from Illinois he will withdraw the amendment upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. President, that change can be made very easily by striking out the word "great," in line 5, and of course by eliminating the changes suggested by the Senator from Illinois, and then adding to the phraseology of the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, so that if that change is made it will read as follows:

That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency confronting us, and call upon them to vindicate the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience—

And so forth.

Upon that assurance, I move that the Senate reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the junior Senator from Illinois was adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Colorado permit the Chair to observe that he recognized the right of the Senator from Colorado to modify his concurrent resolution, and the change to which he has just referred was not adopted by vote but was accepted as a modification.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the Chair is mistaken. It was adopted while the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was in the chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That may be true. It was not done while the present occupant of the chair was presiding.

Mr. THOMAS. Hence, my motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the vote by which the amendment referred to was adopted will be reconsidered.

Mr. THOMAS. Now, Mr. President, I move—if a motion is necessary—to substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois an amendment striking out the word "great," in line 5, and adding to the amendment of the Senator from Idaho, previously adopted, the words "the present industrial," so that there will be one amendment which reads:

The use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, perhaps it would be best for me first to ask unanimous consent to vacate the order by which the yeas and nays were ordered upon the amendment which I introduced, and also to ask leave to withdraw that amendment. If this amendment is agreed to, I shall do exactly that thing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] offered an amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, and it would be necessary that he should consent.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I give my consent. I request the privilege of withdrawing my amendment to the Senator's amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the course proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I do not know just "where I am at," nor do I think Senators know "where they are at." Therefore I would like to know whether a motion would now be entertained to lay upon the table the resolution, with all pending amendments, substitutes, and suggestions?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that such a motion would be in order.

Mr. FALL. Then, Mr. President, I shall, before making the motion, state again my reasons for it.

In the first place, I think, as I have said before, that the Congress of the United States has enough to do to attend to its own business. If there is any necessity for the passage of legislation to make laws which are now on the statute books more strict or more lenient, that is our business, and let us proceed to it.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield to me, because when his motion is put it will not be debatable?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I am in accord with the Senator in his suggestion. If the Senate is unable to deal with a treaty which the Constitution gives us the power to deal with, how much more hopeless it is to attempt to grapple with that which the executive arm only should deal with?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, it was first proposed in the original resolution that this body should say to the administrative department, which is a coordinate department of the Government, that we would, in obedience to the Constitution and the laws of the United States, sustain that department in the discharge of its legal duties.

Mr. President, we are now asked to say indirectly to the judiciary department of the United States that we would expect them to perform their duty. Each of these three departments is supreme in its own sphere, and there is one way that Congress can reach either the officials of the administrative or of the judiciary department if they do not perform their duty.

Mr. President, for these reasons I shall, in any event, unless my motion is adopted, vote against amendments and vote against the resolution.

I now make the motion that the resolution, with the pending amendments and everything attached to it, be laid upon the table.

Mr. TOWNSEND. On that, Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRIS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS]. He is absent from the Senate, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. KIRBY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. McCORMICK (when his name was called). Mr. President, I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], who has left the Chamber. If I were voting, I should vote "nay."

Mr. OVERMAN (when Mr. SIMMONS's name was called). I desire to announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. SIMMONS] on account of illness. He has a pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG].

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. He is absent, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] and vote "nay."

Mr. BANKHEAD (when Mr. UNDERWOOD's name was called). My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is absent on account of illness. He is paired with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING]. If my colleague were present and not paired, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WOLCOTT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON]. In his absence I withhold my vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay."

Mr. OWEN (after having voted in the negative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY] and let my vote stand.

Mr. DIAL. I desire to announce the absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH], on account of illness in his family. He is paired with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING]. If my colleague were here and not paired, he would vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce the absence on official business of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. I desire also to announce that the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM] and the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are necessarily absent on public business.

Mr. CURTIS. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] is paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 67, not voting 23, as follows:

YEAS—6.

Fall	France	Nelson	Norris
Fernald	McNary

NAYS—67.

Ashurst	Hale	McKellar	Robinson
Ball	Harris	McLean	Sheppard
Bankhead	Harrison	Moses	Shields
Borah	Hitchcock	Myers	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Johnson, Cal.	New	Smith, Ga.
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newberry	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Jones, N. Mex.	Nugent	Smoot
Culberson	Jones, Wash.	Overman	Spencer
Cummins	Kendrick	Owen	Sutherland
Curtis	Keyes	Page	Swanson
Dial	King	Penrose	Thomas
Dillingham	Kirby	Phelan	Townsend
Elkins	Knox	Phipps	Trammell
Fletcher	LaFollette	Pittman	Walsh, Mass.
Gerry	Lenroot	Poindexter	Warren
Gore	Ledge	Pomerene	Williams
Gronna	McCumber	Ransdell

NOT VOTING—23.

Beckham	Harding	Reed	Underwood
Calder	Henderson	Sherman	Wadsworth
Colt	Kellogg	Simmons	Walsh, Mont.
Edge	Kenyon	Smith, S. C.	Watson
Frelinghuysen	McCormick	Stanley	Wolcott
Gay	Martin	Sterling

So the Senate refused to lay the concurrent resolution on the table.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if it is in order, I now renew the request to further amend the pending resolution by striking out the word "great," in the fifth line, and adding to the amendment hitherto moved by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and adopted the words "present industrial," so that the resolution will read:

That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency—

And so forth.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be modified as requested by its author, the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. WARREN. Now, let the resolution be read at length from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the resolution as amended.

The SECRETARY. Without reading the preamble, the resolution, now Senate concurrent resolution 15, as amended, reads:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency, and in vindicating the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask for the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The concurrent resolution as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the amendment to the title.

The SECRETARY. Amend the title to agree with the amendment just agreed to so as to read:

Concurrent resolution assuring the administration of the support of the Congress in dealing with the present industrial emergency.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the title will be so amended.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH AUSTRIA.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for immediate consideration of the order which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the order.

The Secretary read as follows:

Ordered, That the original manuscript of Senate Document No. 92, entitled "Treaty of Peace with Austria," be withdrawn from the files of the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator the reason for the order?

Mr. MOSES. I will state that the person through whom the original copy was furnished to the Senator from Massachusetts has requested that it be returned to him.

Mr. LODGE. There is no objection to the order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not hear the request.

Mr. LODGE. The request is to withdraw the manuscript copy of the treaty with Austria, which I presented. It has been reprinted for the use of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. To withdraw the original?

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

The order was agreed to.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany in open executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] gave notice that he would offer an amendment, which, I presume, will be offered at this time.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I move to strike out all of pages 487 to 517, inclusive, the same being Part XIII of the treaty of peace with Germany pending before the Senate; and upon that motion I call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] to amend by striking out, beginning at the top of page 487, "Part XIII, labour, section 1, organization of labour," and all the treaty down to and including the last line on page 517.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he proposes by his amendment to strike out the entire labor clause?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; Part XIII of the treaty.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has asked for the yeas and nays upon his amendment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will withdraw that if the Senator wishes to take the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. I am perfectly willing that the Senator should test the Senate upon that question now, but before the vote is taken I desire to address myself to the Senate upon Part XIII.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will withdraw for the present the request for the yeas and nays.

Mr. THOMAS. I am perfectly willing that the Senator should make the request now.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I withdraw it for the present.

Mr. THOMAS addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. PENROSE. This is a very important matter that is under discussion now, one of the most important, I think, to be considered in the whole debate.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall not continue very long this afternoon.

Mr. PENROSE. I want the Senator to continue, but I want to have a quorum present.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope the Senate will take a recess in a half hour. I am willing to talk, however, until 6 o'clock.

Mr. PENROSE. I think we ought to have a quorum, even for a half hour. There is only a handful of Senators here when one of the most important matters in the treaty is under consideration.

Mr. THOMAS. That is nothing strange. That is not an unusual condition here.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It ought not to be the case.

Mr. PENROSE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). The absence of a quorum is suggested. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Gronna	Lodge	Shields
Bankhead	Hale	McCumber	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Harris	McLean	Smith, Md.
Brandegee	Harrison	McNary	Smoot
Capper	Hitchcock	Moses	Spencer
Chamberlain	Johnson, Calif.	Myers	Sutherland
Colt	Johnson, S. Dak.	Nelson	Swanson
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	New	Thomas
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Townsend
Dial	Kellogg	Norris	Trammell
Dillingham	Kendrick	Nugent	Walsh, Mass.
Elkins	Keyes	Overman	Warren
Fall	King	Page	Williams
Fernald	Kirby	Penrose	Wolcott
Fletcher	Knox	Pomerene
France	La Follette	Ransdell
Gore	Lenroot	Sheppard

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I wish to announce that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PHIPPS], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] are absent in attendance at a meeting of a subcommittee of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. HENDERSON], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] are necessarily absent on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present. The Senator from Colorado will proceed.

[Mr. THOMAS resumed his speech. After having spoken, in all, for nearly an hour, he yielded the floor for the day.]

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the nomination of Edwin Y. Webb, of Shelby, N. C., to be United States district judge for the western district of that State, and the nomination of John W. Peck, of Cincinnati, Ohio, to be United States district judge for the southern district of that State, be laid before the Senate and referred to the Judiciary Committee as in secret executive session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the nominations will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

RECESS.

Mr. LODGE. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, October 31, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate October 30, 1919.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Edwin Y. Webb, of Shelby, N. C., to be United States district judge, western district of North Carolina. (An additional appointment made under the provisions of the act approved Feb. 25, 1919.)

John W. Peck, of Cincinnati, Ohio, to be United States district judge, southern district of Ohio, vice Howard C. Hollister, deceased.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, October 30, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father Soul, out of whose loving heart sprang all that we cherish in life, we thank Thee for the pure and noble, just and merciful, great and holy, left to us out of the holocaust through which we have just passed; the millions who faced death; the thousands who sacrificed their lives; the thousands wounded and left impaired in health; the thousands of heroic men and women who gave themselves to succor the wounded and comfort the dying on the field of carnage and helped the brave men to win the war for justice, liberty, and peace; for the many great patriotic organizations at home and abroad who have poured out their hearts and substance to alleviate the innocent men and women who suffered untold misery in the wake of unholy war.

Contrast the German Kaiser and his ruthless followers, who have justly inherited the hate of all true men, with the King of the Belgians and his little band of soldiers, exalted, glorified, in their heroic stand for right and truth and justice. Thus right lives and wrong perishes in the dispensation of Thy providence; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, Hon. PHILIP H. STOLL has been elected to fill the vacancy, from the sixth district of South Carolina, caused by the death of J. Willard Ragsdale. Mr. STOLL's credentials have been filed with the Clerk of the House. He is present, and I ask that he be permitted to take the oath of office as a Member of this House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will escort him to the area.

Mr. STOLL appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath of office.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference of House Document No. 273, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and which I think belongs to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the change of reference will be made.

There was no objection.

PROPOSED RECESS.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House for a minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. A short time ago the distinguished majority leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], stated on the floor, in response to a question I propounded, that we could expect a short recess, from the 8th or 10th of November until the meeting of the regular session on December 1. It is rumored around the Capitol this morning that there will not be any recess until just a few days before the regular session meets on December 1, and that then it is to be taken only "for prudential reasons." I would like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming, in behalf of a few of us Members who live some 2,000 miles away from here, whether we may still expect a chance to go home, at least for a few days, before the regular session? Some of us have been here ever since the war Congress convened in April, 1917, continuously on the job, with no chance to visit our homes except a few days on business, and I would like to say in that connection that if it is expected to take a recess just for two or three or four days before the regular session meets, merely for "prudential reasons," I do not think it will be done by unanimous consent, because we Members who live a long way from our districts ought to be given a chance to make a short visit to our homes. I request the majority leader to kindly inform us upon what we may definitely rely, so that we may make our plans accordingly.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I have not changed my mind as to the advisability of as long a recess as it is possible to secure between the present session and the regular session, which meets on the 1st day of December, and I still hope that by the 10th or 11th of next month we may be able to adjourn. I hope that before that time we will pass the railroad bill. [Applause.] I hope before that time we shall have taken up the Berger case and disposed of some other legislation now before the Congress. Then, I trust, it may be possible to secure an agreement with the Senate under which we can adjourn.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Wyoming a question.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to say that what I have stated is simply a hope. The matter is not sufficiently developed so that I can say there is any assurance of it. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BLANTON. I hope the gentleman from Wyoming will not let politics keep us from having a recess.

Mr. MONDELL. I shall not change my mind in the matter, though I may not be able to control the situation.

Mr. POU. The gentleman from Wyoming has yielded to me for a question.

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. POU. The question is this; we might as well speak frankly: Is it not true that the money for the mileage of Members has already been appropriated and that all this talk of adjourning for a week or three or four days in order that somebody may get mileage is all bunk and that there is nothing to it?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is entirely right about that.

Mr. POU. I have been informed that the money has been appropriated, as it should have been, and all of these suggestions about adjourning in order that anybody may get mileage are absolutely without any foundation.

Mr. BLANTON. The remark about adjourning for prudential reasons came from our distinguished ex-Speaker [Mr. CLARK of Missouri].

Mr. KNUTSON. He said it as a joke. He did not mean it.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman from Missouri always means everything he says.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. What is the status of the railroad bill, which is the big remaining piece of legislation?

Mr. MONDELL. The railroad bill, as I understand it, will be reported to the full committee to-day. My hope has been that the railroad bill would be reported to the House so that it could be taken up next Monday.

Mr. FERRIS. Is it the plan to follow this leasing bill with the railroad bill?

Mr. MONDELL. There will be some matters taken up between the time we dispose of this bill and the time when the railroad bill comes up.

Mr. FERRIS. That is the only other important thing left for the House to do.

Mr. MONDELL. There is a bill from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries that would take a day, which we ought to dispose of, and which I hope may be reported this week.

Mr. MADDEN. And a bill from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. MONDELL. I have hoped that there would be a report from the Committee on Military Affairs, and these matters could both be disposed of without interfering with the adjournment program which has been suggested.

Mr. FERRIS. One question more. Is it the plan of the majority to do anything at all about soldier legislation at this session?

Mr. MONDELL. The matters I have referred to are those things that we feel quite confident we can dispose of. There are other questions under consideration, but we feel quite certain about the matters to which I have referred.

Mr. FERRIS. As a matter of fact, however, there is a plan to let it go over until December.

Mr. MONDELL. That may be the outcome.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois demands the regular order.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wyoming may be extended five minutes. I want to ask him a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks that the time of the gentleman from Wyoming may be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Has the gentleman any assurance or intimation from the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce that the railroad bill can be reported to the House by next Monday?

Mr. MONDELL. Neither the chairman of the committee or any member of the committee would be justified in saying when the bill will be reported to the House. That must be determined by the committee, and must be determined in view of what their views are in regard to the legislation when they come to consider it in committee, which they will do this afternoon. I am very hopeful that the work of the subcommittee will be found to be so excellent that the full committee will not require a very great deal of time for consideration. Of course, I can not say when the bill will be reported.

Mr. DENISON. I share the hope of the gentleman, but the full committee will insist on its rights to read the bill in full before it is reported.

Mr. MONDELL. Why, certainly; nobody has suggested, and nobody will suggest, that they have not that right or that the committee will not give it due consideration.

Mr. DENISON. I do not think it can be reported back by Monday.

Mr. MONDELL. I am simply hopeful. My hopes may not be fully realized. If the bill is not reported Monday, it will be very soon thereafter, I hope.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I understand the gentleman to name certain measures that he hopes to dispose of before adjournment. I want to say that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds reported a bill some months ago—certainly some weeks ago—that every member of that committee is very much interested in.

Mr. MONDELL. I think that bill has much merit, and it was one of the bills that we considered, and while we do not feel confident we may take it up with other matters.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. We hear a great deal of talk here about economy, and by this bill we propose to cut down or cut off some enormous expenses of the Government that absolutely do no good on earth, and it would seem as if this House might take an hour of its time and dispose of it. We can pass it in that period. I am satisfied that there is not 10 per cent of the membership of the House that will oppose the passage of that bill when we can have an opportunity to submit it.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman expressed strong hopes that the railroad bill will be reported to the House and passed by November 10. That is another evidence that hope springs eternal from the human breast. I notice the gentleman did not express his belief. Does the gentleman from Wyoming really believe that this railroad bill, containing, perhaps, 100 pages, will be reported out by the full committee and passed by this House, or even considered by the House, by the 10th of November?

Mr. MONDELL. I think the House by beginning early and sitting reasonably late could consider that legislation in a week.

Mr. KITCHIN. Next week?

Mr. MONDELL. I think it could do it in that length of time. That is my personal view. Of course, I shall have no control over the situation. The gentleman asked my opinion.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; the gentleman has not expressed his opinion or belief.

Mr. MONDELL. It is my belief that the House can fully consider even that very important measure in six legislative days, beginning at 11 o'clock, if it seems wise to the House, and sitting until half past 5.

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to say that the Members here are not only willing to meet at 11 o'clock and sit until half past 5, but are willing to have evening sessions, if they can get the bill through before we adjourn.

Mr. MONDELL. We might do that. I think it is important to pass the bill before we adjourn.

Mr. KITCHIN. Let me ask the gentleman a question about another matter. On October 27 the gentleman inserted in the RECORD, by unanimous consent, a very wise and timely and resolute statement of the President in respect to the projected coal strike. The gentleman said, in answer to a question by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. ASWELL], that he most thoroughly and heartily indorsed the President's utterance. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] that very day introduced a concurrent resolution approving the President's utterances and pledging the support of the House and the Senate, or Congress, to the President in all constitutional measures that he may adopt to enforce the laws of the United States in respect to the coal strike. That was sent to the Committee on the Judiciary. I wish to ask the gentleman to inform us Members who wish to go on record, as the gentleman has done, in approving the President's position, by a vote on that resolution—has the Judiciary Committee considered that resolution at all; and if so, what is the gentleman's opinion as to when they will report it out? Will they report it before the strike actually occurs tomorrow night at 12 o'clock or before? Why can not we take it up at once?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no information in regard to the action of the committee, whether it has considered the measure or not. But I will state to the gentleman frankly my own position. I speak only as an individual. While every Member of the House has the right and in my opinion it is the duty of Members to make clear their position individually in a matter of this gravity, of this importance, I doubt the wisdom of the Congress of the United States establishing the precedent of expressing by resolution approval or disapproval of the acts of the Executive. I think if we started in on that sort of a practice, something we never have done in our history, so far as I recollect, we would soon find ourselves very much involved and embarrassed. Gentlemen would be continually asking us to express not only approval but disapproval of executive acts by resolution. I think it would be most unfortunate for the Congress to adopt any such policy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes so that I can ask him some more questions.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to say.

Mr. KITCHIN. But the gentleman does not know what I may ask him. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SANDERS] is recognized.

OPERATION OF TRANSPORTATION SYSTEMS UNDER FEDERAL CONTROL—CONFERENCE REPORT (H. DOC. 419).

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the managers on the part of the House, I call up the conference report upon the bill S. 641, an act to amend section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana calls up a conference report, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the statement be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 641) entitled "An act to amend section 10 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes,' approved March 21, 1918," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proviso of said amendment, after the word "made," insert the words "by him," and at the end of said amendment insert the following: "except that this proviso shall not apply to cases now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, which cases shall proceed to final determination under the law as it existed at the time of the passage of this act"; and the House agree to the same.

JOHN J. ESCH,
E. L. HAMILTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT OF MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 641) entitled "An act to amend section 10 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes,' approved March 21, 1918," submit the following detailed statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the conference report, namely:

The Senate conferees agreed to recommend the acceptance of amendments numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 19, being all of the amendments passed by the House except amendments numbered 1 and 11.

Amendment numbered 1, inserted on page 1, line 13, after the word "control" the words "or with any order of the President consistent with this act."

Section 10 with this amendment reads in part as follows:

"SEC. 10. That carriers, while under Federal control, shall be subject to all laws and liabilities as common carriers, whether arising under State or Federal laws or at common law, except in so far as may be inconsistent with the provisions of this act or any other act applicable to such Federal control, or with any order of the President consistent with this act."

The managers on the part of the House agreed to recommend that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment.

Amendment No. 11, on page 3, line 14, after "systems," struck out all down to and including "granted" in line 18, and inserted:

"except that the amendment of August 9, 1917, to section 15 of the act to regulate commerce, which provides that until January 1, 1920, no increased rate, fare, charge, or classification shall be filed, except after approval thereof has been secured from the commission, shall not be applicable to rates, fares, charges, or classifications initiated or changed by the President: Provided, That no change or increase shall hereafter be made in intrastate rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices without having first secured the approval of the proper State regulating tribunals conformable to the laws of the several States."

As to this amendment the managers on the part of the Senate agreed to recommend that the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment and agree to the same with the following amendment:

In the proviso of said amendment after the word "made" insert the words "by him," and at the end of said amendment insert the following:

"except that this proviso shall not apply to cases now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, which cases shall proceed to final determination under the law as it existed at the time of the passage of this act."

The managers on the part of the House agreed to this amendment.

The effect of this action is to make it clear that the proviso was a limitation upon the action of the President and also to provide that the cases, which are now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission should not be affected by the provisions of the bill.

JOHN J. ESCH,
E. L. HAMILTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I see the conference report is signed only by the majority members of the Senate and the House conference committees. No minority members have signed either the report or the statement. Why is that?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not know.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I can tell the gentleman why. I am not in favor of it. I opposed the passage of the bill in the House.

Mr. KITCHIN. Did the gentleman file a minority report at all?

Mr. SIMS. No; it is so plain that I did not need to. I will explain my position. Will not the gentleman from Indiana indicate something about the division of the time before he begins to discuss the matter?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. How much time does the gentleman want.

Mr. SIMS. Of course, the gentleman can move the previous question within the hour. I suppose the gentleman is willing to divide the time?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not want a hour, or anything like it.

Mr. SIMS. Why not divide the time equally? The gentleman may be forced to take more time than he expects, and the same is true of myself.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. So far as I know, no one desires to speak on this side of the House.

Mr. SIMS. I would like to have one-half of the time, to be controlled by myself. It is not my purpose to use up the time in debate simply to consume time, but gentlemen often ask questions of conferees, and it is difficult to state how much time will be used.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I will yield the gentleman whatever time he desires.

Mr. SIMS. Thirty minutes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I yield the gentleman 30 minutes. Mr. Speaker, this bill originated in the Senate. It is a bill the purpose of which is primarily to restore to the Interstate Commerce Commission its prewar powers with reference to rates. The House amended the bill to provide that the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission should cover only interstate rates, and that before any intrastate rates should become effective the State regulatory tribunal in that jurisdiction should approve the rate. There were a number of amendments made by the House. The first House amendment restored this expression in section 10:

Or with any order of the President consistent with this act.

In conference that expression was stricken out. In other words, the House conferees yielded on that amendment. The important amendment put on by the House granting to the State regulatory tribunals the authority to pass on intrastate rates was left as provided by the House, with the exception that the conferees added the expression "by him," so as to clarify the amendment, so that it might be clear that the amendment was a limitation upon the power of the President in initiating the rates. There was also added to this amendment by the conferees the following:

Except that this proviso shall not apply to cases now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, which cases shall proceed to final determination under the law as it existed at the time of the passage of this act.

This is merely a provision that the passage of this act shall not affect pending legislation. It is the same provision usually found in acts of this kind. With those exceptions, the Senate receded in each case, so that the bill comes back to the House with only those two changes from the form in which it left the House—the change omitting the expression "or with any order of the President consistent with this act," the slight change in the proviso in order to clarify it, so that it is clearly a limitation upon the power of the President, and the provision that it should not affect pending litigation. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, it was not necessary to write a minority report, because the objection I have to the report is so easily stated that a written report is not needed. What is the effect of this legislation? It leaves the initiation of rates with the President. It leaves war-time control of rates to the President, so far as initiation is concerned, but it gives the power to the Interstate Commerce Commission to suspend the rates that he may initiate. Therefore the President's function is merely a clerical function. If you are going to restore to the commission the power it had prior to Federal control of the railroads, why not restore to the railroads and the State commissions the prewar power which they had and exercised prior to Government control?

This bill does not do that. The railroads know better what rates they need than the President or the Railroad Administration, because each road knows exactly what it needs. Prior to Federal control the railroads initiated and filed their rates. If they were not suspended by the Interstate Commerce Commission at the end of 30 days they went into effect. But if suspended they remained suspended until the commission acted. Now, if you restore the rate-initiating power, which I tried to do by amendment on the floor, to the carriers and they file the schedules of rates, the State commissions and the people have ample opportunity to know what the rate is before it goes into effect, but a President-initiated rate goes into effect as soon as filed.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It would not if this bill were passed.

Mr. SIMS. What would it do?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. It restores to the Interstate Commerce Commission the same power it had before.

Mr. SIMS. To suspend?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. SIMS. The President's power to initiate remains and the provision of the war control law that puts the rates into effect immediately remains.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. I do not think the gentleman is correct.

Mr. SIMS. I think I am correct about it. There is no alteration in that respect except to give the commission the power to suspend a war-initiated rate. But the bill does not change the law as to the rates so initiated going into effect as soon as made.

But here is the milk in the coconut: The bill makes the President initiate the rates if they are to be initiated, which then go immediately into effect in all the States of the Union if not suspended, but the commission only has the power to suspend an interstate rate or an intrastate rate. It need not suspend an intrastate rate. The President has the right to initiate intrastate rates as well as interstate rates, and the commission can suspend the interstate rates but leave the intrastate rates remain as initiated.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Do I understand this conference report does not restore to the State railway commissions their prewar powers in making rates?

Mr. SIMS. It does not. The railroads ought to initiate the rates. I offered an amendment when the bill was pending providing that upon the passage of this act the railroads should initiate all rates, but it was voted down, which leaves the President to initiate or not initiate, as he may see proper, both as to interstate and intrastate rates.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Referring to the question that was just asked the gentleman by the gentleman from Texas, our present bill has this provision:

> That no change or increase shall hereafter be made in intrastate rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, or practices without first having secured the approval of the proper State regulating tribunals conformable to the laws of the several States.

Now, that remains in the measure, with the exception that it says "hereafter to be made by him," referring to the President. Is not that true?

Mr. SIMS. But suppose he does not initiate any change in the rates. No power remains in the State commissions to do anything at all regarding rates. Now, why urge a peace-time condition so far as interstate rates are concerned and leave the Interstate Commerce Commission with power only to suspend any rate made by the President?

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. The State commissions have got no power if we do not pass this bill.

Mr. SIMS. None at present.

Mr. RAYBURN. What is the gentleman kicking about?

Mr. SIMS. I am kicking because you are leaving the President to initiate intrastate rates as well as interstate rates.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman is talking about the power of the President over the railroads and their rates. When we were fighting in the committee to make it 12 or even 24 months' time the President could hold the railroads after the war, the gentleman said there ought not to be any time at all.

Mr. SIMS. I say so now. I think that history is going to prove that I was right. Now, why do you want to manacle the States and let them make no changes? They can not initiate rates, the railroads can not initiate rates, but the commission can suspend any rates the President initiates. We have been notified informally through the Railroad Administration that it does not expect to make any increase in rates.

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

Mr. RAYBURN. Does the gentleman think, in the State of Texas if this bill becomes a law, that the President can increase rates down there without the approval of the Texas commission?

Mr. SIMS. He can initiate them.

Mr. RAYBURN. I am not talking about that. I am asking if he can put them into effect without the approval of the Texas commission, after this bill becomes a law?

Mr. SIMS. That is the position taken by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is exactly the position——

Mr. SIMS. That had reference to its being finally approved——

Mr. RAYBURN. No; it says that no rate shall go into effect until approved by the regulatory power of the States affected.

Mr. SIMS. Why is there any need for the President to initiate rates in the State of Texas, while leaving no power in any Texas authority to suspend or modify the rates so initiated?

Mr. RAYBURN. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. SIMS. Why not let the railroads initiate the rates, and of course——

Mr. RAYBURN. If the gentleman will yield again, I went on record in this House in favor of the Sweet amendment, that took that power away from the President; and if the gentleman will look at the RECORD he will see how he voted.

Mr. SIMS. I introduced an amendment, and voted for it, to take the initiative away from him if the power to suspend such rates is given to any subordinate body.

Mr. RAYBURN. The gentleman voted against the Sweet amendment that would leave the power in the State commissions and Interstate Commerce Commission over rates.

Mr. SIMS. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the leader of the House, stated here a few moments ago that he hoped and believed the general bill that is going to be reported out could be passed in a week; that he hopes and believes it will be reported by Monday. Why rush this kind of legislation through when you will have every opportunity under your general bill to make any provision touching this matter or any other matter that is germane to it?

Mr. RAYBURN. I can not answer the gentleman's question, if he wants an answer.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I would like to ask the gentleman if under this bill the State Railway Commission of Texas can decrease the rates without first securing the approval of the President?

Mr. SIMS. Of course not. They are war-made rates. Neither can the State commission initiate them or suspend the President-initiated rates. Suppose the President should initiate an increase in intrastate rates, then suppose the Interstate Commerce Commission should decide not to suspend them? They go into effect. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] stated on the floor of this House that this was pure chicken-feed legislation, I think he expressed the facts. Now, I believe we are going to report the general bill in reasonable time, and that it will pass the House, and it is perfectly germane to put this legislation in it. Why do you want to rush it, pell-mell, in advance of the general bill? If gentlemen think we will not have any general legislation for a long period of time, and think the rates ought to be increased, and the President can initiate them, and the commission can suspend them if they do not approve them, I can see some reason for passing this bill.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. How can it be contended that this legislation would be germane to the general bill, when this legislation deals only with the rate situation during Federal control, and the general bill in its terms will terminate that control?

Mr. SIMS. I think it will make it absolutely unnecessary. Inasmuch as we are going to have a bill terminating Federal control, you can provide in the bill for anything to be done after Federal control. We are providing in both bills that the rates then in effect shall continue in effect until changed and modified by lawful authority. I do not see why there should be this great hurry to pass a bill that in practice will amount to nothing unless the President initiates higher rates. If he initiates lower rates, I do not believe any commission under heaven would suspend them. Now, why all this pell-mell hurry? Have we not got agitation, confusion, unrest, and trouble enough? Why not legislate in a deliberate way in a bill dealing with the entire subject matter which is to be passed in both Houses before the 1st day of January? There is no useful purpose to be served; not a particle, unless, perchance, a general bill is to be delayed indefinitely. So far as I am concerned, I think there ought to be more time to deliberate upon general legislation than we can possibly have if it is intended to go through as indicated.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. I will.

Mr. DENISON. I think in fairness to the House the gentleman should state that this bill passed the Senate way along last summer, and passed the House a month or so ago, and that this is simply a final conference report on the action of the two Houses.

Mr. SIMS. Certainly. There were mistakes in the conference report—and it had to be vacated and changed, and all that sort of thing—that were not foreseen when the bill was in the Senate and in the House. But the fact exists that this is the 30th day of October, and if the roads are to be returned before the 1st of January how many rates can be considered and passed upon by the Interstate Commerce Commission and the State commissions, or any other body on earth, in that time? Why break our necks to have the President increase rates or initiate them between now and the 1st day of January?

Mr. DENISON. I was going to ask the gentleman from Tennessee if he had any objections to the bill now that he did not have when the bill was before the House? The gentleman is simply repeating the speech and arguments that he made here when the bill came before the House.

Mr. SIMS. They are of more weight now, because we are nearer general legislation than we were then.

Mr. DENISON. About a month nearer, that is all.

Mr. SIMS. The time has been indicated as the 31st day of December when the roads will be returned, with or without legislation. Now, if this bill is passed and signed, which I hope it will not be, then there will be only two months, and if the President should not initiate increased rates what can this bill accomplish?

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Suppose the House should pass the bill introduced by the gentleman to continue Federal control for five years, does the gentleman think this legislation ought not to be in effect?

Mr. SIMS. That is so pertinent to this question that it answers itself. Now, there is such a thing as "passing the buck" to somebody, and having an excuse for assuming responsibility. If we pass this bill and the President does not increase rates, and if the deficits continue, some gentleman would say that the President only had power to initiate increased rates and that he would not do it. Then if he does initiate increased rates some would say the President did that, and, therefore, unless the Interstate Commerce Commission suspends them they will go into effect, and there is no time for the Interstate Commerce Commission to act. So the administration will be charged up with the responsibility either way. Passing an ineffectual measure simply to have some excuse for failing to exercise our own responsibility will not excuse us. If we are going to pass this bill as a suspension of rates we should have adopted my amendment authorizing the railroads to initiate them, and then they would not go into effect for 30 days, giving the Interstate Commerce Commission that much time before the effective date in which we suspend the rates. Now, under this bill they will be operative as soon as filed. And where is our speed going to result in anything of benefit to the people at large?

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield for one more question?

Mr. SIMS. Certainly.

Mr. DENISON. I assume that the gentleman from Tennessee remembers the testimony before the House committee, of Mr. Hines, the Director General of Railroads, upon this question. Does he?

Mr. SIMS. Substantially.

Mr. DENISON. And Mr. Hines stated that in making the rates during Federal control there was complete harmony and cooperation between the Railroad Administration and the Interstate Commerce Commission, and that, so far as he was concerned, and so far as the effect of this legislation upon the Railroad Administration was concerned, it would not affect it materially, because they would cooperate the same hereafter as heretofore.

Mr. SIMS. He said they intended to cooperate, but he opposed the legislation, and gave his reasons for opposing it.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. He opposed the policy?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; the policy of making, in effect, a rate clerk, a mere rate-initiating instrument out of the President, while taking from him all power to even put such rates into effect.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. He said that power ought to remain with the President?

Mr. SIMS. Yes; so long as the Government liability continued. I was not in favor of either. But if you are going to take away the power of putting the rates into effect, let the railroads initiate them. Then they do not go into effect under the law until 30 days, and in the meantime the commission has time to suspend them or approve them or let them go without action. There is no need of adopting this report. It will not accomplish that which was thought necessary when the bill was originally introduced and passed in the Senate and in the House, and we ought to vote it down; and then, of course, pass the other bill as soon as we can and provide that the war-control-made rates will continue for a certain time, if not sooner changed by the Interstate Commerce Commission as to interstate commerce, and by the State commissions in intrastate rates.

That is business. That is logic. That is good administration. What is the use of putting the Railway Administration to the trouble of investigating as to what is needed in the way of increased rates when it has no power to enforce those rates? Under the war-control law they went in and stayed in, but subject upon complaint to final action of the Interstate Commerce Commission. But they went in, and the revenues of the roads increased to the extent the rate was increased. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I used?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has used 20 minutes. Ten minutes remain.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will use the remainder of my time. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman reserve the balance of his time?

Mr. SIMS. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana has 19 minutes remaining.

Mr. SANDERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I shall not use very much of that 19 minutes. There is just one point that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS] made which I think is not consistent with the provisions of the bill. This is the provision of the bill with reference to the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission after this legislation shall have passed, and is as follows:

That during the period of Federal control the right to initiate or change rates, fares, charges, classifications, regulations, and practices exercised prior to the 29th day of December, 1917, by the carriers now under Federal control shall hereafter be exercised by the President, but such right as to interstate or foreign commerce shall be exercised under all the limitations and conditions which were imposed upon said right by the act to regulate commerce approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

Now, it is clear, Mr. Speaker, from that that all of the powers are restored to the Interstate Commerce Commission, all their prewar powers. Of course, there is a little limitation later, providing that the President shall not be required prior to filing these rates to secure the approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission; but all of the provisions with reference to the notice to the interested parties and a hearing by interested parties, with the right to a suspension by the Interstate Commerce Commission, with the right to a continuance of their suspension, if necessary, for a certain period by the Interstate Commerce Commission—all of those rights, all of those powers, are restored to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The reason for this legislation lies in the necessity for a hearing by all of the interested parties in the question of the advancement of freight rates prior to the taking effect thereof. The need for it and the demand for this legislation throughout the country grew out of the fact that under Federal control the director general could put rates into effect, no matter how comprehensive, no matter how radical the change, without notice to the interested parties, except such as he might choose to give, and therefore those who were vastly interested did not have their day in court, and this legislation gives them that day in court.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana moves the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Tennessee asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 47, noes 2.

So the conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SANDERS of Indiana, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 35.

Mr. KITCHIN rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of House concurrent resolution 35, and proceed immediately with the consideration of that resolution.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the resolution indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. SANFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York objects.

MINING OF COAL, OIL, PHOSPHATE, ETC.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill 2775, in accordance with the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Oregon moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of Senate bill 2775. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 2775, with Mr. MADDEN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 2775, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, there is an amendment pending, is there not?

The CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment pending, offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SINNOTT. This is the Snell amendment.

Mr. ANDERSON. Was it not the pending amendment proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. SINNOTT. No. This is an amendment to perfect the text.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. SINNOTT offers the following to amend the amendment offered by Mr. SNELL: Before the figures "60," insert the following: "For past production 70 per cent and for future production"; also insert before the figures "30" the following: "For past production 20 per cent and for future production"; so that the Snell amendment will read as follows:

"Page 72, line 15, strike out the figures '45' and insert 'For past production 70 per cent and for future production 60'; line 19, page 72, strike out the figures '45' and insert 'For past production 20 per cent and for future production 30.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I wish very briefly to explain the effect of my amendment to the Snell amendment. It merely relates to the moneys that will be received for past production, and leaves the Snell amendment intact for the future. My amendment provides that as to any moneys that may be paid in on account of past production the reclamation fund, which the entire Nation shares in, will receive 70 per cent instead of 60 per cent as in the Snell amendment and instead of 45 per cent as in the original House provision. Then it provides that the States shall receive 20 per cent instead of 45 per cent. For the future it leaves the Snell amendment as it is—10 per cent to the Government, 60 per cent to the reclamation fund, and 30 per cent to the State.

I have discussed this matter with a number of Members, and if there is not a unanimous agreement on it, I think there is a very general desire among members of the committee and those who have given this matter attention to approve of this amendment. That is about all I care to say concerning it at the present time.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman from Oregon has made a very comprehensive statement about it, which I think will help the House very much in arriving at a conclusion. Will the gentleman have any objection to stating just exactly what amount the reclamation fund is to get of the accumulated funds now on hand? I should like to have him include both the money held under receiverships under the Department of Justice and those under temporary contracts handled by the Interior Department.

Mr. SINNOTT. The figures that I shall give are absolute minimums and are up to last June, nearly six months ago.

Mr. FERRIS. Those figures would be augmented somewhat.

Mr. SINNOTT. They would be considerably augmented, because a number of wells have come in since that time, and some of the areas that were thought circumscribed have been enlarged. Further oil stands have been discovered, and one might safely say that these figures may be increased by $3,000,000 or $4,000,000. After the one-eighth has been paid the total figure to divide amounts to approximately $7,226,340.

Mr. FERRIS. That is the proportionate part that goes to the Government, is it?

Mr. SINNOTT. That is the part that is paid over to the Government. That is the one-eighth sum that the Government is going to receive, of which one-eighth the reclamation fund is to get 70 per cent.

Mr. FERRIS. Let me interrupt the chairman, if I may. Does this $7,226,340 include all of the money in Secretary Lane's hands under the so-called temporary contracts as well as under the receiverships?

Mr. SINNOTT. This includes both. In the hands of the Department of Justice in California there is something over $17,000,000. Now of that $17,000,000 practically one-half comes from the naval reserve, and that all goes into the Treasury of the United States; and on account of a recent gusher coming in the funds outside of the naval reserve in California somewhat exceed one-half of the $17,000,000. Of course, both in Wyoming and in California, since these figures were given, the fund has been augmented.

Mr. FERRIS. The Senate provision proposed to take immediately 45 per cent of this $7,000,000 and give it to the States, and to give 45 per cent to the reclamation fund, and to give 10 per cent to the Government.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman's amendment prevails, the reclamation fund, which is a revolving fund, will get 70 per cent, the States will get 20 per cent, and the Government will get 10 per cent, and under my provision the reclamation fund would get the entire 100 per cent.

Mr. SINNOTT. Would get the entire 100 per cent for the time being.

Mr. FERRIS. I understand, and later on 50 per cent of that would come back to the States, after it has been used once in reclamation.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. May I interject this question: In the seven million and some odd hundred thousands of dollars, which you say is now in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior or impounded through prosecutions instituted by the Department of Justice, is there included as well all the moneys impounded from receipts from the naval reserve?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; that does not include the moneys impounded in the cases where there are adverse decisions in the lower courts. I have deducted that in order to be absolutely sure. Should the Government win out in those suits, this amount will be increased from $3,000,000 to $5,000,000, possibly more.

Mr. ELSTON. Does that seven million and some odd hundreds of thousands of dollars include, however, receipts from the naval reserve in cases which have not gone adversely to the Government?

Mr. SINNOTT. Certainly.

Mr. ELSTON. Then the chairman's answer to the gentleman from Oklahoma is not in detail absolutely correct, for this reason: Whatever proportion of that $7,000,000 and some odd hundreds of thousands is represented by receipts from the naval reserve, as to that portion 100 per cent of it is covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts for the benefit of the naval reserve.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman misunderstands me. I stated a while ago that about one-half of this $17,000,000 belonged to the naval reserve, and that goes into the Treasury of the United States, and I do not take one-eighth of that at all. I take one-eighth of $8,637,846. By letter of October 22 the Department of Justice informed me that in California there were impounded $17,370,799 on June 30, since then $95,107 has been paid to successful litigants, leaving a balance as of that date of $17,275,692, of which one-half is $8,637,846; the other one-half I assign to the naval reserve, which is approximately correct.

Mr. ELSTON. That explains the matter nicely. I wish to make it clear that no part of this seven million and some odd hundreds of thousands of dollars came from production in the naval reserve.

Mr. SINNOTT. This all comes from production outside of the naval reserve.

Mr. ELSTON. That is what I wanted to know.

Mr. SINNOTT. All that I have allocated—to use a word that is now in vogue.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. SINNOTT. Certainly.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. There is some confusion about that revolving fund. To what extent is it a revolving fund? Some claim it is to be used just once for a short period, but later extended more indefinitely.

Mr. SINNOTT. What revolving fund does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. The money going into the reclamation fund. The gentleman calls that a revolving fund.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; that is supposed to be a revolving fund.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. There is some confusion concerning the understanding of that term.

Mr. SINNOTT. When the settlers on the reclamation project pay their construction charges it goes back into the reclamation fund and then is allotted again on a new project. If a dollar comes in to-day, the same dollar is expended to-morrow on another project.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Some claim that it is just used once—that there is one revolution—and then it goes into the Government Treasury with interest.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is not true as to the reclamation fund. It continues to revolve.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. It is a revolving fund actually and not partially.

Mr. SINNOTT. It is a revolving fund.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to proceed for 10 minutes on the several amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent to address the committee for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I trust the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma will not prevail. The Committee on Public Lands of the Senate carefully considered the provision which the gentleman seeks to eliminate, the Senate passed the bill as it now stands in this regard, your Committee on the Public Lands debated the provision thoroughly and voted to retain it. It was decided by the committee that the States from which the minerals were taken should have an interest in the rentals and royalties, in lieu of taxes, which ordinarily are available to the States and counties.

If this bill brings the operations which its friends predict, great enterprises will be established, towns will be built, roads must be constructed, schools must be maintained, local governments must be supported, the States must police and protect the properties. Titles to all the lands are to remain in the Federal Government exempt from taxation. Where are the States and the counties to get the money? Gentlemen say the improvements are to be taxable. But we must realize that the tipple of the coal operation or the derrick of the oil well represent but a small value compared to the coal or oil resources of the land itself.

The chairman of the committee favors the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York. In taking this position of course he will make it plain that he does not represent the committee. In his own general leasing bill, H. R. 560, prepared and introduced into the Congress during this special session, I find that he provided in section 34, page 30, that of the royalties and rentals to be received 33⅓ per cent should be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury after the expiration of each fiscal year to the State within the boundaries of which the leased lands or deposits are located. He provided that the remaining 66⅔ per cent should be paid into the reclamation fund; he made no provision for the Federal Treasury.

It is interesting to note the chairman's arguments on the Oregon-California land-grant bill which was debated and passed in the House in the month of May, 1916. It will be remembered that the title to some 3,000,000 acres of timber lands formerly held by the railroad companies was revested in the United States and provision made for the disposition of the timber, the minerals, and the agricultural lands. The committee in considering the provisions of that bill realized that the State and county in which the lands were located must receive some proportion of the proceeds of sales, and incorporated in the bill a provision that 30 per cent of all the proceeds should go to the counties in which the lands were located, and an additional 20 per cent should go to the State, making a total of 50 per cent of the proceeds of all the sales which were to be devoted to the support of schools, local governments, and the building of roads.

The gentleman who is now chairman of our committee strenuously objected to what he called the unjust treatment of his State, and demanded that of all the proceeds of the sales of timber, minerals, and land, the counties should receive 40 per cent and the State an additional 40 per cent. He was not particular as to what disposition should be made of the remainder.

The gentleman represented that timber constituted the chief resource of value in the counties in which this land was located. In some counties in my State coal constitutes practically everything of value. In some of the counties in other States oil is the chief thing of value. Under the Oregon-California land bill the lands containing timber were to be sold, the timber was to be sold, the minerals were to be exploited, and were to pass into private ownership, thus becoming subject to taxation. Under this bill the lands containing coal, oil, and other resources are to be withheld permanently from taxation. It should be clear that the States must have some portion of these funds in lieu of such taxation. Some States are blessed with great wealth in agricultural lands, and representatives of these States are constantly boasting of such wealth. Some have few resources. Those having minerals often have but little else. The States entered the Union on terms of equality. It would be an infringement of this equality to use the resources of one poor State to further enrich its more fortunate neighbor. Mr. Chairman, it should be evident to us that we can not rob any member of our Union without doing vital harm to the whole country, any more than you can vitally injure one portion of your body without doing harm to your whole system. Through the crisis of the war we realized the solidarity—the unity of purpose of the Republic—that it was indeed one Nation. It has often seemed to me that Members of this Congress hailing from the more prosperous States have been inclined to regard the less-favored States as legitimate prey, from whose scanty resources the larger States might be still further enriched. These Members seem to regard an appropriation for a road in one of these far-away States as a charitable contribution to a foreign country rather than as a patriotic effort to improve the common country. They say, What interest has New York or Massachusetts or Oklahoma in a road or canal in Utah or Oregon? To such I commend the words of a former distinguished Representative of Massachusetts made on the floor of this House:

> Sir, we narrow-minded people of New England do not reason thus. Our notion of things is entirely different. We look upon the States not as separated but as united. We love to dwell on that Union and on the mutual happiness which it has so much promoted and the common renown which it has so greatly contributed to acquire. In our contemplation Carolina and Ohio are parts of the same country, States united under the same General Government, having interest common, associated, intermingled. In whatever is within the proper sphere of the constitutional power of this Government we look upon the States as one. We do not impose geographical limits to our patriotic feeling or regard; we do not follow rivers and mountains and lines of latitude to find boundaries beyond which public improvements do not benefit us. We who come here as agents and representatives of these narrow-minded and selfish men of New England consider ourselves as bound to regard with an equal eye the good of the whole in whatever is within our powers of legislation. Sir, if a railroad or canal beginning in South Carolina and ending in South Carolina appeared to me to be of national importance and national magnitude, believing as I do that the power of Government extends to the encouragement of works of that description, if I were to stand up here and ask, "What interest has Massachusetts in a railroad in South Carolina?" I should not be willing to face my constituents. These same narrow-minded men would tell me that they sent me here to act for the whole country, and that one who possessed too little comprehension, either of intellect or feeling; one who was not large enough, both in mind and in heart, to embrace the whole, was not fit to be intrusted with the interest of any part.

Mr. Chairman, the reclamation fund is used to reclaim arid, swampy, and cut-over timberlands of the whole country. The money is not a gift but a loan to the settlers. Every dollar is to be returned, and even through the first 17 years of the history of the service, when experience had to be gained at great cost and mistakes were inevitable, over 90 per cent of all money expended, with interest, will be returned to the Federal Treasury, according to the latest statement of the director of the service. The law provides that the proceeds of sales of public lands shall be devoted to this fund. These sales will go on as heretofore. Timberlands and timber will be sold, homestead lands will be sold, grazing lands will be sold, precious mineral lands will be sold, and the proceeds turned into the reclamation fund. Royalties from the power-site leases under the general power bill will go into the reclamation fund. In addition to all these funds, this bill, as reported by the committee and as it passed the Senate, provides that 45 per cent of all the royalties shall be paid into the reclamation fund. If this bill operates as its friends predict, this percentage of royalties and rentals, when added to the other moneys available, will amply provide for the reclamation fund. In any event the local governments must be maintained; schoolhouses must be constructed and teachers paid.

I call the committee's attention to the fact that we have always recognized the necessities of local and State governments. Even in the general power bill we provided that 50 per cent of all royalties received in the national parks shall be appropriated to the building of roads in such parks. We provided that 50 per cent of all royalties received in forest reservations shall be devoted to the building of roads in such forests. Highways must be constructed in the counties having these resources. Justice must be administered. Some sources of revenue must be available. These necessities can not wait 20 or 30 years for payments to be returned by settlers occupying reclaimed lands. The States and counties must have the funds as they are realized from the operation of this bill, and will probably need them earlier. Some States have drawn their prosperity from their less fortunate sister States. The great industries of the East are largely supported by money and food from agricultural and mining regions. The vast fortunes of San Francisco, for instance, came largely from the mines of Nevada. Mount Davidson, in that State, poured a half billion dollars into the waiting laps of California magnates, but where is Nevada to-day? She represents so much geography, holding the balance of the earth together. Some of these funds should have gone into roads, into schools of the States producing the minerals. It is now stated by geologists that Nevada has resources in oil, in phosphates, potash, and sodium. She certainly has no available reclamation projects of any importance. Let the State have some benefit from her own resources. You would not take her meager wealth and send it to more prosperous States? Utah has coal; several of the counties having this resource have little else of value. None of the other minerals covered by this bill have been found in Utah in paying quantities. The lands containing coal are worthless for anything else. Most States are receiving the benefit of their mineral production in royalties, in taxes, and otherwise. The schools of Oklahoma, are bulging with wealth, the same is true of Michigan, Wisconsin, Missouri, from money derived from the proceeds of minerals found within the boundaries of those States. The same is true of Texas, Wyoming, and other States. Of course, the States farther east have ample resources to support their schools and local governments and to build roads.

The Supreme Court has held that Utah does not own the coal even under the school sections granted to the State for the benefit of the school system. No reservations are expressed, but the court decided same should be implied. This was a serious blow to the future education of the children of the State. Seventy-five per cent of the area of the State is withheld from taxation; the 25 per cent must bear all the burdens. The tax rate is already the highest of any State with which I am acquainted, and if the gentleman's amendment should prevail, in the vast country containing the coal measures developed under the operations of this bill there would be no means of providing roads, schools, local governments, police protection to the communities to be formed. What is true of Utah is also true of the other States in the West. The committee has acted wisely, and the bill should not be amended as proposed.

Mr. Chairman, we are now dealing with a part of the country that Daniel Webster in a debate on the floor of the Senate characterized as follows:

> What do we want of that vast and worthless area, that region of savages and wild beasts, of deserts, of shifting sands, whirling winds, dust, cactus, and prairie dogs? To what use could we ever hope to put those great deserts and those endless mountain ranges, impenetrable and covered to their very base with eternal snow? What can we ever do with the western coast, a coast of 3,000 miles, rock-bound, cheerless, and uninviting?

There have been several States carved out of that "vast and worthless area," and it is to these States which the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] refers when he says he would not give them anything of their own resources in order to help build roads or establish schools or pay teachers. He offered an amendment which would provide, in the first place, that none of this fund realized from royalties and rentals should ever go to these States until it had been used by the reclamation fund, and then he offered to support an amendment suggested by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE], stating that if Mr. VAILE would support the amendment he would offer it, which would provide that the States should never get any of these funds. On that subject I desire to address the House.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAYS. For a question.

Mr. FERRIS. The West will get every cent of it under my amendment and will get 10 per cent under the other amendments.

Mr. MAYS. The gentleman said, in answer to a question propounded by the gentleman from Colorado, that if he—the gentleman from Colorado—would vote for an amendment striking out the provision that the States should never get anything in the way of taxation to support schools or build roads, and so forth, he [Mr. FERRIS] would offer it.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is mistaken. There was a colloquy, and something of that kind was said, but that is not involved here. Every penny of it goes to the reclamation fund, and every penny of the reclamation fund is expended in the West.

Mr. MAYS. The RECORD will show what was said. I have here in this picture an illustration of what we have to deal with. We have 7,000,000 acres of coal land in Utah, of which this picture is typical; 5,000,000 acres in Colorado, of which this is typical. Ten years ago I tried to establish this camp 20 miles from any human habitation. It is the only town in that county of any importance and the largest town in the county. Will the gentleman answer this question: In building roads and establishing schools, building houses and paying teachers, would his amendment give anything whatever to the State producing the minerals?

Mr. FERRIS. Under my amendment the Reclamation Service is kept intact. Every penny is used, every dollar is used in the West. Under the gentleman's proposition the reclamation fund would be torn down and a little spent here and a little spent there, and would do no good.

Mr. MAYS. This whole county is on the public domain. How would you irrigate anything there?

Mr. FERRIS. It looks as if it was not worth irrigating.

Mr. MAYS. Such land as here shown is held at $300 per acre by the Government and comes under the general leasing provision of the bill perpetually withheld from taxation. The gentleman says that the State may tax the improvements. The operation there now is producing 4,000 or 5,000 tons of coal a day, and I wish the gentleman would look and see where the county assessors would find anything to assess, so that they might receive taxes to build roads, pay teachers, administer justice, and police the properties.

Mr. FERRIS. Under a paragraph of this bill, already agreed to, any coal or oil taken out you can put an output tax on. You can put an output tax on every well or machinery, every derrick, or anything else.

Mr. MAYS. You can not put an additional output tax on that production. The Government is collecting an output tax on it of so much a ton, and if the States should undertake to do it, it must be absorbed by the consumers locally. It is passed on to the consumer and added to the price, thus increasing the high cost of life's necessities.

Mr. FERRIS. That is true of every tax. Will the gentleman let me give him the tax provision in the bill?

Mr. MAYS. I prefer to continue in my own way.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has been chairman of our Committee on Public Lands for the past eight years. I have served five of those years with him. He has considered these measures. He has introduced bill after bill. He has reported them to the House, and they have passed this House, and in a speech the day before yesterday he stated that the amendment which he was offering, and which would take funds from the States producing these resources and give them to the reclamation fund, was taken bodily from such former bills as had passed this House six or seven times. I wish to call his attention to his last word on the subject—the last bill he ever reported after considering the subject for eight years, being, we would think naturally, the best thing that he ever submitted to this House. I have here his conference report on that bill, H. R. 3232, and find the following important provision:

> Any citizen or any association composed of persons severally qualified by law to enter coal lands, or any corporation incorporated under and by virtue of the laws of any State or Territory, or any municipality in any State or Territory, shall, upon application to the register of the proper land office, have the right to enter by legal subdivision any quantity of vacant coal lands of the United States within any State or Territory of the Union, including the Territory of Alaska, not otherwise appropriated by competent authority, not exceeding 2,560 acres, upon payment to the receiver of not less than $10 per acre for such lands, where the same shall be situated more than 15 miles from any completed railroad, and not less than $20 per acre for such lands as shall be within 15 miles of such railroad—

And so forth. He also provided that oil lands should pass into private ownership, whereas this particular bill retains perpetual ownership in the Federal Government.

Every bill heretofore offered by the gentleman, reported by the committee, and passed by the House contained a provision for passing title of both coal and oil lands to private ownership, thus making available to the States some sources of support through taxation.

The county in which this particular operation here illustrated is located has but little else of value in it. A great portion of the State, representing a large proportion of my colleague's district, has but little else of value upon which taxes may be levied for support of schools, building of roads, and the like.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAYS. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. About what per cent of the gentleman's State is still Government property?

Mr. MAYS. Seventy-four per cent of the State is still untaxable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAYS. Twenty-five per cent of the State must bear the burdens of the whole State. The tax rates in Utah are exceedingly high, due to this condition, resulting from a shortsighted policy, we believe.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAYS. For a question.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. What portion of the 75 per cent is mineral land that has been prospected, and on which there are patented claims?

Mr. MAYS. A very small percentage has been patented.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Is all of the mineral land which is subject to prospecting for minerals included within the 75 per cent of the gentleman's State?

Mr. MAYS. Yes; it includes the mineral lands in public ownership.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. So that all of the mines for gold and silver are included in that 75 per cent?

Mr. MAYS. If they are on public lands. Right in that connection the gentleman from Oklahoma accuses us of wanting to break down the reclamation fund. That is not at all our desire. We desire, however, that some of this money may be available to build schools and roads, because communities will build up immediately upon the beginning of these operations, and if this bill operates as we hope it will, there will be communities built up at once. You have to hire teachers, you have to build schoolhouses and roads, and you have to pay for the administration of justice.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAYS. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman where he is getting the revenues now to run the schools there.

Mr. MAYS. From taxation. This particular operation is in private ownership.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And under this bill you could not tax that?

Mr. MAYS. They could not tax anything else, because the balance of it is in public ownership.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And that would deprive you of any revenue?

Mr. MAYS. It deprives us of any revenue unless, as the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] says, we may tax improvements. There is a tipple that might be taxed; but anyone looking at that operation would see that, as compared with the resources of the land, compared with the coal in the land, the tipple and other equipment are of very small value. There is nothing there that could be taxed to support the schools. The reclamation fund will go on getting the funds it has heretofore.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAYS. In a moment. All of the public lands outside of these mineral lands covered by leases, such as homestead lands, grazing lands, timberlands, and precious-mineral lands, are sold, and the funds all go into the reclamation fund. Forty-five per cent of these rentals and royalties, as the bill provides, go into the reclamation fund. I yield now to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BARBOUR. If this money goes into this revolving reclamation fund, as provided in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma, and starts to revolve, how long will it take before the States and communities such as the photograph shows could reasonably expect to get any of it?

Mr. MAYS. Probably not during the lifetime of any Member here. The settlers must, of course, pay back to the Government the money that they borrow from the Government. The loans generally are for 20 years. Our soldier settlement bill made it 40 years. The reclamation fund is simply loaned to the settlers. They pay every dollar of it back. The Government really is not contributing any money; it is simply loaning it; but in this instance, gentlemen of the committee, we are dealing with districts that have nothing much else of value except the resources covered by this bill. You would not give a dollar an acre for that land. It is worth nothing, except possibly to graze a few sheep upon it. Probably the commercial value would be $2 or $3 an acre for that purpose. It is worth nothing for anything else. You can not, as the gentleman from Oklahoma says, bring water there to irrigate that county. In the meantime that county must exist and the State must exist.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

In speaking of the value of the land the gentleman referred to the surface. The gentleman does not mean to say the coal under that is not worth a dollar——

Mr. MAYS. I mean outside of the coal. I may say in this connection the United States Government is now holding similar land at about $300 an acre. Nobody buys it. Everybody out there believes it is simply held at a prohibitive figure until it can be held perpetually in governmental ownership, exempt from taxation.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Under the provisions of this bill the proceeds that come out of that, except this royalty of from 5 to 12½ per cent, go to the citizens of the State and are subject to taxation. Is not that true?

Mr. MAYS. How is that?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. All of the proceeds of the products which had come from this land provided for in this bill go to the citizens, and under your laws are subject to taxation?

Mr. MAYS. Oh, few of them, if any. Outsiders generally own the operating properties. That is what I am kicking about. Now, we have recognized, gentlemen, in all legislation the necessity for the States in which the resources are found to have a considerable portion of the rentals and royalties. In the first place, we provided in every bill that the gentleman from Oklahoma has introduced that these lands might still pass to private ownership, and we provided in every bill introduced that one-fourth of the land involved in every oil permit should go into private ownership, and we must remember now at this time we provide that all of these lands shall be held perpetually in Government ownership and all exempt from taxation.

The chairman of the committee will remember we revested title in 3,000,000 acres of timberland, having 60,000,000,000 feet of timber, and the United States Government appropriated five or six hundred thousand dollars to pay back taxes, and his bill provided that all of these back taxes should be paid and the land in the future should be sold and passed into private ownership, and it provided, further, that all timber upon those lands should be sold, all agricultural lands should be sold, all minerals should be sold, and of all those proceeds 50 per cent should go to the State of Oregon—30 per cent to the counties and 20 per cent to the State itself. Gentlemen will remember also in the general power bill we provided the national forest reserve should get 50 per cent of all the proceeds for the construction of roads in the forests furnishing the receipts. In national parks 50 per cent of all the royalties received from power licenses go to building roads in the parks furnishing the receipts. We have always recognized this principle, and should in this bill. Roads must be constructed, governments must be sustained, schools must be built, and I would like to have some gentleman say, if you take a county such as this, 90 per cent of it in the public domain and will remain there permanently, how you are going to get the money. That is the question. The reclamation fund will not suffer. We do not desire to take a dollar from it that rightfully belongs to it. Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] did not pose as a friend of the West in his argument, and he has not so posed. He has consistently fought the interests of the West, as I considered it, throughout in the committee, yet the gentleman from New York recognizes the absolute necessity, and said so in his speech in favor of his amendment, that those States in lieu of taxation should get some considerable portion of this fund, and he put that at 30 per cent—10 per cent to the Government and the balance to the reclamation fund. The gentleman from New York bases his estimate of what ought to be paid to the States upon what they receive now in the forest reserves. The gentleman from New York was wrong when he said that the States get 35 per cent of forest receipts. They get 45 per cent, just what this bill carries in it now. This bill carries little enough for the States producing the resources.

There is quite a difference in the necessities of the forest reserves and the requirements of a live, active community. A forest reserve has few requirements, whereas a community of people must have improvements, must have schools, must have teachers who must be paid. They have to build roads to get anywhere. Now, to illustrate the argument of the gentleman from Oklahoma. Nevada has 90 per cent of its land in the public domain. It was twice larger in population when the gentleman from Oklahoma was born than it is now. It has no reclamation project of any importance. Every dollar extracted from that State should be employed to build roads, establish schools, and make life in the State more endurable.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes more and then I will finish.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent for two minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAYS. It is a manifest injustice to take the resources of Nevada, meager as they are, and send them to other States. It has some prospects of oil, some potash, some phosphates, and some sodium, but not much else—but to take those scanty resources and send them into Oklahoma, already bursting with prosperity and conceit [laughter], would be an injustice to the State of Nevada.

The gentleman from Oklahoma exhibited the pitiable weakness of his position when the gentleman from Nevada asked him the following question:

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. The gentleman's remarks are very pleasing, but I want to ask him who will build the roads in Nevada, where 90 per cent of the territory is Government owned? Who would build the roads?

And he answered:

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, my answer to the gentleman is, Who will buy me a Packard automobile?

I am asking for equality here. The amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] is much fairer than the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. It should not be adopted, however. I am not opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon, so far as it relates to past production, except I want to say this: It seems to me that the chairman of the committee and the members of the committee, after adopting a bill, ought to stand by its essential features; but, even if others favor the Snell amendment, I am opposed to it. As to future production, the bill should stand as it is, and I think it will ultimately stand as it is, thus doing a degree of justice to the States producing the minerals with which we deal to-day. I thank the committee. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, there should be no difference of opinion as to the rights of the States and their communities to be compensated for the great losses in taxing values which they will suffer by reason of holding perpetually in Federal ownership untaxed very great areas of land that will in time support large populations and require great outlay for the support of the institution of government. The only question that ever ought to be raised in this connection is as to what portion of the rents and royalties that will be received by the Government are necessary to compensate the States and their communities for their loss in taxing value. In the case of forest reserves, lands that do not entail great expense for administrative purposes, we give the States directly 25 per cent of the receipts to compensate for the losses which the State suffers by reason of its inability to tax these lands. We give 10 per cent of those receipts for the building of roads on the reserves. We grant 10 per cent of those receipts to the fund to construct roads in cooperation with the communities on and off the reserve, so that 45 per cent of the receipts by the Federal Government from these reserved lands are paid directly to or used for purposes and expenditures which would otherwise have to be paid for by the community. The areas we are proposing to withhold from sale and taxation now are very much more valuable than the forest areas. When they are developed they will support a very considerable population of miners and oil developers. The outlay for school purposes and for roads will necessarily be large, and the only method whereby the State and communities can secure funds from these lands other than those we are now seeking is by means of a tax on the improvements and on the output. Of course, a tax on the output from these lands held in Government ownership can not be greater than a tax on output generally, and a tax on the improvements of an oil or coal field is necessarily comparatively small in amount, because it can not be higher per dollar of property than the tax on personal property generally.

The question is how much of the rents and the royalties are the States and their communities entitled to in order to reimburse them for their losses in taxing opportunities? No one can say definitely. There is no way of more than approximately arriving at a determination of the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may have three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent for three minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. When this bill was originally drawn, it provided for an equal division of the rents and royalties as between the States and their communities and the reclamation fund. By a curious bit of legerdemain which occurred just before the bill was introduced it was provided that the 50 per cent of the fund that was to go to the States was not to be paid to the States until it had gone into the reclamation fund and been expended and paid back, manifestly a provision which was a mere legislative joker. The States would never get any funds in that way. The 45 per cent for the States in lieu of taxes carried in this bill is none too great. In fact, an equal division between the States and the Reclamation Service would, in my opinion, be eminently fair.

But we have been contending for and discussing this matter for a long, long time. I have urged the immediate payment to the States of a portion of the receipts every time the question has been before Congress heretofore. I have not had much support. I am glad that a number of Members are now urging the view I have taken. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has proposed the immediate payment of 30 per cent of the funds to the States and their communities. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] modifies that as to the sums to be received from past operations. It is not, in my opinion, a fair division. It does not, in my opinion, give the States and their communities a sufficient sum to compensate them for their losses by reason of the permanent retention of title in the Federal Government.

But I think we have discussed this matter long enough. I know that there must be some compromise in the House as between widely different views, and, so far as I am concerned, while I do not think the division now proposed is a fair division, while I do not think the sum proposed is as much as the States and their communities are entitled to, and expect the sum will be increased in conference, I shall not further protest against the amendment as suggested at this time. This is the first time we have been able to get the House to agree to give the States any of the funds, and perhaps we are doing well to get nearly one-third now and the hope we may get more later. In this connection I desire to present a memorandum which I have prepared on this subject and which is as follows:

MEMORANDUM ON DISPOSITION OF FUNDS ARISING OUT OF RENTS AND ROYALTIES UNDER SENATE BILL 2775, THE COAL AND OIL LAND LEASING BILL.

Those who have not followed the history of oil and coal land leasing legislation from the beginning and have not had their attention called to the important questions involved, as viewed from the standpoint of the States and communities affected, have, in some instances at least, failed to fully understand the basis of the distribution of the funds as proposed in section 35 of Senate act 2775. As something of a review of the whole subject matter is necessary to an understanding of these questions, such a review, as briefly stated as possible, is herewith presented.

The almost universal rule of land tenure in the United States is that of ownership in fee. Limitations on the fee title are the rare exception. The Supreme Court long since held that the Federal Government holds the public domain in trust for the future citizens of the States or Territories in which the lands were located, who might become the owners through the operation of the land laws. And these laws were from the beginning enacted with a view of passing title to the individual as speedily as he might desire them and comply with the requirements of the land laws. These laws have varied widely in character, but they were all intended to encourage acquisition of lands by individuals.

EFFECT OF RETENTION OF LANDS IN PUBLIC OWNERSHIP UNTAXED.

Early in the history of public-land States and regions the unfortunate effect of the retention of large areas in Federal ownership untaxed was acutely felt; but as the areas which had not passed from Federal ownership were, in the main, unoccupied, no great amount of local expenditure was necessary in connection with them while in that condition and, therefore, the communities managed to sustain themselves by rather heavy taxation of the lands which had passed into private ownership during the transition period. Great hardship sometimes resulted, however, where, for one reason or another, considerable areas were so withheld from taxation for some time after the surrounding lands had been disposed of.

With a view of somewhat compensating the communities for the lack of opportunity to tax lands during the period of settlement and until title had passed, it was early provided that upon the sale of the lands the State should receive 5 per cent of the sale price, an amount perhaps equal to the sum that would ordinarily be secured during a period of three or four years by taxation. Of course, immediately upon the passing of title to the individual, the lands became taxable, and the communities were able to maintain government, support schools, and build roads through the ordinary methods of taxation.

FIRST DEPARTURE FROM POLICY OF DISPOSING OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The first departure from a policy of gradually disposing of public lands as application was made for them, or as they were settled under the public-land laws, came with the establishment of the forest reserves. Many people have wondered why it happened that there was so little sentiment favorable to the establishment of the forest reserves, or the national forests as they came to be called, in the regions in which they were established, and why a policy which most people now believe to be more beneficial than otherwise was so fiercely opposed by western people generally and rather forced upon them by the so-called conservationists in the East. The reason for this opposition, which has been most frequently referred to, arose out of the reckless manner in which the first reserves were established without careful examination, and frequently with but little knowledge as to the character of the lands embraced in a reserve and whether or not they were actually forested.

Another reason, which has not been so widely advertised but which was the most compelling with the thoughtful residents of the West, grew out of opposition to a policy which proposed to retain large areas permanently in Federal ownership, with limited opportunities for use and development and without the opportunity on the part of the States and communities to tax them and thus support the necessary activities of local government.

One feature of this opposition was overcome by the law authorizing the settlement and the passing of title to lands within the reserves that were found fit for agriculture. The other objection was met by providing that a portion of the proceeds of the rental and use of the lands and products of the reserved areas should be paid to the communities in lieu of the taxes which were lost to them by reason of permanent Government ownership and the dedication of further portions of the receipts for improvements which would otherwise have to be paid for by the communities.

There was some difference of opinion at the beginning as to the portion of the national forest revenues that the States and their communities were entitled to in lieu of the taxes they would otherwise have collected, but eventually an agreement was reached whereby at the present time the States and their communities in which the forest reserves are located secure the benefit of 45 per cent of all of the receipts from the reserves. These receipts grow out of the granting of grazing privileges and stumpage, or royalty on timber cutting, etc. Twenty-five per cent of the receipts are paid directly to the States for the benefit of the counties in which the reserves are situated; 10 per cent are used by the forest administration for the building of roads necessary for the use of the reserves by the community; and an additional 10 per cent is dedicated to the reimbursement of the fund provided by section 8 of the good-roads bill, which fund is utilized for the building of roads on or in the vicinity of the reserves in cooperation with the States and their communities. The receipts to some of the States from forest reserves is very considerable, Oregon, California, Idaho, and Washington receiving the largest sums, in the order named, and as time passes these States, as well as some others, will receive large sums as their share of the receipts of the forest reserves.

POLICY OF REIMBURSING STATES FOR LOSS OF TAX REVENUES ESTABLISHED.

It is highly important to keep these facts in mind, because, up to this time and until the coal and oil leasing bill shall become a law, the forest reserves, or national forests, are the only areas which have been permanently reserved in Federal ownership. It is interesting to note that by a series of enactments, all taken after careful consideration, the sum of 45 per cent of the total receipts of the reserves was determined upon as the sum which the States and their communities were entitled to by reason of their loss of the power to tax the lands which were thus permanently held in public ownership.

Some time elapsed between the establishment of the forest reserves in the nineties and the agitation for the retention of further large areas permanently in Government ownership. This agitation took the form of a demand for the repeal of the laws which had been enacted with a view of passing title to coal and oil lands to individuals and the substitution of a system under which the Federal Government should retain title and lease the lands on a royalty basis.

BEGINNING OF AGITATION FOR LEASING LAND.

This agitation for a coal and oil land leasing law first became vigorous in the early part of President Roosevelt's administration. It originated with certain Government bureaus and with a certain body of people almost wholly in the East who advocated the change as a policy of conservation. The West did not take kindly to the plan proposed. In fact the opposition to the creation of the forest reserves was mild compared with the opposition which arose in the public-land State to the conservation theories as crystallized in the proposals to retain vast areas of great potential value in Federal ownership and secure their utilization through a system of Federal leases.

This opposition was based on the same ground as the opposition to the extension of the forest reserves, but it was the more active and earnest because of the much greater and more important interests involved. While it was early admitted by some in the West that there might be some virtue in retaining rough, rocky, elevated areas unfit for cultivation and containing little, if any, mineral, and mostly mountainous in character, permanently in Federal ownership as forest reserves, providing the States could be reasonably reimbursed for the loss of sources of revenue by taxation, the sentiment was practicaly unanimous against a similar policy applied to lands and regions of great potential value whose resources, when developed, would bring large populations and lay a heavy burden upon the institutions of Government for the maintenance of order, the building and maintenance of schools, and the construction of roads.

It was, of course, assumed that no such plan would be undertaken without making some provision, as in the case of the forest reserves, to supply from the revenues which the Government would obtain in the way of rents and royalties the deficiencies in local revenue resulting from the loss of the taxing power over the lands and their values.

But while it was believed that the burden of expenditures over areas such as would be included in forest reserves would not fall very heavily upon the communities, and therefore could be recouped through receiving a portion of the Federal revenues, it was realized that the burdens upon local government in the active and populous centers which would be built up by the development of oil and coal lands would be very great, and it was doubted if they could be met through and by receiving even a very liberal portion of the rents and royalties which the Federal Government would obtain.

PLAN NEW AND NOVEL.

The plan and purpose of reserving large areas in public ownership untaxed, to be rented or leased, was entirely new and novel to English-speaking people. We had no experience under such a system as was proposed. It could be assailed, as it was, as the most gigantic plan of absentee landlordism that the world had ever known, and with the added indictment that in this case the landlord, being the sovereign, could absolutely paralyze the activities of local governmental administration by denying the right of taxation. Of course, the answer to this was that provision would be made under such a system whereby the communities would be reimbursed for their losses in taxes by being given a liberal portion of the receipts from the rents and royalties. While no one at that time assumed to suggest that a denial would be made of the rights of the communities in this regard, fear was expressed lest the amount would be insufficient to meet the absolute needs of the communities, particularly in the maintenance of schools and the building of roads—the two heaviest items of expenditures in a new country and in regions of mineral development.

The many objections urged against a leasing system by those living in the country affected would undoubtedly have prevented the enactment of legislation were it not for the fact that conditions arose through administrative methods whereby the regions affected must accept leasing, whether they liked it or not, as the only way out of a condition created by Executive action which tied up their resources and practically made their development impossible.

The first action along these lines was taken in President Roosevelt's administration, when the coal-land law, which provides for the sale of coal lands at the minimum price of $10 an acre when more than 15 miles from a railroad and $20 per acre when nearer a railroad, was interpreted as giving the administration authority to place a higher price on coal lands. Approximately 60,000,000 acres of coal lands, or of lands which were within coal regions, were withdrawn from entry under the coal-land law and after a more or less cursory examination the land found devoid of coal was restored to entry and the sale prices of the remainder largely increased. Up to that time the great coal areas of Illinois and Indiana and other Central States had been sold as agricultural land at from $1.25 to $2.50 an acre, and under the coal-land law the coal lands in Western States were sold at from $10 to $20 per acre. Under the new classification lands were classified at prices ranging all the way from $10 to $600 per acre. Very considerable areas of coal lands in sections far removed from centers of population were classified at the higher rates.

EFFECT OF CHANGE OF POLICY AS TO COAL.

The result of this radical change of law by interpretation was an immediate discouragement of the opening of new coal mines, and for the past 10 years or more practically no new coal properties have been opened through the purchase of public lands, except in a few cases of inferior and low-grade coals classified at or near the minimum price or otherwise, where the demand became so insistent that people were warranted in paying the very high price for coal lands with a view of beginning new operations. So far as coal lands are concerned a condition has been created under which Government coal lands are much higher than those equally desirable in private ownership in various parts of the country, and in many sections of the West a real monopoly has been created in the mines opened before the rise in the sale prices of public coal lands because of the great cost of buying public lands for new operations.

Furthermore, the General Land Office adopted an interpretation of the coal-land laws under which it became practically impossible to secure enough public coal land in a body to justify opening a commercial mine. Applications to purchase coal lands at the classified price were, in some cases, denied on the ground that the applicant did not present convincing evidence that the application was for his own use and benefit, and patents were denied to considerable areas which had been paid for and the money of applicants retained on the claim that the entry and purchase was not exclusively for the use and benefit of the applicant. Thus the laws intended to pass title to coal lands were so interpreted that it became difficult to secure an acreage sufficient for a commercial operation even on payment of the high classified price.

When under conditions like these a leasing law is proposed as the only way out of an unsatisfactory condition it is likely to be accepted, not as the most desirable thing, but as the only means of making development possible.

OIL-LAND WITHDRAWALS.

In 1909 President Taft made the first oil-land withdrawals, and from that date until the present time oil-land withdrawals have been numerous and have amounted in the aggregate to many millions of acres. The Government has not ordinarily withdrawn lands after geological examination and never as a result of actual exploration, but Government agents have kept closely in touch with private development, and as locations have been made under the oil-placer act on lands believed to contain oil Government agents have noted them, have kept close track of the drilling operations, and in almost every instance where oil has been discovered in commercial quantities, all of the lands in the section which were still in public ownership were withdrawn from entry.

The withdrawal act protects in their rights against withdrawals those who as locators are in possession and actually engaged in work leading to the discovery of oil at the time the withdrawal is made. Otherwise the withdrawal order wipes out the locator's rights, if he has not made a discovery that will be accepted as sufficient by the General Land Office. As conditions are frequently such as to deny even the best intentioned and most active of locators and developers of their rights, frequent withdrawals have fallen like a wet blanket on oil development at a time when the Nation was badly in need of oil. Not only were those who had already located oil ground thoroughly discouraged, but prospective locators hesitated to expend the time and money necessary for geological examinations, preliminary explorations, and initial locations of new territory, through the fear that at any moment the lands they were seeking to develop might be withdrawn under conditions that would wipe out their investment.

EFFECT ON LOCATORS AND THOSE SEEKING TO DEVELOP.

Under conditions like this any legislation that promised anything like security and any tolerable settlement of the controversies created by the withdrawals was accepted as better than the intolerable conditions existing. And, therefore, the West came to be tolerant, if not favorable, to leasing legislation, not because people were wholly convinced of its wisdom or desirability but because it was the only apparent way out of an intolerable condition which was holding up development, discouraging initiative, and jeopardizing investments.

These were the conditions in their earlier development, existing at the time the first oil and coal leasing bills were introduced. Among the first bills on the subject which provided a detailed plan of operations were bills introduced by Mr. MONDELL, of Wyoming, in the closing days of the Taft administration. Mr. MONDELL also introduced somewhat similar bills in the beginning of the Wilson administration. These bills, those relating to coal and oil lands being in separate measures, divided the proceeds from rents and royalties between the States in which they were collected and the "reclamation fund." This provision with regard to the "reclamation fund" was simply carrying out provisions of the reclamation act of June 17, 1902, which dedicated the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands, excepting the 5 per cent reserved from sales to be paid to the States, to the "reclamation fund." This division was made after consultation with certain officials of the Interior Department and the Reclamation Service and was understood to meet their approval as a fair division of the receipts.

DIVISION AS BETWEEN STATES AND THE RECLAMATION FUND AGREED UPON.

In the very early days of the Wilson administration certain gentlemen of the House and Senate collaborated with officials of the Interior Department in the drafting of an oil and coal leasing bill and, in the discussion of the question of division of the funds, the division into equal parts as between the "reclamation fund" and the States was apparently assumed to be a fair division, as is evidenced by the fact that the bill finally agreed upon made such a division.

Curiously enough, however, the bill as finally introduced in the House, while it recognized the claims of the States and their communities to reimbursement for the losses of revenues by taxes to the extent of 50 per cent of the receipts, the payment to the States of the sums thus due them was deferred until the moneys, having first been paid into the "reclamation fund," were expended and, under the terms of the reclamation law, repaid, whereupon the 50 per cent due to the State was to be paid over.

HOW IT HAPPENED.

On inquiry of those who had been instrumental in the drafting of the bill, particularly officials of the Interior Department, it was explained that this extraordinary arrangement was an eleventh-hour proposition adopted at the earnest insistence of the then Chief of the Reclamation Service, who urged, first, that the Reclamation Service was so badly in need of funds that they thought they were justified in asking that, for a brief time at least, all of the receipts should flow into the "reclamation fund"; and, second, and probably more persuasive, that if the bill was introduced with a half-and-half division there might be such persistent urging on the part of those who represented the claims of the States from which the receipts were obtained that a larger percentage would eventually be secured for the States. It was urged, therefore, that the extraordinary provision thus inserted in the bill just before it was finally introduced afforded trading material not only on the matter of receipts but on other matters that might be in controversy. In a conversation with regard to this matter between a western Member and an official of the Interior Department influential in the drafting of the bill, this official stated that he had no doubt that the House committee would restore the provision to its original form, under which the States would receive their portion of the receipts directly and immediately.

EFFECT OF SUCH A PROVISION.

It must have been patent to those who urged this extraordinary change in the provision relative to the division of the funds that while it recognized the rights of the States and their communities it really amounted to a denial of those rights. Assuming for the sake of argument that such an arrangement could be made workable the payments to the States and their communities would come too late to serve the purposes for which these funds were intended. The greatest burden on local government in regions of oil and coal development falls during the early period of the development when schoolhouses must be built for the first time and essential roads constructed, and this burden continues to bear heavily upon local government during the period of expansion. In other words, the community must have every possible resource of revenue at the very moment when rents and royalties begin to be paid—during the period when under systems of private land ownership taxes are the heaviest. Under the system of postponed payment the sums proposed to be paid to the States would be paid to them, if at all, during a period of from 10 to 30 years after the rents and royalties had been collected. In the meantime the communities would have been starved and impoverished and their public activities paralyzed. Oil sections would frequently have been exhausted and abandoned before the community received any funds. The fact is, however, that the provision referred to is a miserable and transparent joker. Under it the States would never receive any funds, because of the fact that it would be utterly impossible to identify funds received from any particular State after they were paid into the reclamation fund, and no one would be in a position to say when any particular contributions to the fund were paid out, or when or where used, or when they returned to the fund in the form of repayments.

PROVISION NOT CHANGED AS EXPECTED.

For various reasons, which it is not necessary to discuss in this connection, the House committee adhered to the language of the bill as thus drafted and presented. In the Senate, however, there was from the beginning an insistence both upon the part of the Senate committee and the Senate itself that the States receive their share of the funds direct and immediately after the expiration of the year in which they were collected, and this is provided for in the Senate bill as it passed in the present session and has been adopted by the House committee. Ten per cent of the receipts is retained in the Treasury to pay the cost of administration of a leasing system and the remainder is divided equally between the States from which the revenues were derived and the "reclamation fund."

While no one active in the beginning of the agitation for leasing legislation assumed or pretended to deny the validity of the claim of the States to a portion of the receipts of a leasing system to reimburse them for the loss of tax revenues, the bill of which the present bill is the successor, having clearly acknowledged the soundness of the principle and suggested an equal division, some who have not given the matter careful consideration have at one time or another seemed to question the rights of the States and their communities in this regard. Extraordinary as this viewpoint is, it has been held by some, and hence must be considered.

HOW IS LOCAL GOVERNMENT TO BE MAINTAINED?

Some few have urged that while it was true that States were denied the right to tax the lands and mineral deposits reserved from sale and disposition under a leasing bill, the States and their communities could recoup themselves for these losses by taxes on improvements placed on the property and by a mine output tax. The fallacy of this argument is easily shown. If what was proposed was a reservation by the Federal Government of the title tax free to all of the lands in a Commonwealth, it is barely possible that some system of taxation might be invented or developed that would take the place of the land tax. This would be a system diametrically opposite to that of the disciples of Henry George, who would tax land values and nothing else, and it is very doubtful whether any such plan could be worked out in case the landlord, the Government, laid upon all of them a burden of rent or royalty, no part of which was allowed to take the place of the revenues lost by prohibition of land taxation. But whether or no it would be possible, under the conditions suggested, to work out an adequate taxation system which did not include the taxation of lands, it is very evident on the most superficial examination that nothing of the kind could be accomplished under conditions such as would exist under this bill, where title to only a portion of the lands is retained by the Government untaxed, and where a large portion of the lands, even those of approximately the same value and character, have heretofore passed into private ownership and are taxable in the usual way.

Let us imagine, for instance, a coal field one-half of which is in private ownership, and is assessed at $200 an acre, exclusive of the improvements, and on the output of which there is an output tax. Such lands at a tax rate of 2 per cent would afford a tax revenue of $4 per acre per annum on the land value, $2,640 per section, and $95,040 per township. If only half of the township were land of this character and in private ownership, the land-tax revenue from the land values would be $47,520. Let us assume that the other half was still public land of similar character retained in public ownership under this bill. When it reached a point of development where the values were the same as those of the privately owned lands, the communities would lose $47,520 per annum in tax revenue by reason of the retention of the lands in public ownership.

It has been suggested, as above stated, that the community recoup itself for this loss by an extra output tax and an extra tax on improvements. But the privately owned lands are already paying a tax on the improvements apart from the land values and an output tax. Does anyone imagine that any State in the Union would, or would be allowed to, place a higher output tax or a higher tax per dollar of improvements on the improvements located upon, or on the output from, lands the title of which was retained in the Federal Government than upon lands the title of which was in private ownership? The Federal Government would be the very first to protest against any such discrimination.

Examples of oil development could be cited that would show even more clearly not only the inequity and the injustice but the fundamentally destructive character of the conditions that could thus be created. If the Federal Government can retain title to extensive areas of very great value in States and communities and hold them thus indefinitely, free from taxation, the Federal Government can through that means absolutely arrest development, bankrupt a community partly developed, and paralyze the operations of local government. The doctrine that such a policy is tolerable is monstrous. No one who can give consideration to the matter can hold it for a moment.

One of the most striking cases of the recognition by Congress of the right of the States and their communities to the opportunity to secure support of local government through taxation was presented by the recent legislation reported out by the Committee on Public Lands covering the California & Oregon Railway lands in Oregon and Washington. These lands had been granted to the California & Oregon Railroad and had been taxed for years. Finally the Federal Government took steps to forfeit the grant. While the case was being tried in the courts the railroad company refused to pay taxes. The grant was finally forfeited. Whereupon in connection with the legislation providing for the disposition of the lands, provision was made whereby the Federal Government paid all the back taxes and the accrued penalties. This payment amounted to several hundred thousand dollars.

NEED OF REVENUE COMES WITH DEVELOPMENT AND POPULATION.

The specious argument has been made, by those who have not thought of the matter deeply, that inasmuch as the lands which will be affected by this legislation are now in the hands of the Federal Government and untaxed, there is no injustice in retaining them in the hands of the Federal Government untaxed. The most superficial examination of the matter reveals the fallacy of such an argument. As has been stated, communities have sometimes been seriously embarrassed and handicapped by the large amount of untaxed public lands in their midst, but this condition under past procedure only exists in the period during which the lands are being settled and developed, and unless development is very slow the difficulties of the situation, while trying, are not insurmountable. The public lands thus withheld from taxation are uninhabited, they lay but little obligation on the community for the maintenance of order and none for the maintenance of schools, and the temporary roads or trails built over and across them are not expensive. The moment, however, those lands come to be settled and populations go upon them, requiring the maintenance of the institutions of government, including schools and the improvement of highways, they have under our policy passed from Government ownership into private ownership, the community has received 5 per cent of the sale price, the property has gone upon the tax roll, and such levies are made as are necessary to the maintenance of the institutions of the community.

Under a leasing plan, however, lands untaxed when unoccupied and not a source of considerable expense to the community would remain untaxed when they become highly developed, when they were covered with oil wells or coal mines, and contained the very considerable populations which such enterprises require, and when in the new and pioneer condition of affairs the demand for improvements, particularly roads, is heavier, as compared to the resources of the communities, than it ever is at a later date. Clearly to retain such lands in an untaxed state and make no provision to recoup the revenue losses through a portion of the revenue derived from the land is to create a condition leading to governmental distress, disaster, and bankruptcy. The provisions of section 35, which the House committee has adopted, will afford the States and their communities the funds necessary to avert disaster which the bill without such a provision would bring.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, the State of Nevada sent me here to speak for them, in my own way, guided only by my sense of right; to represent with honor in Congress a whole State whose great aim is to build, to restore, and reclaim the West; to guard, that no suspicion touch Nevada. With that high resolve ever in mind, I do protest against the spirit of this bill, which would delegate to a Secretary of the Interior an interpretation of our law and conduct.

To give him authority to withdraw from entry, thereby blasting ambitions of whole counties, because slander may say that some pioneer, perhaps with good intent, with zeal to bring in values, who may have devoted a lifetime of honest toil, and may violate a provision, will be judged by a Secretary and not a court.

The traditions of our courts are sacred.

Our most progressive laws came from the West where we yield to none in our sense of duty to our Nation.

It is my duty here to speak for the rugged honesty of our courts and their power to bring malefactors, if there be any, to the bar of justice. Nevada does not consent that some average man, appointed by some other average man, shall decide her future course nor pass judgment upon her men.

There are men in Congress who believe it wiser to trust interior interests to the State in which existent.

Every man's duty here is to study this important bill, changing as it does our entire policy of public lands, with insinuations of fraud upon many pages.

Women of the West do not work in mines. We men of the West protect our women. What western man in committee permitted the innuendo to crawl across a page defining such restrictions?

An eastern man who, through goodness of disposition and lack of information, supports this accusation can be forgiven, but for a man from the great and glorious West who so stumbles in his judgment there is no excuse.

Section 35 is the most rational provision in the whole measure and the amendments are offered only in the interest of sectional advantage. It provides first the Government take 10 per cent for administration.

Second: Forty-five per cent to loan upon irrigation projects where your security is the industry, economy, and desire to build. Money was never advanced upon better security than the building instinct of America, to be returned with interest. Leaving 45 per cent to be expended by the State, which has a record superior to your Government for efficiency and economy, to build and maintain roads, under the direction of a legislature which is elected every two years; for schools and educational purposes, and to maintain law and order.

Nevada sent to training camps, without cost to our Government, 8 per cent of our entire population. In view of the record, which is submitted, we resent insinuation as to distribution:

WAR DEPARTMENT PRAISES NEVADA.

To the press of Nevada:

Adjt. Gen. Sullivan is in receipt of a telegram from Gen. Crowder congratulating Nevada on the fact that she took second place in the nation-wide race in the classifying of the remaining registrants of the September, 1918, registration.

A short time ago the first race for the classification and physical examination of all registrants between the ages of 19 and 36, in which every State in the Union was making strenuous competition, Nevada also took second place, and resulted in this State obtaining prominent recognition by Washington as well as by the other less fortunate States.

The success of Nevada in making the splendid record she did in both races is in a large measure due to the work of the boards of the State. Every board entered into the spirit of the race from the very first, and without any limit to the amount of time they expended on this war work, lent every effort to complete their respective tasks in record time. Had one board failed to respond, the entire State's work would have been in vain.

Esmeralda was the first county to finish the work in this race. This is the home county of our Representative in Congress.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I merely want to make an observation or two in view of the fact that my colloquy with the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] was brought into the discussion by the gentleman from Utah.

I endeavored to get the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] to concede that the States at some time were entitled to a part of this fund, in fact, to half of this fund. I was not quite able to get him to concede that on the floor the other day, but I do believe he concedes in his heart now that the States are entitled to half, or 45 per cent. The difficulty is that the gentleman from Oklahoma is looking at the situation from the standpoint of the needs of the Reclamation Service, and, of course, with particular reference to the needs of his own great Commonwealth.

The point I wish to emphasize is this, that in a presently developing community, as, for example, the State of Colorado, where we expect great developments from oil shale, the need is immediate. Schools and roads must be built as the development proceeds, and we should not be compelled to wait until the revolving fund in its cycle gets around to those States in their turn. It was virtually admitted by the gentleman from Oklahoma that under his plan these funds might not be available to the States for 20 years. I take it from the gentleman's remarks that he will support the chairman's amendment, and while I entirely agree with the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that it does not allow enough to the States, in fact, is a very niggardly allowance in view of the permanent withdrawal of these lands from taxation, yet since it does at least allow that what they shall get shall come to them at the period of their need, I shall be glad to support the gentleman's amendment as a compromise in the interest of the passage of this most important measure. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take up much of the time of the committee, but I do not want the House to proceed under a misapprehension of the facts. My good and distinguished friend from Utah [Mr. MAYS] has been very zealous, and properly so, in securing all he can for the Western States. That is entirely proper; I do not blame him, and I do not blame the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE]. It is the most natural thing on earth for them to do. I do not blame the members of the Committee on Public Lands. Fifteen out of the 21 live out in the remote parts of the country, and it is natural and proper for them to be zealous and active in behalf of their localities. It seems to me also to be the duty of some of us to look after the Government's interest, in which the entire country has an interest. But in either event, Mr. Chairman, the Government gets very little out of it. It all goes to the West. Of course, that helps the country. I do not want to be captious about it, but if my amendment prevails every penny of this money that is taken in by the Government, aggregating up to June of this year the sum of $7,226,000—every bit of that would go into the reclamation fund and be spent in the Western States, so that it is not so much a controversy as to whether or not we are going to take it from the West as it is a question of how we are going to spend it in the West. We are not going to take it from the West. The West gets it, no matter how we proceed. The question is whether we shall give it to them now or give it to them from the reclamation fund.

My own opinion is and my own thought is that the chairman of the committee [Mr. SINNOTT] and the majority leader [Mr. MONDELL] and the Republican Party generally ought to be very careful and not allow a great national fund to be depreciated, disintegrated, taken away and scattered out, and expended now to the hazard and detriment of the great national reclamation fund.

I am not, as I said, captious about it. The responsibility is not so much mine. My own thought is that they ought to put the money in the reclamation fund and spend it all in the West and keep that great national fund alive. This seems to me to be the broader view. This seems to be the correct view. This would save the fund. This would be keeping the country——

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Let me suggest only this to the gentleman: We want this fund before our children are grown, before our schoolhouses are built, and before our roads are constructed.

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. The gentleman is like the 4-year-old boy that wants his Christmas present on the 20th of December and can not wait until the 25th. It is simply the old, old story.

Mr. VAILE. Oh, the boy wants it before he is grown up.

Mr. FERRIS. He is like the child who wants to eat between meals, and is not content to wait until the dinner bell rings. He is like the boy who wants to get his candy right now, and can not wait a minute. [Laughter.]

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. The gentleman's remarks are very pleasing, but I want to ask him who will build the roads in Nevada, where 90 per cent of the roads and hundreds of miles of territory are Government owned? Who will build the roads?

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, my answer to the gentleman is who will buy me a Packard automobile? Who will furnish the money to do for me the things I can not do for myself? The gentleman would go down into the Government Treasury and take money to spend locally that ought to be spent by the people locally. The gentleman would go on and do that ad infinitum. The gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS], a very able and capable Member always, exhibited a picture, and while showing it he was so plaintive in his appeals for the interests surrounding that picture that he would almost bring tears to the eyes of the fence posts, but at another moment he showed you how that was a great, seething, vast, prosperous community. Now, the gentleman himself is a successful business man, eminent in his State, and we all are very proud of him as a Member of the House.

I repeat, the responsibility is not altogether mine. The House is now controlled on that side of the aisle, and they should be more alert in not allowing ambitious Members to break down a great service like the Reclamation Service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more. I do not think I shall use it all.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. The responsibility, I repeat, Mr. Chairman, is not mine. It is over there on the other side. But when some Member from the remotest part of Colorado, Utah, or some of the arid States comes here and asks for some money with which to irrigate the arid West, and which was intended to create a great revolving reclamation fund, not for the benefit of a single community here or there, and the Government has to answer, "We give all the money to the States, townships, and the counties," the responsibility would still be over there. The answer will be we should have kept that great fund intact. It should not have been depleted.

That side of the House in 1902 inaugurated a great reclamation policy for the irrigation of 16 or 17 of the great public-land States. Now, little by little they are carving it away, little by little they are robbing it of the funds that belong to it.

If you take 45 per cent away from the reclamation fund to-day, as proposed in this bill, and give it to the States direct, you carve away 45 per cent of the revenue to keep reclamation going. If you take away 20 per cent, as proposed by the chairman's amendment, you carve that much away; and if you take away 30 per cent, as proposed by the Snell amendment, you carve that much away; and so on. It is all a raid on this fund. It is a diversion of this fund. I fear we shall too soon be sorry.

They say I am here opposing the West. I am here trying to save the West against its own folly. You will find it out. If I were the chairman of the committee, I would move to recommit this bill and move to instruct the committee to provide that this money should be put into this reclamation fund, every cent of which should be sent to the West.

The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE] and the gentleman from Utah [Mr. MAYS] tried to make me say—I know through a misapprehension—that I was in favor of taking all the money away from the West. I would not do any such thing. I would not say such a thing. If I had such an opinion, I surely would have developed it heretofore when from year to year this bill has been in my charge.

I have defended this measure here from year to year since this leasing plan was first taken up. I have been asked to do it by my good friends from the West. My friend from Utah [Mr. MAYS] asserts that I am unfriendly to the West because I do not want him now to tear down and take from the reclamation fund the money that ought to be retained in that fund.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. In a moment. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE] suggested that I may be moving on account of some selfish reason for the benefit of my own State.

Mr. VAILE. Oh, no. Absolutely the gentleman has that right.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to make it clear. My selfishness, Mr. Chairman, is simply this: My State has contributed from $6,000,000 to $7,000,000 to this reclamation fund, and we have never had any irrigation from it. But under the law we contributed so much and were entitled to receive something, and have never received a cent. Now, I do not complain about that for our turn may yet come, but what I do say is this: This great fund ought to be kept intact.

I said the other day, and I say it again now, that my dear friend from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] is, in my opinion, the very best chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands that we have ever had during my service here, and if he is willing to let these people carve this reclamation fund to the extent of his amendment, all right. If the majority leader [Mr. MONDELL] is willing to do it, I suppose I can not stop it. So, Mr. Chairman, it all resolves itself into this: This section 35 is a section which provides for the disposition of the money under this great western development bill. My own notion is that it all ought to go into the Reclamation Service in the West. These gentlemen want it now paid direct to them. It should not be dissipated in that way. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has again expired.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the total area of the State of Utah is 54,393,600 acres. Of that amount the Government has withdrawn and is now controlling under its national-forest policy approximately 8,000,000 acres of land. There is unappropriated and unsurveyed land in the State of Utah amounting to 31,321,987 acres, making a total of withdrawn land and unappropriated land not now owned or occupied by any individual in the world an empire of 39,273,421 acres, a little more than 73 per cent of the entire area of the State. As before stated, this vast area is held either by the Government in its forest reserves or it is unappropriated, unoccupied desert or mineral lands. There are in this great western Commonwealth about 7,000,000 acres of coal land, and very nearly the entire amount of that land is in Government ownership. The State derives no benefit from it. Under the terms of this bill the land is withheld forever from State ownership, but the Government proposes to go out there as a landlord and lease that land for the benefit of the people of the United States. I have not very much objection to that, providing there can be arranged here a just division of the revenues that come from those leases. Under this bill, as I understand it, it is proposed that 45 per cent of the receipts from royalties or rental shall be turned over to the States in which this mineral wealth is found, that 45 per cent of it shall be turned over to the Reclamation Service to be used as a revolving fund and expended out there in developing reclamation projects in the West, and that 10 per cent of the fund shall be used for administration purposes by the National Government. I am in accord with that suggestion. I can in no case consent to any provision which reduces the percentage which the State is entitled to receive. I believe that is a proper and wise distribution of the income to be derived from the mineral wealth of the West, including its oil and coal lands, but I do not believe that it is a proper thing to reduce the State's receipts below that point. It has never been done in the division of the timber resources of the Western States heretofore. The States have participated in the distribution of the income from the national forests in somewhat the same proportion, and surely those States which have three-fourths of their area permanently withdrawn from ownership by private individuals, and therefore withdrawn from taxation, ought to have a proper division of the revenues that are derived from these lands in those States. [Applause.]

The conservation policy of the Government in dealing with our public lands, our national forests, and our nonnavigable streams has been harmful to the West. There is in Utah more coal than in Pennsylvania. We have enough undeveloped oil-shale land to furnish the needs of the Nation for 100 years. We have the greatest undeveloped oil dome in the southeastern section of the State that is known in America to-day. We have more iron ore than can be found in Michigan and Alabama combined.

These resources in coal and iron and oil are virtually all upon our public domain. Restrictions have been imposed upon those who have sought to develop these lands in the past to such an extent that capital has been slow to take hold of this great fund of national wealth.

Under the provisions of this bill it is confidently hoped that these hidden treasures will be developed.

I object to the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], which seeks to turn over all rentals received under the law to the Reclamation Service.

The States must exist to-day. Their schools must be maintained and their State governments must be supported. It is quite true that former bills contained the provision which he now proposes, but it is also true that those bills, contrary to the letter and spirit of this bill, passed title to much of the oil and mineral land, thereby permitting the State to tax such holdings. Under this bill the title remains in the Government, and the State, if deprived of these royalties or rentals, would be obliged to maintain schools, exercise police power and all other functions of government over three-fourths of its total area, from which it was deprived of receiving a cent of revenue. The proposition is so obviously unjust that I am sure the House will not adopt such a provision. If any change from the Senate provision is seriously proposed, the percentage turned over to the States should be increased and not diminished. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Utah has expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 10 minutes on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am in favor of good roads and proper appropriations for that purpose. I am in favor of schools of all grades, with proper appropriations, and in favor of everything that the local governments can do for their advancement.

A proper expenditure of the money is one thing. An improper expenditure is another thing. The misfortune of this legislation will be that the localities from which the product comes will receive but a small portion of the benefit of it. Everybody knows that the coal mines, the gas and oil wells, and the phosphate deposits are in localities that are thinly populated, where there are very few people, and you know that they have to depend on development from within. When the money goes to the States for general distribution it is scattered very thinly over the various districts of the State. The only proper division would have been to return the money to the county——

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Not at present. I want to complete this idea. The only proper way would have been to return the funds to the county where the revenue originated, and then you would have built up the community that most needed it. That has not been done in this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. MONDELL. Does not the gentleman believe that the Legislature of the State of California will make a fair distribution of these funds and will give them in the main to the immediate community from which the funds were derived? That is certainly what will be done in other States.

Mr. RAKER. California will endeavor to pass proper and appropriate laws.

Mr. MONDELL. Then we do not need to dispose of that question in this legislation.

Mr. RAKER. I can not yield further. I hope the gentleman will allow me to proceed until I develop this one thought. We will try to pass appropriate State laws, but ordinarily they are general, and the money is distributed over the State.

Now, gentlemen, what I want to get at is this: So far as the action of the House is concerned we have adopted at least three times the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma. The Senate has passed it. It went through conference, and it has been adopted there by both Houses heretofore, and while I am a western man, living in a part of the community affected by this bill, I believe there is a need for proper legislation in regard to the entire subject. The main thing is to obtain this money for the reclamation of the arid lands of the West, and that this fund may be increased and not depleted. Since the reclamation act was passed, unless there has been some special legislation, all moneys obtained from the sale of public lands have gone into the reclamation fund for the purpose of building up irrigation projects, and when a project is completed and the money is repaid, it comes back into the Treasury again for the purpose of completing more irrigation projects, and continues to be a revolving fund. I want to say to my friends from the West now that there is danger that we will tinker and fool with this question of receipts until we will get a feeling from other Members that we are trying to get something to which we are not entitled, and they will not give us the appropriations that we ought to have. In fact, we are not getting them now.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. In just a moment.

Mr. MONDELL. I want to ask the gentleman if he is not in favor of his State receiving 25 per cent of the receipts from the great forest reserves in his State?

Mr. RAKER. That is disposed of, and the water has gone over the wheel.

Mr. MONDELL. Does not the gentleman——

Mr. RAKER. I would like to complete my thought on this matter. This reclamation fund is put to a use in the State whereby to-day the projects are bringing in more taxation than you will get by turning over the money under this bill to the several States. Is it not better to increase that reclamation fund instead of trying to borrow more money, and paying interest on it, to put more money into that fund? We borrowed $20,000,000. Is it not better to increase that fund from the sale of the public lands and the rentals under this bill so that we may increase the present reclamation project and add more to the taxable land in our States? I am in favor of turning the entire fund over to the Reclamation Service as this amendment provided, then to the States after it is once used for reclamation purposes.

Mr. BARBOUR. I have asked the question several times but have not had an answer. If this money goes into the revolving fund and revolves, within what time can the States expect to get any of it?

Mr. RAKER. It depends on the time—1 to 20 years. The picture presented on the board before you this morning illustrates that in the land that was in private ownership a small part of taxation was received. They did not tax the value of the mine; none of them do. They do not know what is in it. They tax the land for a reasonable amount and then tax the output, as they will do in these cases.

Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. It is so patent on the face of it that all know that they tax the land a reasonable amount and then they tax the value of it as the coal is taken out.

Mr. MAYS. Does not the gentleman know that you can measure coal as accurately in the ground as you can measure wheat in the bin?

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MAYS. The geologists say so.

Mr. RAKER. I know it; but it is not so.

Mr. MAYS. Do they not appraise the value of the land and then the value of the coal?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; but it is theory, and not anything practical. They maintain these western towns by assessments on the improvements, collections on personal-property tax, just as they did in the illustration presented here. Every irrigation project that you start you will add that much more taxation to the country. We will get some revenue that will go to the irrigation fund, and that taxation comes to the State. The surrounding territory is improved by residences, and a town springs up there on or off the land where the oil well is and where the coal land is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, it impresses me, listening to the gentleman who has just preceded me, that this whole thing is a matter of Federal Government pleading under the Ferris amendment to borrow a certain amount of money from the State from 1 to 20 years. Under the Ferris resolution this money comes back in the course of time to the different States. If the Federal Government needs the money, they can go out in the market and hire that money for 3 to 4 per cent. The only difference is that they would get this money from the State for nothing over a period from 1 to 20 years when if they went into the market and borrowed it they would have to pay 3 or 4 per cent. It impresses me that is the point, because under the Ferris resolution the money ultimately comes back to the State. But when do the States need that money? The States need that money primarily at the time the development occurs. The State needs the money for roads; it needs the money for schoolhouses; it needs the money at that time for the development that comes; and the only advantage in the world that the National Government can get out of it is that they get it from 1 to 20 years without the payment of interest.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSMAN. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. The reclamation fund is a revolving fund, and the State of California gets its share of it.

Mr. HERSMAN. Suppose the reclamation fund needs more money.

Mr. BLANTON. The Government has been letting the reclamation fund have money all the time. They let it have twenty millions not long ago.

Mr. HERSMAN. Where does that money come from?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman says that the Government can go out and get the money for 3 or 4 per cent. It is paying 4¼ per cent in interest now.

Mr. HERSMAN. Well, call it 4¼; it might be 3 or 4 per cent under normal conditions. But where does the money come from? It comes from borrowing in the open market. The only difference between these propositions is that if it goes to the irrigation fund it extends over a period of 1 to 20 years, and the difference is in the rate of interest the Government must pay.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman must not forget that all this money belongs to the Government. This is a question of whether the Government will let the States have the benefit of it for the good purposes mentioned in the bill.

Mr. HERSMAN. I can see absolutely no difference, and the only advantage to the National Government is that it gets it without interest, whereas if it went into the market it would have to pay interest at 4 or 4¼ per cent. I think that the Federal Government ought to go into the market and get the money if it needs it for development. Most of all these large propositions are manipulated on borrowed money. That is the way we got the Liberty loans, by going into the market. So that it seems to me if it is to be given to the States, if it is to be given to the States at all, the time to give it is now, when the States need it, and let the Government pay the interest on any bonds it sees fit to issue. Under the reclamation laws both principal and interest are returned and the Government loses nothing. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from New York as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I think we had better give my amendment the dignity of a burial. So I will withdraw it. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Oklahoma withdraws his amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 36. That all royalty accruing to the United States under any oil or gas lease or permit under this act on demand of the Secretary of the Interior shall be paid in oil or gas.

Upon granting any oil or gas lease under this act, and from time to time thereafter during said lease, the Secretary of the Interior shall, except whenever in his judgment it is desirable to retain the same for the use of the United States, offer for sale for such period as he may determine, upon notice and advertisement on sealed bids or at public auction, all royalty oil and gas accruing or reserved to the United States under such lease. Such advertisement and sale shall reserve to the Secretary of the Interior the right to reject all bids whenever within his judgment the interest of the United States demands; and in cases where no satisfactory bid is received or where the accepted bidder fails to complete the purchase, or where the Secretary of the Interior shall determine that it is unwise in the public interest to accept the offer of the highest bidder, the Secretary of the Interior, within his discretion, may readvertise such royalty for sale, or sell at private sale for such period, or accept the value thereof from the lessee: Provided, however, That pending the making of a permanent contract for the sale of any royalty oil or gas as herein provided, the Secretary of the Interior may sell the current product at private sale, at not less than the market price: And provided further, That any royalty oil or gas may be sold at not less than the market price at private sale to any department or agency of the United States.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question if I may. Recurring to the beginning of the section, or rather lines 9 and 10 of the first paragraph, the provision, as I understand it, is to require a royalty to be paid in kind. What is the purpose of that? Is the Government to provide storage for both oil and gas?

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, the Government might need the oil, and in case the Government did need the oil it would have an opportunity to secure it under this provision.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. How will it store this gas?

Mr. SINNOTT. I do not know. We could store a good deal of it here in this Chamber, I think.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Is it not impossible, Mr. Chairman, to store gas?

Mr. SINNOTT. Helium gas is stored. Helium gas is shipped by compression, I believe.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. This is common fuel gas that is referred to here.

Mr. SINNOTT. That part may be in operation very little, but the Government might as well have it.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Is it not a fact, then, that under this provision that you have it would be impossible to store gas, and it will be drawn away unless left in the soil——

Mr. SINNOTT. I did not catch the gentleman's interrogation.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. It is impossible to store gas; you can not store fuel gas except in the ground. Is not that the fact?

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, I am not fully informed on that. I know they store the helium gas.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Yes; but that is in a limited quantity.

Mr. SINNOTT. And other gas is stored. I think there will be very little question as to that, and it is a mere matter of precaution in——

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. It requires it to be paid in kind. So they are required to store it. They can not collect the royalty except by taking in kind of the production.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. If the gentleman will permit, it says that it is on demand of the Secretary of the Interior. If gas is in great demand, when they need it they could pipe the gas and use it from day to day and not store it. It is only on demand of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman is aware that they store illuminating gas.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. That is only for one day.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. In the instance I have pointed out it may be used from day to day over a long period of time and used very advantageously.

Mr. ELSTON. In case the gas can not be stored he can demand the royalty in money. It is at the option of the Secretary of the Interior to demand in kind or money.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I would like to proceed for five minutes, as I desire to ask some more questions.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, turning to page 74, what is the purpose in fixing the price at private sale from the lessee at "value" and the price at which it is sold to the Government at "market price"? Is there any purpose in that?

Mr. SINNOTT. In this part of the proviso—that pending the making of a permanent contract for the sale of any royalty oil or gas as herein provided, the Secretary of the Interior may sell the current product at private sale at not less than the market price: And provided further, That any royalty oil or gas may be sold at not less than the market price at private sale to any department or agency of the United States.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. That is a portion of it; but beginning at the top of the page.

The Secretary of the Interior, within his discretion, may readvertise such royalty for sale, or sell at private sale for such period, or accept the value thereof from the lessee.

Without any qualification, of course, as to whether it shall be market price. He could sell at private sale, either below the market price or above.

Or accept the value thereof from the lessee.

Now, when it comes down to the provision read by the gentleman he uses the term "market price." Is there any reason for the difference in terms?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; there is no reason. The Secretary would, no doubt, require market price.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Well, "value" does not necessarily mean "market price."

Mr. SINNOTT. I think it does. When you speak of "value" you mean "market value."

Mr. WELLING. I do not think the gentleman would wish the Government to sell anything derived from royalties at less than the market price.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Then why did not they fix it at market price in reference to private sale?

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, that is to take care of little job lots that it would not pay to put it up at public bidding.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I think the proviso covers that where it says:

Provided, however, That the Secretary of the Interior may sell the current product at private sale at not less than the market price.

The process of sale is indicated in lines 1 and 2.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. If the gentleman will permit me again. the contract at private sale has no qualification or requirement as to whether it shall be——

Mr. SINNOTT. I have no objection to the gentleman offering an amendment to insert "at not less than the market price" after "private sale."

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Well, I am calling to the chairman's attention this matter, and I think it ought to be fixed so that there can not be any question about it.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, on page 74, line 2, after the word "sale," to insert "at not less than the market price."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. SINNOTT: Page 74, line 2, after the word "sale," insert "at not less than the market price."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas moves to strike out the section.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I have noticed, both in this and in the Sixty-fifth Congress, that when the House has spent some three or four or five or six days upon any piece of legislation that toward the close of its consideration some time was then spent in eulogy upon either the measure or the committee which brought the legislation before the House. We have spent now four days upon this bill—Saturday, Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday. And I have been wondering why some one at this particular time has not spent at least a few moments in eulogizing either the measure or the committee.

Mr. SINNOTT. Go to it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I can not yield right now.

This is a bill to provide for leasing of coal lands, so that the coal may be taken out of the ground in order to help the country and the people. We have spent four days of valuable time on it, right in the face of the fact that day after to-morrow, with only 30 days' supply of coal above the ground, 500,000 miners are going to walk out under order of their autocratic chiefs and quit work, with winter in front of us, with hundreds of thousands of innocent women and little children, many of them flesh of their flesh and bone of their bone, threatened with freezing to death this winter, and here we have taken no steps whatever to protect them from cold and hunger, or to guarantee to the whole people that law and order will be enforced.

Mr. BARBOUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret that I can not yield, as I have not the time. I wonder if it would not have been better for this country if we had spent at least 15 minutes of this time in taking up and passing the resolution that was introduced here the other day by my colleague from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], which would indicate to the country that the Congress of the United States is standing behind the President in this matter, that the Congress of the United States is to give the lawbreakers of our land, is to give the anarchists of our land, to understand that the Congress of the United States is not going to stand any monkey business in the transactions which are threatening to occur within the next week or so. Would it not have been better, I say, if this House and the Congress had taken some action, and have let the country know that the rights of the people are going to be protected and are not going to be jeopardized, and that the women and the little children are not going to be permitted by this Government to stand to suffer this winter.

I was in hopes this morning when one of our distinguished leaders [Mr. KITCHIN] asked the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] why it was we could not take up and pass that resolution, that a satisfactory answer would be given, and that it would be taken up immediately by unanimous consent and passed.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment I will yield to my colleague. What is holding it back? Is it because it was introduced by a Democrat? I want to say that I can not agree with the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] when he says that he does not want the Congress to be in the attitude of having to approve or disapprove of Executive action. I want to say that the Congress of the United States, in my opinion, has the right to express, and it should express, its approval or its disapproval of every single act of our Chief Executive in this Government.

Now I yield to my colleague from Texas [Mr. BLACK].

Mr. BLACK. I just came into the Chamber, and I first gathered the impression that the gentleman was taking the position that Congress had not already provided sufficient laws to deal with this particular situation.

Mr. BLANTON. I was just referring to the Connally resolution, but I will also mention the proposed emergency legislation I introduced in the House Tuesday and discussed yesterday, and also the fact that the distinguished gentleman from Texas, my colleague [Mr. BLACK], has offered a bill here which ought to be passed by the Congress, and it ought to be passed immediately, to meet present emergencies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. I wish to offer an amendment in line 11, page 73, to strike out after the word "act" the word "and" and insert "or."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania: Page 73, line 11, after the word "act," strike out the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof the word "or."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, my purpose in offering this amendment is that it is important to remember that the public-land States are generally very remote from pipe lines and from oil markets, generally in very sparsely settled communities, and the direct result is reflected in a relatively low price for crude oil. It is well known that pipe-line transportation for oil is very much cheaper than railroad transportation. Oil can be moved through a pipe line for 1,000 miles or more for about one-third the cost of railroad transportation for the same distance.

As an example, the State of Wyoming is approximately equal in distance from Chicago as parts of Oklahoma, which has pipe-line transportation both to the Gulf and to Whiting, Ind., in the vicinity of Chicago. The cost of the pipe-line transportation is approximately one-third of the railroad cost of transportation to the above points. The result has been that Oklahoma crude oil commands a price approximately as much higher as the cost of pipe-line transportation is less than that of railroad transportation. In this connection also it should be borne in mind that the price of crude oil for the past five years has been everywhere increasing. In Wyoming and California, the States principally concerned in this bill, the price has at least doubled, and in some instances trebled, and this has been true notwithstanding the fact that no large main pipe lines have been constructed to carry the oil from the Wyoming fields to a large central market.

With the passage of this bill, which is designed to open up for exploration and to promote and encourage the development of new oil fields, sufficient oil is expected to be developed to warrant the construction of trunk pipe lines from Wyoming to central markets where the refined product is now transported by expensive railroad haul. Should the Government be forced to auction off its oil on the present market, it would be deprived of the benefits of the rising oil market and be deprived of all the benefits that are certain to result from cheaper transportation. This loss in a few years would amount to millions of dollars.

The Secretary of the Interior has at his command all the information gathered by the Geological Survey, the Bureau of Mines, and the Federal Trade Commission, and is therefore in as equally good position, if not a better position, to judge as to the prospective value of oil and the times when to sell and make contract for the sale of the Government's royalty oil as any producer or purchaser of oil in the United States.

There is no law existing that obliges a producer to sell or any purchaser to buy oil at any time. They are both left equally free to take advantage of conditions and the market. It seems therefore that the Government, through the Secretary of the Interior, who represents the Government, should be in as equally favorable position as any other producer or as any purchaser in this respect in order to secure for the Government the advantages of changing conditions and increased facilities for the transportation and marketing of oil.

It is elementary in business to avoid a situation which compels forced sales. There is absolutely no reason why in a bill such as the one now pending, which clothes the Secretary with the broadest powers and the widest discretion in matters of much greater importance, such as fixing the rates of royalty and the important terms and conditions of practically all leases, that there should be a provision robbing him of discretion, making it mandatory upon him to sell the Government's portion of the oil resulting from any lease at the very moment of time that he makes the lease instead of waiting for an opportunity that would be favorable and advantageous to the Government.

This section was undoubtedly designed to provide a method that would enable the Government to dispose of the oil that is reserved by way of royalty from the production that will be had under the operation of the law, and in the most advantageous manner. However, a careful analysis of it would indicate that it is so drawn in this particular mandatory provision as to result in advantage to some prospective purchaser of oil rather than to the advantage of the Government in making the best sale possible of its oil.

It will therefore be seen that robbing the Secretary of discretion violates every business principle and is clearly against the interest of the United States.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. This amendment would really kill the purpose of this section. This section was inserted here mandatory in form so that the little independent refiners would have a chance to get hold of some of the royalty oil at public auction and at public sale. We have upon some of our Indian reservations a situation somewhat analogous to this. I know of scandals arising during past administrations, when it was claimed by people living in the neighborhood that the timber upon the reservation was withheld from public sale in the interest of large timber holders owning contiguous areas of timber. I do not know whether the charges were true or not. This provision, as I understand it, was inserted in the Senate bill at the request of Senator KENDRICK. I had a talk with him about the provision, and he is very much opposed to changing this language and making it discretionary. There is a large discretion resting in the Secretary. He may reserve the oil for the uses of the United States, and I think under that he has a broad, discretionary power. I hope the committee will not strike out the word "and" and insert "or."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Will the gentlemen yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Why should the Government favor the small refiner and increase the cost of the production to the consumer at the expense of the Federal Government?

Mr. SINNOTT. I think the Government should give the small refinery a chance to operate and to exist.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Suppose the man sells the royalty or the oil on the basis of a thousand-barrel well, and the well produces 5,000 barrels, and they put a pipe line in there, and he transports the oil for one-third the cost it was going to cost him when he bids on it. Should not the Government have the benefit of that?

Mr. SINNOTT. It will have the benefit of it.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Not if he sells it on the basis of rail transportation. He sells it at the time he grants the lease.

Mr. SINNOTT. Upon advertisement, on sealed bids, or at public auction.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMPBELL].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. BLACK: Page 74, line 6, after the word "at," strike out the language "not less than the market price," occurring on lines 6 and 7, and insert "a fair and reasonable price"; and on line 8, after the word "at," strike out the language "not less than the market price," and insert "a fair and reasonable price."

Mr. BLACK. Now, Mr. Chairman, under the provision of this bill, pending the making of a contract for the sale of the royalty by the Secretary of the Interior, he is authorized to sell the current product of these oil wells and gas wells, but he is limited to not less than the market price. Of course, ordinarily a fair and reasonable price would be synonymous with the market price. But times do come when the market price is unreasonably high. The time comes in periods of scarcity when some large concerns control the product subject to sale in such a way as to make the market price too high, and I submit that a restriction of this kind might prove harmful, at least in some instances.

We have heard a good deal of criticism of the oil monopolies and of the unreasonableness of the prices of their products, and I think that the Secretary of the Interior, if an occasion of that kind should arise and the market should be too high and he could assist the public in any way in lowering the market, ought to be permitted to sell at a price that he would regard as fair and reasonable, even though it should be materially lower than the market price.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Of course, there is nothing produced from these wells except crude oil. Does the gentleman think it would result in any reduction of the price of the product if this crude oil was sold to the Standard Oil Co. at less than the standard price?

Mr. BLACK. There would be a good deal in what the gentleman says if the Standard Oil Co. should be the only buyer; but, of course, it is not and there are other concerns that deal in oil besides the Standard Oil Co. I can see where conditions might arise where the Secretary of the Interior could benefit the public by having the ability to go out and sell these oil products at what he would term a fair and reasonable price, instead of the market price, and I believe it would be better language and give him a wider and more needful discretion.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to oppose this amendment. If it is necessary to assist the general public, that should be done out of the Treasury of the United States. Most of this royalty oil, 80 per cent, belongs to these Western States and to the reclamation fund under the terms of this bill, and you really would take the money away from them for the benefit of the people who are suffering from high prices. If that is to be done, that should be done by an appropriation out of the Treasury and not from the reclamation fund and from the States' share.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. BLACK. We hear a great deal of complaint about the unreasonableness of the prices of many commodities and a good deal of the complaint is justified. Now, does the gentleman think that if the Government holds a commodity such as oil collected in payment of a royalty which is ruling at an unreasonable price, the hands of an official of the Government ought to be tied so that he is bound to hold up the public for that unreasonable price?

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman's premises are wrong. The Government does not own this royalty oil. It owns a part of it, and the reclamation fund and the States own the remainder under the provisions of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. It comes in at the end of section 37. Section 37 has not been read.

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Chairman, an amendment was pending that ought to be withdrawn by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], to strike out section 36. It was a pro forma amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that was a pro forma amendment. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 37. That the deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, and gas, herein referred to, in lands valuable for such minerals and the lands containing such deposits, including lands and deposits described in joint resolution No. 38, approved August 1, 1912, shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at a date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated, which claims may be perfected under such laws, including discovery.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HERNANDEZ: Page 74, line 19, after the word "discovery," insert "Provided, That all persons having located or acquired claims are hereby required to file within six months after the passage of this act a true copy of the location notice thereof with the register and receiver of the United States land office for the district in which such claims or locations may be situated."

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Chairman, my purpose and intent in offering this amendment at this time is to give the present locator a chance to file with the register and receiver of the land office a copy of the location notice that they are required to post up on the land under existing law and thus avoid conflicting claims being made for the same land.

That is all that this amendment is proposed to do. This is, as the gentleman from Texas said, a very important measure. We have by this amendment and by this section protected the rights of the present locators. We are doing intensive prospecting out West for oil at the present time. The oil fever has spread all over that country.

We have immense deposits of coal in my State. Over 5,000,000 acres of coal lands are lying there awaiting development. They belong to the Government. We will not freeze to death. The women and children of this Nation will not freeze to death for the next 500 years for lack of coal, and if it need be done, if the half million miners walk out to-morrow from those mines we will walk in there and keep our women and children from freezing to death. [Applause.] That is one way of curing that situation.

The bill under consideration has had my approval and support both in the Committee on the Public Lands and in the House and will have my vote.

The State of New Mexico has within its 222,000 miles a good deal of area which we know contains coal. A good many enterprising men are now prospecting very extensively in the public domain, State lands, and privately owned lands for oil and gas. The prospects are very encouraging in some sections and we hope they will discover and develop good producing oil wells.

The amendment that I have offered to section 37 is intended to prevent conflicts and to keep the department informed as to all lands which have been located prior to the passage of this act, and thus preclude the possibility of leasing being given covering oil lands heretofore located and held under placer claim laws.

If these locations are to be recognized, and in all fairness they should be, they should also be accorded a definite, unequivocal standing, which will not be susceptible of any misunderstanding and lead to litigation. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ].

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum. I make a point of order to that effect. This matter is now approaching the culmination. We ought to have a quorum here now if we are expected to vote at the end of the debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and five Members present, a quorum. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. EVANS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. EVANS of Nevada: On page 74, line 10, strike out all of section 37 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 37. That the deposits of coal, phosphate, sodium, oil, oil shale, and gas herein referred to, in lands valuable for such minerals, shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except that bona fide claims existent at date of the passage of this act upon which no discovery has been made prior to the passage of this act, but which shall thereafter be maintained in compliance with the laws under which said claims were initiated, may be perfected under such laws, including discovery, provided such discovery be made within one year after the passage of this act: Provided further, That if no discovery be made upon such lands within the period of one year after the passage of this act, then and in that event the locators thereof or their assignees, heirs, or successors in interest shall have a preference right for the period of 30 days after the expiration of said period of one year within which to locate said lands under this act, in order to initiate a right to obtain a prospecting permit and lease hereunder."

Mr. BLANTON. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas reserves a point of order on the amendment. Does the gentleman from Nevada wish to be heard?

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane.

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will reserve that for a moment. The gentleman from Nevada has very urgent appeals from his State on this subject. I hope the gentleman from Texas will withhold his point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. I will withhold it.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I rise in support of my amendment to strike out section 37, which has been so ably amended by the distinguished Member from New Mexico [Mr. HERNANDEZ]. But my amendment goes further, seeking solely and absolutely to protect the newly acquired claims during recent months, made by citizens, great numbers of whom are returned soldiers, and Nevada recognizes their patriotic services, many of whom have been staked to locate and develop oil claims under the present law. It is my plain and certain purpose that such claims have full legal protection and valid recognition as the stated circumstances fully justify.

Mr. SINNOTT. I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the amendment is not germane to the substitute or to the subject matter of the bill.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I do not pose as a parliamentary authority, but it certainly seems to me that that amendment is in order. It provides that the man who has already made a location shall have one year for discovery, and if he fails to make a discovery within one year that his heirs and assigns may have a preferential right to lease the land. Now this is a leasing bill, and I can not see where the amendment contravenes any rule of germaneness whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on section 37 of this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. I make the same request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Mexico makes the same request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks on the Mexican situation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks on the Mexican situation. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I think that kind of a request should more properly come in the House than in Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has a perfect right to ask to extend his remarks. The Chair put the request, and the Chair heard no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I rose as soon as I could. That is a matter wholly extraneous to the subject matter under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs the gentleman's pardon. The question is closed. The Chair put the request, and there was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, on page 74, line 16, after the word "at" and before the word "date," I move to strike out the word "a," which ought not to be there.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. RAKER: Page 74, line 16, after the word "at," strike out the word "a."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think I should give a brief explanation of what the Committee on Public Lands understood by the language in section 37: "Valid claims existent at the date of the passage of this act." Some Members of the House have expressed to me solicitude concerning the status of locators on oil lands at the time of the passage of this act should it become a law, who have not made discovery. Prior to the Taft withdrawal of September 27, 1909, a valid claim was considered one where discovery had been made. But the "valid claim" referred to in section 37 does not require discovery. It is the "valid claim" referred to in the case of the Consolidated Oil Co. et al. against the United States, a decision of the circuit court of appeals of the ninth judicial district (245 Fed. 521), where the court, in rendering its decision, says:

It is insisted on behalf of the Government that exemptions from the effect of the order of the President therein provided for will not be properly held to apply to any land upon which at the time of its promulgation no mineral had been discovered, even though as in the present case the land had been located under and by virtue of the mining laws, its boundaries properly marked on the ground, and the assignees of the locators in the bona fide actual possession and actively engaged in seeking mineral therein.

The court goes on further:

A mining claim perfected under the law is property, in the highest sense of the term, which may be bought, sold, and conveyed, and will pass by descent. It is not, therefore, subject to the disposal of the Government. President Taft, who had himself been a distinguished Federal judge, of course, well knew this; and we think it altogether unreasonable to hold that the words employed by him in his order, "All locations or claims existing and valid on this date may proceed to entry in the usual manner after field investigation and examination," were intended or can be fairly construed to apply to lands upon which discoveries have already been made and to which its locators have already acquired an equitable title, but, on the contrary, that they were intended and should be held to apply to all locations and claims existing at the time of the making of the withdrawal order, to which the locators or claimants have some valid right.

In the consideration of the bills H. R. 3232 and S. 2812 before the Public Lands Committee of the House, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, Francis J. Kearful, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, representing the Attorney General in the hearings on said bill, on page 969, gave the following explanation of "a valid claim":

If you undertake to define what are valid rights existing under the present law—if you intended to express the intent which Mr. LENROOT thinks is expressed here—you could only quote from the Pickett Act or from the language of the Express Oil Co. case, which was the foundation of the Pickett Act, and which no court has ever disputed; that is, that one who is in the diligent prosecution of work leading to discovery, although he has made no discovery, has a valid claim in which he will be protected against any intrusion by any person, and so long as he continues in the diligent prosecution of that work he will be protected, and when he makes a discovery his location will be complete. There never was any reason from any quarter to doubt the soundness of that proposition.

Mr. Kearful further furnished the committee at said hearings with the following memorandum explaining the meaning of the term "valid claim." It is found on page 943 of the hearings:

THE WITHDRAWAL OF SEPTEMBER 27, 1909.

By Executive order of September 27, 1909, "in aid of proposed legislation," large areas of public land in California and Wyoming were "temporarily withdrawn from all forms of location, settlement, selection, filing, entry, or disposal under the mineral or nonmineral public-land laws." The order declared that "all locations or claims existing and valid on this date may proceed to entry in the usual manner after field investigation and examination."

In Consolidation Mutual Oil Co. v. United States (245 Fed., 521, 526), the Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit held that the exception from the Executive order of "all locations or claims existing or valid" was intended to save the rights of prospectors who, although they had made no discovery, were in bona fide actual possession and diligently engaged in the prosecution of discovery work. No reason is perceived to doubt the correctness of this ruling. The intention to save rights which would otherwise be cut off is manifest, and as those who had made discoveries had rights which could not be divested, the rights intended to be saved must have been those inchoate rights existing before discovery which the law then recognized as entitled to protection; that is, rights founded upon actual bona fide possession accompanied by the diligent prosecution of discovery work.

(See also United States v. McCutchen, 234 Fed., 702, 711; United States v. Stockton Midway Oil Co., 240 Fed., 1006, 1009; United States v. Thirty-two Oil Co., 242 Fed., 730, 734.)

Mr. Kearful's statement and citations were in reference to section 31 of the House bill found on page 22 of the hearings, which was as follows:

SEC. 31. That the deposits of coal, phosphate, oil, and gas herein referred to in lands valuable for such minerals shall be subject to disposition only in the form and manner provided in this act, except as to valid claims existent at date of the passage of this act and thereafter maintained in compliance with the laws under which initiated, which claims may be perfected under such laws.

From these citations and the statement of Mr. Kearful it is apparent that the phrase "valid claims" referred to in section 37 do not contemplate a claim whereon discovery is made.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 38. That the United States shall have the preferential right to obtain, extract, and remove helium from all lands permitted, leased, or otherwise granted under the provisions of this act, and from gas or oil or from gas and oil, or other products found within such deposits, or under lands containing the same, under such rules and regulations as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon offers a committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add a new section to the bill as follows:

"SEC. 39. That until otherwise provided the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to prescribe fees and commissions to be paid to registers and receivers of the United States land offices on account of business transacted under the provisions of this act."

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask the Clerk to read a letter which I have received from the Department of the Interior, requesting this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, October 27, 1919.

Hon. N. J. SINNOTT,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SINNOTT: In our consideration of the leasing bill we forgot to give any consideration to the suggestion made by Secretary Lane on page 11 of his report to you on S. 560, August 5, 1919, that a new section be added to the bill, as follows:

"That until otherwise provided, the Secretary of the Interior shall be authorized to prescribe fees and commissions to be paid registers and receivers of United States land offices on account of business transacted under the provisions of this act."

The bill makes no provision for compensation of local land officers, although the law would entail an immense amount of work upon them. It is believed that some provision should be made along the line suggested, at least until Congress shall have had time to give the entire question of salaries, fees, and commissions of registers and receivers further consideration.

In many cases registers and receivers now complain that their fees and commissions fall so far below the maximum of $3,000, which they are allowed under the law, that they can not get a decent living out of their positions.

The bill will make an immense amount of work for them, but makes absolutely no provision for paying them for that work. Commissioner Tallman is exceedingly anxious that some such provision may be made, and we thought possibly you could see your way clear to introduce it as an amendment to the bill on the floor of the House.

Very truly, yours,

E. C. FINNEY,
Member Board of Appeals.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of calling attention to section 38. I am going to offer no amendment to it. I shall not suggest that it be stricken out, but I think it is a curious illustration of the hysteria which sometimes takes possession of Congress in connection with legislation. A great many years ago we made life a burden to many good people along the southeastern coast by our absurd laws and regulations relative to the live oak. We were so fearful that our Navy would run short of live oak that for a time we had a large portion of the population of Florida and the Carolinas in jail from time to time for interfering in one way and another with the live oak of that region. We had some such experience with regard to naval stores, turpentine, and so forth. We became so hysterical about those matters that we went to the extreme of overprotection. Just now there is some hysteria about helium. Helium is a noninflammable gas that is useful for dirigible balloons, and, of course, a certain amount of helium gas is necessary and important, but it is perfectly absurd to reserve the helium gas in all of the lands which would be affected by this bill and in all of the products of all of the lands affected by this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. The only difficulty about the matter is this: That some very active employee of the department, possessed with the idea that this is the most important thing in all the world, may some day, when no one is looking, put a regulation in leases or a provision in the regulations for the administration of this act which will be very trying to many operators. Of course, in time we will correct and outgrow it. After attention has been called to the absurdity of these things and a great many men have been annoyed or injured, we will remedy the matter, and so eventually get from under the effect of the hysteria that suggests putting such a provision in legislation. If I were a member of the committee just at this time, I think perhaps I would agree to this same provision, but I would not do it with the idea that it is necessary, and I doubt if the committee has.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I think the committee feels very much the same as the gentleman from Wyoming, but let me call attention to the fact——

Mr. MONDELL. I shall not ask to have it stricken out, because there are some good people who think it ought to be in. Let us hope it will be harmless.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The gentleman overlooked the hysteria that went over the country about radium a few years ago. They came up here pell-mell and wanted us to withdraw all of the United States for radium, and now they have forgotten all about it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment, to strike out all after the word "that," in the substitute, and add the following as an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. ELSTON. What substitute?

Mr. RAKER. That which is from the beginning to the end of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. It is not germane to the substitute and it is not germane to the subject matter.

The CHAIRMAN. How can the gentleman tell?

Mr. BLANTON. Because it is the Senate bill which the gentleman is offering.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman does not know.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, I am a mind reader.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to argue the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair suggests that the gentleman wait until we find out whether the amendment is subject to the point of order.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman has stated what it is.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman care to state what it is, without having it read?

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the amendment has to be reported before there can be any criticism of it. I ask that it be reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment, and then we will decide.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, let us do this. Let us consider the amendment read, and then I will state in a very few words just what it is.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. RAKER. I will state to the House, to save time, what it is, if I may be permitted to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 38, line 11, strike out all of the remainder of the bill, after the word "That," and insert——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Is it proper, where a point of order has been made against the matter, for the time of the committee to be taken up in reading 40 pages of a document which is offered as an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order that the matter which the gentleman from California is offering here consists of numerous pages of printed matter which has already been considered by the committee, and the substance of which this Chair has ruled out of order upon a point of order previously made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not decide the point of order on a matter that he knows nothing about.

Mr. BLANTON. Can not the matter be considered by unanimous consent, as the gentleman from California suggests?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from California be permitted to state the substance of his amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I will not agree to that. I want my amendment to be considered as read, to go into the RECORD, and then I will state the difference, and then the Chair may hear it, if he desires to, on the point of order and decide whether it is well taken.

Mr. PARRISH. I reserve all points of order on it.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. The rule brought in by the Committee on Rules and adopted by the House made in order for the consideration of this committee certain legislation only, which is in the nature of a substitute. The measure which the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] offers as an amendment is the very matter which is not in order under the rule brought in here and adopted by the House. I submit to the Chair that the matter which the gentleman offers here as an amendment, which clearly heretofore has been ruled out of order by the Chairman, should be considered by the Chair upon the point of order, without taking up the time of the committee to read 30 pages, and the Chair should decide whether or not it is in order under the rule which the House has adopted.

Mr. TILSON. Will the Chair hear me?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, if objection is made, it seems to me that under the rules of the House the amendment will have to be read until a point in the amendment is reached which discloses the fact that the amendment is out of order. When that stage has been reached, it seems to me that then the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas should be sustained, but until a point has been reached in the reading of the amendment indicating that it is subject to the point of order the gentleman's point of order does not lie.

Mr. BLANTON. And in the meantime he would have to read 30 pages before reaching that point.

The CHAIRMAN. Let the Chair state this question. Now, it is manifest that any point of order against this amendment can not be given consideration by the Chair until the Chair knows what is contained in the amendment, and unless the committee wishes the amendment read or gives its consent to agree upon a state of facts which might be contained in the amendment, and thus enable the committee to determine the question of its admissibility and germaneness, why, the Clerk will read the amendment.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this proceeding be followed: That the objection be considered as pending, and that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman yield to me just for a question?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I shall object to that proceeding, so it is not necessary to take up that time.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask it for the purpose of interrogating the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. An interrogation; just a moment.

Mr. SINNOTT. I have the time.

Mr. RAKER. All right; I yield.

Mr. SINNOTT. I understand that the substitute of the gentleman contains sections 40 and 41 of the Senate bill. That is true, is it not?

Mr. RAKER. With respect to answering or not answering, I have stated that I will ask unanimous consent to have the amendment considered as read and printed in the RECORD, and I will make a statement in two minutes to the committee——

Mr. SINNOTT. Well——

Mr. RAKER. Now, I am going to have the amendment read if——

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman answer my question?

Mr. RAKER. I have not any time.

Mr. SINNOTT. Well, I will yield the gentleman time to answer my question yes or no.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, well, you can not do that on me. In response to the gentleman's question I ask unanimous consent that the point of order be considered as pending, that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD, and then I will state to the House identically what is in the bill so there will be no question, and the Chair can pass on it. Now, is not that fair?

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman will state it in two minutes?

Mr. RAKER. I can state it in less than two minutes.

Mr. SINNOTT. I have no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the following procedure——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the amendment of the gentleman contains, as the gentleman knows it contains, although he has refused to say so——

Mr. RAKER. I have not refused anything.

Mr. MONDELL. Two provisions offered as amendments to this bill and ruled out on the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. They are the Harris amendments.

Mr. MONDELL. And the gentleman refused to answer the chairman of the committee——

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. MONDELL. He refused to answer a fair question——

Mr. RAKER. No.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. MONDELL. As to what is contained in his amendment, and he can not expect any privileges or any unanimous consents on the part of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that sections 40 and 41 of the amendment be read now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Now, Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I will consent to that with the statement that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HASTINGS. I object to that, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

Mr. RAKER. I object on the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a new point of order. I submit this to the Chair: If the Chair will consider subdivisions 40 and 41 of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California, he himself will readily see that they are questions upon which he has already passed upon points of order and which points of order he has already sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the statement of the gentleman from Texas does the Chair too much credit. The Chair is no mind reader——

Mr. BLANTON. But if he will read 40 and 41——

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). To enable him to pass upon the question; but the Chair will pass upon the question very promptly when it is submitted to him in a proper way.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, is the amendment of the gentleman from California in order when it contains a section which has already been submitted to the committee and under the ruling of the Chairman of the committee has gone out on a point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair desires to ask the gentleman from Texas this question: How does the gentleman from Texas know that the amendment contains these subdivisions? The Chair does not know.

Mr. BLANTON. Because he has been keeping up with the proceedings.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, may I suggest that the Chair has a perfect right to read that amendment? If he reads the amendment, he will discover that it shows that sections 40 and 41 have been ruled out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the Chair will read the section. [Laughter.]

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I make a suggestion to the Chair?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the regular order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I desire to make a suggestion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that sections 40 and 41 be read.

Mr. RAKER. I object to that.

Mr. ANDERSON. I make the point of order that the motion is not in order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I suggest to the Chair that it is the privilege of the Chair when an amendment is offered to take the amendment from the Clerk and examine it, and decide whether or not it is subject to the point of order made.

Mr. ANDERSON. The committee has a right to know what the Chair is passing on, and it can not know unless the Chair reads the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will assume the responsibility of reading to the committee one of the amendments of the two suggested by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER].

Section 40 of the amendment that he proposes reads:

> No stockholder of any corporation or any association engaged in commerce and producing or refining petroleum, or any of the by-products thereof, shall acquire or control, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of any other corporation or association so engaged, when both of such corporations or associations have been created or formed in compliance with a decree or judgment of dissolution issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, or in avoidance of a prosecution previously initiated under the provisions of this act or the antitrust laws. Any person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 and by imprisonment for not less than six months.

Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Just a moment. Let the Chair have a minute. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] makes the point of order against the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], and the Chair having disclosed by the reading of section 40 of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California——

Mr. RAKER. Just a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Just let the Chair make this statement.

Mr. RAKER. Before you rule on that——

The CHAIRMAN. Just let the Chair make a statement. The Chair having disclosed that section 40 of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California is contrary to the spirit of the provisions of the bill, and seeks to prevent the acquisition of stock in a corporation by individuals or stockholders of another corporation, and provides for punishment under certain circumstances, and indicates by the provisions of the section that it has no relation whatever to the provisions of the bill, wishes to say that the former Speaker of the House, Mr. Speaker CLARK, on December 5, 1912, having ruled upon a question on all fours with this, on a point of order made to a bill providing for the physical valuation of railroads, when a provision dealing with the future issuance of stocks and bonds was pending, and held the amendment not to be germane, and held the point of order made against it as good, and sustained it, so the Chair under the present circumstances feels constrained to rule that the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], offered at this stage of the bill, covering cases already having been passed upon during the consideration of the bill, is out of order, and the point of order is sustained.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

In the course of the debate frequent suggestions have been made that these lands belong to the thirteen original States and that the thirteen original States really have a right to call for this money to be turned over to them. Here is the statement of indebtedness of various States of the Union of certain amounts deposited with them as loans under the act of June 23, 1836:

Maine, $955,838.25.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the argument. It is not germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska will proceed in order.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to show by the citation of these figures the indebtedness of the various States of the Union and the rights of the other States of the Union to share in the provisions of this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the indebtedness of Maine and other States has nothing whatever to do with this bill.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Oh, I am not coming to Texas yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. I think we have got other business before the committee.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, the total amount involved in this bill for leasing relates to the reclamation fund in such a way as to suggest the importance of maintaining that fund at its maximum. I am sure that in the progress of the years the States of the South, needing drainage instead of irrigation, will find under this reclamation fund a great opportunity for their people. With this fund revolving from year to year, when Delaware shall have paid its $286,751 and interest for 83 years, we will have that much more to count upon in this general fund, and that with the indebtedness of all these States of $28,101,000, with interest for 83 years, we will have the Treasury in much better shape.

Many millions of acres of public lands have been withheld from entry for an extended period of years.

This policy has prevented the development of a large portion of the territory in Western States. Under the terms of this bill it is proposed to lease those lands upon conditions that will induce the investment of capital; yield financial returns to the National Treasury for the expansion of the reclamation fund. These policies will benefit not only the communities in which the lands will be improved, but also large sections of arid lands.

It is very important that the Federal Government should conserve all the rights and resources it now holds in these public lands and at the same time provide for their development with such financial returns as will aid greatly in the improvement of these portions of the country.

A brief visit to farms under successful irrigation will readily convince anyone as to the practical value of this policy.

It is necessary that strict reservations should be made under which the sections of the country will be in absolute control of the Government in the leasing of these lands and the general conduct of the business. Effective protection should be embodied in the law against the acquisition or independent control of such lands by corporations. The terms of this bill seek to accomplish that result, and it is earnestly hoped that there will be no disappointment in this particular.

In the course of the debate and in private conversation it is frequently intimated and even asserted that these public lands rightfully belong to the thirteen original States.

I quote the following from the record of the Treasury Department in relation to the deposits with various States under the act of June 23, 1836:

Maine	$955,838.25
New Hampshire	669,086.79
Massachusetts	1,338,173.58
Vermont	669,086.79
Connecticut	764,670.60
Rhode Island	382,335.30
New York	4,014,520.71
New Jersey	764,670.60
Pennsylvania	2,867,514.78
Delaware	286,751.49
Maryland	955,838.25
Virginia	2,198,427.99
North Carolina	1,433,757.39
South Carolina	1,051,422.69
Georgia	1,051,422.69
Alabama	669,086.79
Louisiana	477,919.14
Mississippi	382,335.30
Tennessee	1,433,757.39
Kentucky	1,433,757.39
Ohio	2,007,260.34
Missouri	382,335.30
Indiana	860,254.44
Illinois	477,919.14
Michigan	286,751.49
Arkansas	286,751.49
Total	28,101,644.91

Section 13 of that act reads as follows:

SEC. 13. And be it further enacted, That the money which shall be in the Treasury of the United States, on the 1st day of January, 1837, reserving the sum of $5,000,000, shall be deposited with such of the several States in proportion to their respective representation in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, as shall, by law, authorize their treasurers, or other competent authorities to receive the same on the terms hereinafter specified; and the Secretary of the Treasury shall deliver the same to such treasurers or other competent authorities, on receiving certificates of deposits therefor, signed by such competent authorities, in such form as may be prescribed by the Secretary aforesaid, which certificates shall express the usual and legal obligations, and pledge the faith of the State, for the safe-keeping and repayment thereof, and shall pledge the faith of the States receiving the same, to pay the said moneys, and every part thereof, from time to time, whenever the same shall be required, by the Secretary of the Treasurer, for the purpose of defraying any wants of the Public Treasury, beyond the amount of the five millions aforesaid: Provided, That if any State declines to receive its proportion of the surplus aforesaid, on the terms before named, the same shall be deposited with the other States agreeing to accept the same on deposit in the proportion aforesaid: And provided further, That when said money, or any part thereof, shall be wanted by the said Secretary, to meet appropriations by law, the same shall be called for, in rateable proportions, within one year, as nearly as conveniently may be, from the different States, with which the same is deposited, and shall not be called for, in sums exceeding $10,000, from any one State, in any one month, without previous notice of 30 days, for every additional sum of $20,000, which may at any time be required. (5 Stat., 55.)

The terms of said section required the certificates of deposit to "express the usual and legal obligations" and pledge the faith of the States, "for the safe-keeping and repayment" of the money to the National Treasury. They have faithfully observed their pledge as to the "safe-keeping" of their deposits and still retain them.

Said section authorized the Secretary of the Treasury to recall the funds "in ratable proportions" to meet the needs of the department. This authority, however, was rescinded by an act approved October 2, 1837, which contained the following:

Be it enacted, etc., That the transfer of the fourth installment of deposits directed to be made with the States under the thirteenth section of the act of June 23, 1836, be, and the same is hereby, postponed till the 1st day of January, 1839: Provided, That the three first installments under the said act shall remain on deposit with the States until otherwise directed by Congress. (5 Stat., p. 201.)

As it has not yet been "otherwise directed by Congress," those deposits still remain in the possession of the States, as shown by the foregoing statement.

It will be observed from section 13 of that act that the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized and directed to withdraw said deposits "in ratable proportions" whenever said money or any part thereof was needed to defray the expenses of the Government. It will also be observed that the act of October 2, 1837, suspended the exercise of that authority and directed that the three installments that had been made under the act of June 23, 1836, should remain on deposit with the States until otherwise directed by Congress. Up to this date Congress has not otherwise directed. For a period of 70 years and more those loans were carried in the quarterly accounts of the Treasurer of the United States as though the cash was in the National Treasury. In 1907 Congress was requested to enact legislation that would either cancel the indebtedness, call for immediate payment or transfer the charges from the Treasurer's cash account to the ledgers of the department. At a later date Congress directed the transfer of the charges, and accordingly each State now stands upon the ledgers of the department as a debtor to the General Government for the amount of the original loan.

Interest has not yet been computed or entered as a charge upon the books of the department against the States.

If interest should be computed upon the total amount, $28,101,644.91, at 4 per cent, the principal and interest to date would approximate $121,000,000. If this amount should be recovered and added to this reclamation fund or used in defraying the general expenses of the Government it would surely bring a few moments of consolation to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and also to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, as well as other Members of the House, unless it should be those who come from the States that owe the debts.

A concurrent or joint resolution may be sufficient under the terms of the act of October 2, 1837, to carry into effect the direction of Congress for the return of the money.

Perhaps a joint resolution in substantially the following form would answer the purpose:

Whereas the States named above are indebted to the Federal Government for the respective amounts set opposite their names; and
Whereas the Federal Treasury is now in urgent need of unusually large receipts to meet current expenses and liquidate unpaid obligations resulting from the recent war; and
Whereas such deposits are to remain with said States under existing law until otherwise directed by Congress: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That such States be, and hereby are, requested and directed to return said deposits to the National Treasury, with interest at 4 per cent from date of deposit.

Resolved further, That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to withdraw said deposits from said States in accordance with the terms of section 13 of the act of June 23, 1836, under which they were made.

Mr. Chairman, this is evidently an opportune time for the withdrawal of these funds. When is our National Treasury likely to be in greater need of the money than now? It has surely been lenient with the States that have had the use of this money for 83 years. The rate of interest—4 per cent, as suggested—is very reasonable. It is probable that the States holding the loans could not have secured the funds from other sources at a lower rate of interest.

Of course, the Members of this House from the States that have not shared in these loans do not desire to press undue embarrassment upon the Members representing the States that have received them. It would perhaps be wise to grant a brief period of time for reflection upon this matter in the hope that the States will voluntarily return the money notwithstanding the existing provision of law. If so, the whole matter could be adjusted without embarrassment. The only inconvenience suggested by existing conditions appears in the comparison of the membership of the House and Senate from the debtor States with those from the other States. There are 26 debtor States, having 52 Senators and 314 Members of the House.

At first glance this may seem to be an insuperable difficulty in securing an order for the return of the money. But when we recall the fact that those Senators and Members are very anxious to liquidate the indebtedness of their respective States to the Federal Government in this time of stress, we should proceed upon the belief that there will be a general rush for the Federal counter to return those deposits, principal and interest, approximating $121,000,000.

Let us hope that this happy consummation will be fully realized at an early date.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman's remarks are not germane.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I am coming to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Nebraska has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON:

"SEC. 4. That no stockholder of any corporation or any association engaged in producing or refining petroleum or any of the by-products thereof, for sale in interstate commerce, produced from land leased under this act shall acquire or control, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of any other corporation or association so engaged, when both of such corporations or associations have been created or formed in compliance with a decree or judgment of dissolution issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, or in avoidance of a prosecution previously initiated under the provisions of this act or the antitrust laws. Any persons who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 and by imprisonment for not less than six months."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment, on the ground that it is not germane either to the substitute or to the subject under consideration.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that the amendment is not germane either to the substitute or to the subject under consideration.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, the Chair has just ruled out of order an amendment which proposes to amend the antitrust law. The Chair was clearly correct in ruling that amendment out of order, because it introduced a new subject, and it dealt with articles which were not produced upon lands leased under this act. But the amendment which I have offered is confined to regulation of the sale of products produced from lands leased under this act.

Now, there are many provisions in this act dealing with the sale and disposition of the products of lands leased under the bill, and there are many provisions in this act which deal with the relations of stockholders in corporations organized for the purpose of mining the products or dealing in the products of lands leased under this act. May I call the attention of the Chair, for instance, to section 27 of the act, which prohibits any person, association, or corporation from holding any more than one coal, phosphate, or sodium lease? It prohibits any corporation from holding more than three oil or gas leases granted hereunder in any one State and more than one lease within the geological structure of the same producing oil or gas field. It prohibits any person or corporation from taking or holding any interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions of this act where both holdings are in excess of the permitted acreage. In another section there are provisions against the creation of a monopoly of the use or sale of the products of the lands leased under this act.

I direct the Chair's attention again to the fact that this amendment is expressly limited to corporations or associations engaged in producing or refining petroleum or by-products thereof produced from lands leased under this act. It does not deal with any production or the production of any land except the production and the lands specifically dealt with in this act. For that reason it seems to me the amendment is clearly germane to the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the further point of order that the amendment is not germane to the section immediately preceding the amendment. And in that connection I call the Chair's attention to the ruling made by the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] in holding that an amendment offered as a new section is nevertheless a part of the preceding section and must be germane to it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I wish, Mr. Chairman, to direct the attention of the Chair to the fact that I made exactly the same point of order a few days ago that the gentleman from Texas is now making, and that I at that time called the attention of the Chair to the decision to which the gentleman has now referred. In the determination of that point of order the Chair ruled that an amendment offered as a new section need not be germane to the preceding section if it were germane to the bill as a whole.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, one test of germaneness is this: Would the Committee on the Public Lands have jurisdiction over a bill which embodies the proposition submitted in this amendment? If this amendment were incorporated in a bill and dropped into the basket, it certainly would not be sent to the Committee on the Public Lands. It would be sent to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On that point I wish to cite Hinds' Precedents, volume 5, on page 472, where Mr. MANN of Illinois made a point of order upon a substitute on the ground of its germaneness. The Chair stated that the raising of a point of order necessarily throws upon the Chair the responsibility of deciding it. As the Chair stated in ruling on the point of order, one test of the germaneness of an amendment that can always be made is this:

Could the subject embraced in the amendment, if offered as an independent bill in the House, be referred to the committee which had reported the bill under consideration?

The most cursory reading of the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] discloses the fact that were it dropped into the basket as an independent bill the same would be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is constrained to rule that the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] goes outside of the provisions of the bill under consideration, inasmuch as it deals with the ownership of stocks of individuals and corporations and provides punishment for those who, under stated conditions, may acquire such stocks and control of such stocks, either directly or indirectly. The Chair thinks on that account it is not germane either to the bill itself or to the section of the bill which it seeks to follow. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my amendment be read.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, before leaving this section of the bill which relates to helium, I would like to add just a word to what the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has said. He suggested that the restrictions contained in this bill were perhaps unnecessary, and might have to be relaxed later. As to that, I do not know, but I should not like to have this subject passed without just a word as to the importance of helium gas.

As we all know, observation balloons are a very important part of the paraphernalia of war. If one had gone along the western battle front in Europe during the war he would have seen a succession of sausage-like objects suspended in the air. They were observation balloons, from which information of great value was obtained. The chief danger in using these—and there was always very great danger—was the fact that they contained highly inflammable gas. In the development of ammunition during the war the incendiary bullet was brought to such a state of perfection that if a single bullet could be made to pass through the wall of the container—and it was a very large target—it would set on fire the gas within. Even if the observer jumped from the basket, the balloon would burn and crumple up so suddenly and fall so rapidly that it would overtake the parachute upon which the observer was descending, and kill him before he reached the ground.

The properties of helium gas have been known for some time, but it was so expensive of production that it was not thought possible to secure enough to make it practicable for balloons. During the war there was a great advancement in the development of helium gas, and before the armistice was signed we had reached a stage where it was being produced at a comparatively reasonable figure. It was well within the bounds of hope that if the war had gone on we should have been able to use helium gas very extensively for observation balloons. Its use would have rendered it comparatively safe to move these lofty outlooks to points much nearer to the enemy's lines. Its use for dirigibles has already been suggested, and as time goes on if we can produce, cheaply and commercially, a gas that is noninflammable, it would be of the very greatest importance in aerial navigation. [Applause.]

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment as a new section 41.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON:

"SEC. 41. That no stockholder of any corporation or any association engaged in producing or refining oil produced from land leased under this section shall acquire or control, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of any other corporation or association so engaged, when both of such corporations or associations have been created or formed in compliance with a decree or judgment of dissolution issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, or in avoidance of a prosecution previously initiated under the provisions of this act or the antitrust laws. Any person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 and by imprisonment for not less than six months."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order; first, that the amendment is not germane to the substitute or the subject; second, that it is not germane to the section immediately preceding it; and, third, that this identical question has been passed on by the Chairman adversely to the gentleman who offers the amendment, and that it has been held subject to the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to argue either the second or the third proposition presented by the gentleman from Texas, because neither one of them has any basis whatever.

I simply want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this amendment is limited, and relates only to oil produced on the land leased under the provisions of this act. I will not argue that the Chair was in error in the previous ruling, because the Chair may have been of the opinion that the inclusion of the by-products of petroleum in the prior amendment introduced into this question an entirely new element not germane to the provisions of the bill, which relate alone to oil produced from land leased under the act. In order to bring this amendment within the rule of germaneness, and to make it perfectly clear that it does not introduce any new subject not contemplated by the bill, I have confined the amendment to include only oil or corporations producing or refining oil produced upon land leased under this act. There are many provisions in the act with reference to the oil from the lands leased under the act which go far beyond this provision. This amendment simply puts onto the bill another condition with respect to the oil itself, dealt with in this bill, produced upon lands leased under the bill. It is clearly within the rule of germaneness.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the point of order, for the reason that the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota is practically, in substance, the same as the amendment which I now have at the desk.

In order to determine the germaneness of this amendment I think we ought to inquire, first of all, just what this bill does. It proposes to open up to our citizenship the boundless wealth of the West, concealed in Government-owned land, and to permit the leasing of certain tracts thereof for mining and oil discovery and exploitation.

The bill prescribes certain limitations as to the quality of land to be leased, the character of the persons, individual and corporate, to whom leases shall be granted, the terms of the leases as to time, royalty, and many other incidentals.

This amendment proposes one more condition; one more limitation upon the granting of leases. It comes under the above-mentioned category of "character of persons, individual and corporate, to whom leases shall be given."

It prescribes, in substance, that no stockholder of any corporations or associations engaged in exploiting the leased land shall acquire or control the whole or any part of the stock of any other corporation engaged in the same business, when both of said corporations have been created pursuant to a decree of the court or in avoidance of a prosecution under the antitrust laws.

There is no use in mincing words over this proposal. It is manifestly aimed at the great industrial serpent whose body has been divided, but whose vigor, venom, and menace have not been diminished or mitigated by prosecution under the antitrust laws.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. But I make a point of order, which, as I understand it, takes him off the floor. I make the point of order that there is no criminal provision in the substitute bill, and there are criminal provisions in the amendment offered, which would clearly not be germane to the substitute.

Mr. GRIFFIN. We may very well take judicial notice of its existence, just as we take notice that oil and gas and coal are in the ground to be leased and that there are persons standing ready to take the leases. So may we assume that among those most ready to grasp the prize, when this act lets down the barriers, are those separated but still active, and kindred units which our antimonopoly laws have vainly striven in the past to eliminate.

Mr. BLANTON interrupts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from New York, and wishes to hear what he has to say.

Mr. GRIFFIN. We may assume, I say, that those who will stand ready to grasp these lands and leases as soon as the barriers are thrown down will be the component parts of this Standard Oil Trust.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Pardon me. I have not really come to the point. So far I have only indicated what the amendment is aimed at. As to the parliamentary phase of the matter, the proposed amendment will not prevent any one of those units from taking a lease, but it is aimed—and properly aimed—to prevent each individual unit or subsidiary of the parent corporation in each of the 48 States from taking 48 leases in each of the States where oil may be struck.

The provision therefore is in the nature of a limitation to protect the individual citizen in each State, and in effect provides that the plain, average citizen of moderate wealth shall not be shut out in the competition for desirable lands, as surely he would be if this very moderate and sane safeguard is not embodied in the bill.

This is a very fair proposal, and is strictly germane to the bill. The Senate provision—No. 40—of the Senate bill undertook to amend the antitrust law, and its substance was so broad in its scope as to take in the whole field of commerce—see line 16, page 36, of the bill—and was not limited, as my proposed amendment is limited, only to those engaged in operating the lands to be leased under this act.

I think, Mr. Chairman, you will see that there is a distinction; and if you propose to found your ruling upon the decision of ex-Speaker CLARK, which you quoted, I beg with all deference to say that it has no relevancy to the present case, because this amendment is specifically confined only to the further regulation and control of matters which are already regulated and controlled to some extent in this bill. The Raker amendment embodied the idea of general application to commerce generally. This amendment is confined strictly to a limitation of the powers of the lessee under this act. The first Anderson amendment was objected to on the ground that it provided a penalty. In the present amendment the object is confined wholly to the terms on which a lessee may hold the lands leased under this act. The penalty is struck out, and nothing remains of it but what is wholly germane to the subject and scope of the bill.

The rule, as embodied in the precedents, is that any amendment is germane if it falls within the class of propositions to which the bill relates; in other words, its subject matter. Now, what is the subject matter of this bill? Why, the opening up of Government coal, oil, and other classes of land for exploitation by the granting of leases. If the bill proposed to limit that object by only one regulation there might be some doubt of the germaneness of the further regulation embodied in the proposed amendment. But we find, on the contrary, that in this bill numerous safeguards are thrown around the granting of leases. We find that the bill limits the size of the plots to be leased, the royalty to be paid as rent, and the periods and renewals of the leases. Further, in section 27 we find an attempt made to limit the number of leases which may be held by one person or corporation. It permits one person, association, or corporation to hold three oil or gas leases in one State; but it does not prevent one corporation from holding three leases for oil or gas in every State where the public lands are thrown open. Every one of the subsidiary branches of the Standard Oil, or any other oil combination, can therefore hold three leases in each of such States. Furthermore, individual stockholders of such corporations can also preempt and control three leases in each of such States. Surely it does not require much vision to see what is likely to happen. And can it be pretended, or honestly contended, that an amendment, such as this before us, which prohibits such community of stockholding is so far remote from the subject matter as not to be germane to the bill itself? Such a contention is so finely drawn I confess I can not see the line of demarcation.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to argue the merits of this proposition or the point of order. I merely desire to propound this inquiry to the Chair: Is it ever in order on a bill which has no criminal sections in it to offer a section which is criminal in its nature? Does not that of itself introduce a new matter? And would the Committee on the Public Lands have jurisdiction originally in such a matter as this?

What I desire is for the Chair to rule on the question, Is it ever in order as a germane amendment to introduce a criminal section in a bill which has no criminal section in it?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is fair to state that he believes that if the matter contained in this amendment were in a separate bill it would go to the Committee on the Judiciary for consideration. The pending bill does not provide for the punishment of individuals for violating antitrust laws, and the introduction of an amendment covering that subject, as in the present instance, is not considered by the Chair to be germane to the bill, and therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Mr. GRIFFIN. May I ask, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment I have at the desk may be read, to show the relation that it bears to what has been offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will have an opportunity to offer his amendment later.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ANDERSON as a new section:

"SEC. 41. That no stockholder of any corporation or any association engaged in producing or refining oil produced from land leased under this section shall acquire or control, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of any other corporation or association so engaged, when both of such corporations or associations have been created or formed in compliance with a decree or judgment of dissolution issued by a court of competent jurisdiction or in avoidance of a prosecution previously initiated under the provisions of this act or the antitrust laws."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment that it is not germane to the substitute bill brought in by the Rules Committee or to the subject of that bill; and, secondly, that this amendment is a matter dealing with stock companies and corporate stocks, upon which the Chair has already ruled and held out of order in previous amendments. Thirdly, that it is not germane to the section immediately preceding this section, of which preceding section this amendment is evidently a part.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know what was in the Chair's mind in ruling on the last amendment. It may be, however, that the Chair had in mind a proposition such as was stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH]—that is, that inasmuch as there was no criminal provision in the bill, the amendment previously offered introduced a new element into the bill which was not germane to the general provisions in providing a penalty, and so forth, for the violation of the section. I have offered the same amendment leaving off the provisions for criminal penalties.

The amendment, therefore, falls within the general line of the bill, particularly in section 27, prohibiting such ownership or holding of stock as would result in the collusion and consequent lack of competition between the various subsidiaries of the corporation any one or two of which might have a lease under this act. It appears to me, in view of the general provisions of section 27, many of which deal directly with the ownership and control of stock in corporations producing or dealing in oil produced from land leased under this act, that the amendment I have just offered makes no provision which is outside of the purview of the general provisions of the bill. Therefore whatever may have been the situation with respect to amendments I have previously offered, if there was anything in those amendments which was not germane to the bill, there is nothing in this amendment which is in any way outside of its general provisions. On the contrary, these provisions may very well have been carried in section 27.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, this would clearly go to the Judiciary Committee if it was in a separate bill and dropped in the basket.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, section 27 of the present bill deals with the number of leases that a corporation may hold under the provisions of this act. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota as a new section deals with an entirely different subject. It deals with a proper amendment to the antitrust laws or the Clayton Act. But in no sense is the amendment germane to any of the provisions in section 27, or any other section of this bill. Clearly, if this amendment was introduced, as the Chair suggested a moment ago, as a bill, it would be sent to the Judiciary Committee, rather than to the Committee on Public Lands; whereas if any germane amendment to section 27, which deals with leases on the public domain to one or more companies and to stockholders of one or more companies, were introduced as a separate bill it would be sent to the Committee on Public Lands. So that clearly the point of order comes within decisions that have already been made by the Chair.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], I think, has overlooked some of the provisions of section 27. The last part of section 27 applies to acts which are in restraint of trade, applies to acts which to a certain extent come under the Sherman Act and governs leases accordingly. This provision which is offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] is merely a further extension of the provisions contained in the latter part of section 27.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This is not offered as an amendment to section 27. We have passed that and the committee has approved it. This is offered as an amendment to section 39, and is offered in the state of a new section, section 40; but undoubtedly it is a part of section 39.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It is offered as a separate section.

Mr. BLANTON. But under the ruling of the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GOOD] it is a part of section 39, nevertheless.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. That has not become the settled practice of the House as yet. These provisions which are contained in the latter part of section 27, if suggested by themselves in the shape of a separate bill, would have to go to the Committee on the Judiciary. That argument, while it has some bearing, of course, in considering the whole situation, is by no means conclusive. The amendment is germane in connection with the provisions of section 27.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, just one sentence on the point of order made by the gentleman from Texas. I call the Chair's attention to section 777 of the manual from which I read, as follows:

Under the later practice an amendment should be germane to the particular paragraph or section to which it is offered, and an amendment inserting an additional section should be germane to the portion of the bill to which it is offered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] does not come under any part of the provisions of section 27 of the bill, even assuming section 27 is the one that was to be amended. That section provides that there shall be no combination or conspiracy in restraint of trade with respect to mining or the sale of coal. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota provides that no stockholder of a corporation or association may acquire, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock, share, or other capital of any other corporation or association——

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the Chair permit me to direct his attention to the fact that all of the provisions, beginning with 65, are general to all of the provisions of the bill which preceded?

The CHAIRMAN. True; but each of the sections to which the gentleman has just called attention provides either with respect to coal or oil or gas or phosphate or shale, while the amendment offered by the gentleman as a separate section provides that stock in one corporation shall not be acquired by individuals or other corporations engaged in the production of oils on the lands subjected to lease under this bill.

The Chair thinks the amendment is clearly out of order, and so rules.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. There is another amendment at the desk, which I desire to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. If there are other amendments pending, of course they will be considered. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. GRIFFIN: Page 75, after line 2, insert a new section as follows——

Mr. GRIFFIN (interrupting the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment which the Clerk is about to read, because I think it is covered by the ruling on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the other amendment which is at the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRIFFIN: Page 75, after section 40, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 41. It shall be unlawful for any corporation or association engaged in producing or refining petroleum, or any of the by-products thereof, or in the production or mining of any of the products taken from lands leased under the provisions of this act, either directly or indirectly, to sell or offer for sale any petroleum, or by-product thereof, within the United States or any Territory thereof, or the District of Columbia, or any insular possession or other place under the jurisdiction of the United States, at a different price than that at which the same grade or quality of petroleum, or by-product thereof, is sold or offered for sale by any other corporation or association so engaged when the stockholders of such corporation or association own or control 25 per cent or more of the stock, or share capital of such other corporation or association, nor shall any such corporation or association discriminate in price in the same or different communities: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall prevent discrimination in price between purchasers of commodities on account of differences in the grade, quality, or quantity of the commodity sold, or that makes only due allowance for difference in the cost of selling or transportation: And provided further, That nothing herein contained shall prevent corporations or associations engaged in selling goods, wares, or merchandise in commerce from selecting their own customers in bona fide transactions and not in restraint of trade. Any person who shall violate the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than $1,000 and by imprisonment for a term of not less than six months."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment, first——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill in the nature of a substitute with amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the substitute as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MADDEN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphates, oil, gas, and sodium on the public lands, a substitute for which had been made in order by House resolution 358, that the committee had directed him to report the substitute back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the substitute as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is considered as ordered on the substitute and all amendments thereto to final passage.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RAKER. Under the rule whatever amendment has been placed on the substitute by the committee shall first be considered, and then the question comes upon the adoption of the substitute.

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. When would the motion to recommit under the present status of the bill be in order?

The SPEAKER. It would be in order after the third reading of the bill. Is a separate vote demanded on any of the amendments?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma. The first amendment is on page 60, beginning in line 23; the second amendment is on page 62, line 7; and the third amendment on page 58, line 8.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota demands a separate vote on three amendments. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? If not, the Chair will put the other amendments in gross.

The question was taken, and the other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the first amendment, on which the gentleman from Minnesota demands a separate vote. The Clerk will report the first amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 60, line 23, after the word "however" strike out all of line 23, all of lines 24 and 25, and all of lines 1 and 2, on page 61, down to and including the word "section," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That no fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section but the successor in interest of such claimant without notice of fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be chargeable therewith."

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. GRIFFIN) there were—ayes 53, noes 21.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman makes the point of order of no quorum.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. It has been called to my attention that inadvertently the Chair stated that the amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. No; the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan withdraws the point of no quorum.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the second amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 62, strike out lines 7 to 10, inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "Provided, however, That no fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant, without notice of fraud at the time such interest was acquired shall not be charged therewith."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the third amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 58, line 8, after the word "that," strike out the remainder of the paragraph and insert in lieu thereof the following: "No fraudulent claimant shall be entitled to any lease provided for in this section, but the successor in interest of such claimant, without notice of fraud at the time such interest was acquired, shall not be chargeable therewith."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the substitute as amended.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. This is on the passage of the substitute?

The SPEAKER. This is on the question of agreeing to the substitute, not on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GRIFFIN. To make a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. This is not the time to make such motion.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is there any other gentleman who wishes to offer a motion to recommit?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from California opposed to the bill?

Mr. RAKER. I am in favor of the bill, but I desire to place certain amendments in it.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from Minnesota on the committee?

Mr. ANDERSON. No.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman from New York opposed to the bill?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I am opposed to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York to offer a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. GRIFFIN moves to recommit the bill with instructions to amend and report the same forthwith, with the following amendments, to wit: Adding two new sections as follows:

"SEC. 40. No stockholder of any corporation or any association engaged in mining, producing or refining any of the products or by-products taken from lands leased under the provisions of this act, shall acquire or control, directly or indirectly, the whole or any part of the stock or other share capital of any other corporation or association so engaged, when both of such corporations or associations have been created or formed in compliance with a decree or judgment of dissolution issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, or in avoidance of a prosecution previously initiated under the provisions of this act or the antitrust laws."

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, the reading has gone far enough to show that the motion to recommit is subject to a point of order on account of not being germane. The same amendments were offered in the House and ruled out, and they are really amendments to amend the Clayton Antitrust Act.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the further point of order that it provides for punishment of the violations of certain criminal laws, and there is no such provision in the substitute bill adopted by the House. It provides punishment for the violation of certain laws.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from New York wish to be heard?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I desire to say there is an error in the enumeration of the sections. There has been a section called 39 added to the bill, so that the first section that is offered ought to be 40 and the following one 41, and I ask the Clerk to make that change.

The SPEAKER. That change can be made. Does the gentleman wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GRIFFIN. I would like to say this, Mr. Speaker: We have had an almost continuous discussion of this proposal since this bill has been under consideration. The purpose of these two amendments has been to provide some limitation in the bill whereby intending claimants for land may be protected. In offering these two amendments we are simply taking cognizance of the fact that there are large corporate interests, with many subdivisions, in this country of ours ready and waiting for an opportunity to step in and take up these valuable tracts the moment the barriers are let down.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the merits of the point of order at all, but is discussing a different proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will admonish the gentleman to confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I trust the Speaker, at least, will have patience with me. I know that the gentlemen opposed to this proposition are very impatient and do not like to listen. But I can not impress upon their minds, and I hope it will not be so with the Speaker, that in order to frame an amendment you must keep in mind the purpose that is before you and the object at which you aim. Now, I have simply gone this far in stating that there are interests in this country who are ready to grab this tremendously valuable property the moment that the barriers are let down.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. GRIFFIN. Now, the question is how far we may go.

Mr. PARRISH. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing the merits of the bill.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, may I be interrupted when I am being heard on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from New York submit for a moment to a question by the Chair? Is this substantially the amendment which the gentleman offered in the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. GRIFFIN. This is substantially the amendment which I offered in the committee, and the only purpose of it is to regulate and control the conditions under which these leases are to be granted. It provides against a community of stockholding. It provides that a stockholder shall not take a tract and then hold stock in every other subsidiary which may be able to take 4 square miles of valuable mining, oil, or coal land and hold it indirectly for the benefit of the parent corporation.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I make an additional point of order against the amendment, so that it may be pending if the Chair should need to consider it. My point of order is that this amendment is offered to the wrong part of the bill, and that under the practice of the House it should be offered so as to come in at that place in the bill which considers the subject matter of the gentleman's amendment, which would be at section 27 and not at the end of the bill. In the interest of orderly procedure I make that point of order.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I have a point that bears on that question.

The SPEAKER. This is substantially the amendment debated in the committee, and the Chair was in the committee and heard some of the discussion and the ruling of the chairman of the committee. The Chair supports the ruling that was then made and sustains the point of order.

The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota offers a motion to recommit, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANDERSON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on the Public Lands, with instructions to that committee to report the same back to the House forthwith with an amendment striking out the proviso, on page 70, beginning with line 22 and ending with the word "situated," in line 24, and with a further amendment striking out the proviso beginning on page 71, line 16, down to and including all of line 21.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 23, noes 66.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I withdraw the point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ANDERSON. I make the point of order that there is no quorum, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas moves that the House do now adjourn. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, those in favor of the motion to recommit will, as their names are called, answer "yea" and those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. RAKER. May we have the amendment reported?

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment once more.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 44, nays 201, answered "present" 6, not voting 181, as follows:

YEAS—44.

Anderson	Dowell	Longworth	Rogers
Begg	Ellsworth	McFadden	Rose
Bland, Ind.	Evans, Nebr.	McLaughlin, Mich	Schall
Bland, Va.	Gallagher	Mapes	Scott
Browne	Griffin	Michener	Steenerson
Burroughs	Hoch	Moore, Ohio	Strong, Kans.
Carss	Huddleston	Nichols, Mich.	Tilson
Christopherson	James	Platt	Volstead
Cramton	Keller	Ramseyer	Walters
Crisp	King	Randall, Calif.	Wason
Denison	Knutson	Reavis	Wilson, Ill.

NAYS—201.

Alexander	Echols	McArthur	Sanford
Almon	Elston	McDuffie	Sherwood
Andrews, Nebr.	Evans, Mont.	McGlennon	Siegel
Anthony	Evans, Nev.	McKinley	Sinnott
Aswell	Ferris	McPherson	Smith, Idaho
Ayres	Fisher	MacCrate	Smith, Mich.
Baer	Flood	MacGregor	Snyder
Bankhead	Fo ht	Madden	Steagall
Barbour	Foster	Major	Stedman
Barkley	Freeman	Mann, S. C.	Stephens, Ohio
Bee	French	Mansfield	Stevenson
Benham	Fuller, Ill.	Martin	Stiness
Black	Garland	Mays	Stoll
Bland, Mo.	Garrett	Miller	Strong, Pa.
Blanton	Glynn	Monahan, Wis.	Summers, Wash.
Box	Green, Iowa	Mondell	Sumners, Tex.
Briggs	Greene, Vt.	Moon	Sweet
Brinson	Hadley	Moore, Va.	Tague
Brooks, Ill.	Hardy, Colo.	Morgan	Taylor, Colo.
Brumbaugh	Harrison	Mott	Taylor, Tenn.
Buchanan	Hastings	Murphy	Temple
Burdick	Hawley	Neely	Tillman
Butler	Hayden	Nelson, Mo.	Timberlake
Byrnes, S. C.	Hays	Nelson, Wis.	Towner
Byrns, Tenn.	Hernandez	Newton, Minn.	Upshaw
Campbell, Kans.	Hersman	Nolan	Vaile
Campbell, Pa.	Hickey	O'Connor	Vinson
Candler	Houghton	Oldfield	Ward
Cannon	Hudspeth	Oliver	Watkins
Caraway	Hull, Tenn.	Osborne	Watson, Pa.
Carter	Husted	Overstreet	Watson, Va.
Chindblom	Igoe	Padgett	Weaver
Clark, Mo.	Jacoway	Park	Webb
Classon	Johnson, Miss.	Parrish	Webster
Coady	Johnson, Wash.	Porter	Welling
Connally	Jones, Tex.	Pou	Welty
Cooper	Kahn	Purnell	Whaley
Crago	Kearns	Quin	White, Kans.
Cullen	Kettner	Rainey, Ala.	White, Me.
Currie, Mich.	Kinkaid	Raker	Williams
Curry, Calif.	Kitchin	Randall, Wis.	Wilson, La.
Dale	Kleczka	Rayburn	Wingo
Davis, Tenn.	Kraus	Rhodes	Woods, Va.
Dent	Kreider	Ricketts	Wright
Dickinson, Mo.	Lampert	Riddick	Yates
Dickinson, Iowa	Lankford	Romjue	Young, N. Dak.
Dominick	Larsen	Rowe	Young, Tex.
Dunbar	Layton	Rubey	Zihlman
Dunn	Lazaro	Rucker
Dupré	Lonergan	Sanders, Ind.
Dyer	Luhring	Sanders, La.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—6.

Haugen	Juul	Sears	Thompson
Hull, Iowa	Reber

NOT VOTING—181.

Ackerman	Fields	LaGuardia	Reed, N. Y.
Andrews, Md.	Fordney	Langley	Reed, W. Va.
Ashbrook	Frear	Lanham	Riordan
Babka	Fuller, Mass.	Lea, Calif.	Robinson, N. C.
Bacharach	Gallivan	Lee, Ga.	Robsion, Ky.
Bell	Gandy	Lehlbach	Rodenberg
Benson	Ganly	Lesher	Rouse
Blackmon	Gard	Linthicum	Rowan
Boies	Garner	Little	Sabath
Booher	Godwin, N. C.	Luce	Sanders, N. Y.
Bowers	Goldfogle	Lufkin	Saunders, Va.
Brand	Good	McAndrews	Scully
Britten	Goodall	McClintic	Sells
Brooks, Pa.	Goodwin, Ark.	McCulloch	Shreve
Browning	Goodykoontz	McKenzie	Sims
Burke	Gould	McKeown	Sinclair
Caldwell	Graham, Pa.	McKinley	Sisson
Cantrill	Graham, Ill.	McLane	Slemp
Carew	Greene, Mass.	McLaughlin, Nebr	Small
Casey	Griest	Magee	Smith, Ill.
Clark, Fla.	Hamill	Maher	Smith, N. Y.
Cleary	Hamilton	Mann, Ill.	Smithwick
Cole	Hardy, Tex.	Mason	Snell
Collier	Haskell	Mead	Steele
Copley	Heflin	Merritt	Stephens, Miss.
Costello	Hersey	Minahan, N. J.	Sullivan
Crowther	Hicks	Montague	Swope
Dallinger	Hill	Mooney	Taylor, Ark.
Darrow	Holland	Moore, Pa.	Thomas
Davey	Howard	Moores, Ind.	Tincher
Davis, Minn.	Hulings	Morin	Tinkham
Dempsey	Humphreys	Mudd	Treadway
Dewalt	Hutchinson	Newton, Mo.	Vare
Donovan	Ireland	Nicholls, S. C.	Venable
Dooling	Jefferis	O'Connell	Vestal
Doremus	Johnson, Ky.	Ogden	Voigt
Doughton	Johnson, S. Dak.	Olney	Walsh
Drane	Johnston, N. Y.	Paige	Wheeler
Eagan	Jones, Pa.	Parker	Wilson, Pa.
Eagle	Kelley, Mich.	Pell	Winslow
Edmonds	Kelly, Pa.	Peters	Wise
Elliott	Kendall	Phelan	Wood, Ind.
Emerson	Kennedy, Iowa	Radcliffe	Woodyard
Esch	Kennedy, R. I.	Rainey, H. T.
Fairfield	Kiess	Rainey, J. W.
Fess	Kincheloe	Ramsey

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. ANDREWS with Mr. WISE.

Mr. VARE with Mr. CASEY.

Mr. VESTAL with Mr. CAREW.

Mr. WALSH with Mr. CANTRILL.

Mr. MAGEE with Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. VOIGT with Mr. HARDY of Texas.

Mr. BACHARACH with Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. KENDALL with Mr. LEE of Georgia.

Mr. WOODYARD with Mr. BELL.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota with Mr. LONERGAN.

Mr. FESS with Mr. ROBINSON of North Carolina.

Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. GOOD with Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa with Mr. LEA of California.

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island with Mr. LANHAM.

Mr. HULL of Iowa with Mr. MCKEOWN.

Mr. THOMPSON with Mr. LINTHICUM.

Mr. GOODALL with Mr. PHELAN.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ with Mr. PELL.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. OLNEY.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois with Mr. O'CONNELL.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts with Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina.

Mr. GRIEST with Mr. MOONEY.

Mr. TINCHER with Mr. DOUGHTON.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania with Mr. GODWIN of North Carolina.

Mr. MORGAN with Mr. GOODWIN of Arkansas.

Mr. MORIN with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. BRITTEN with Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania with Mr. SULLIVAN.

Mr. WHEELER with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. BROWNING with Mr. SMITHWICK.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois with Mr. COLLIER.

Mr. SNELL with Mr. CLEARY.

Mr. KIESS with Mr. JOHNSTON of New York.

Mr. WINSLOW with Mr. BLACKMON.

Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. MANN of Illinois with Mr. BABKA.

Mr. HASKELL with Mr. MINAHAN of New Jersey.

Mr. HUTCHINSON with Mr. MEAD.

Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. ASHBROOK.

Mr. TINKHAM with Mr. CLARK of Florida.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri with Mr. GARNER.

Mr. OGDEN with Mr. GARD.

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. GANLY.

Mr. PARKER with Mr. GANDY.

Mr. BURKE with Mr. SMITH of New York.

Mr. PETERS with Mr. GALLIVAN.

Mr. COLE with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. RADCLIFFE with Mr. EAGLE.

Mr. BOWERS with Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY.

Mr. LUCE with Mr. VENABLE.

Mr. BOIES with Mr. SEARS.

Mr. IRELAND with Mr. MAHER.

Mr. COPLEY with Mr. SISSON.

Mr. COSTELLO with Mr. SIMS.

Mr. JEFFERIS with Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. TREADWAY with Mr. BOOHER.

Mr. RAMSEY with Mr. EAGAN.

Mr. REED of West Virginia with Mr. DRANE.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky with Mr. DOREMUS.

Mr. CROWTHER with Mr. SCULLY.

Mr. DEMPSEY with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia.

Mr. SANDERS of New York with Mr. DOOLING.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. MCCLINTIC.

Mr. SELLS with Mr. DONOVAN.

Mr. SINCLAIR with Mr. DEWALT.

Mr. LAGUARDIA with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

Mr. LEHLBACH with Mr. HUMPHREYS.

Mr. ELLIOTT with Mr. SABATH.

Mr. ESCH with Mr. ROWAN.

Mr. SLEMP with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania with Mr. MCANDREWS.

Mr. FAIRFIELD with Mr. ROUSE.

Mr. LUFKIN with Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. MCKENZIE with Mr. HOLLAND.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Nebraska with Mr. HEFLIN.

Mr. MERRITT with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana with Mr. BENSON.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania with Mr. LESHER.

Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. FIELDS.

Mr. ACKERMAN with Mr. STEELE.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division.
Mr. GRIFFIN. I demand a division.
Mr. BAER. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I am going to ask for the yeas and nays.
Mr. BLANTON. Pending that, Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas demands the yeas and nays. Those in favor of ordering the yeas and nays will rise and stand until they are counted. [After counting.] Twenty-one Members, not a sufficient number. The yeas and nays are refused.
Mr. BLANTON. I make the point of no quorum, Mr. Speaker.
Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I submit that the roll has just been called and the presence of a quorum developed.
Mr. BLANTON. Other business has been transacted.
Mr. FAIRFIELD. No business has been transacted at all.
Mr. BLANTON. That roll call was upon a motion to recommit, and this is upon the passage of the bill. I think we should have a roll call on this bill. We have spent four days in the consideration of it.
The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the point of order made by the gentleman from Utah is well taken.
Mr. HASTINGS. A parliamentary inquiry. If a vote should now be taken, it would not be taken on the passage of the bill, because the Chair has already declared the bill passed.
The SPEAKER. No; the gentleman is mistaken about that.
Mr. BLANTON. I asked for a division, Mr. Speaker, and pending that I asked for the yeas and nays.
The SPEAKER. That is correct. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from Utah. The question is on the passage of the bill.
The question being taken, Mr. RAKER demanded a division.
The House divided; and there were—ayes 169, noes 39.
Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count.
Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Speaker, can we not have the yeas and nays?
The SPEAKER. The House has refused the yeas and nays.
Mr. GRIFFIN. I make the request again, that instead of a quorum call we have the yeas and nays.
The SPEAKER (after counting). The Chair has counted 216 Members, without counting all those present. A quorum is present. The ayes have it, and the bill is passed.
By unanimous consent, the title of the bill was amended so as to read "An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, oil shale, gas, and sodium on the public domain."
On motion of Mr. SINNOTT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. WALSH, for five legislative days, on account of business.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, leave was granted to extend remarks on the bill just passed to Mr. MONDELL, Mr. GRIFFIN, Mr. RAKER, Mr. EVANS of Montana, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, Mr. HERSMAN, Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania, and Mr. KELLER.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION ACT.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution which the Clerk will report.
The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 369.

Resolved, That 44,000 additional copies of Public Law 66, entitled "National prohibition act," be printed for the use of the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?
There was no objection.
The resolution was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.
The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 58 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, October 31, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:
By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 10285) to authorize the purchase by the city of Myrtle Point, Oreg., of certain lands formerly embraced in the grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and revested in the United States by the act approved June 9, 1916; to the Committee on the Public Lands.
By Mr. KINKAID: A bill (H. R. 10286) making available additional moneys for the reclamation fund, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.
By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 10287) granting the consent of Congress to the Interstate Construction Corporation to construct a bridge across the Columbia River between the States of Oregon and Washington at or within 2 miles westerly from Cascade Locks, in the State of Oregon, and granting a license to construct and maintain the approach to said bridge over property belonging to the United States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.
By Mr. MADDEN: A bill (H. R. 10288) authorizing the President to appoint Army Field Clerk Henry Kehl as a first lieutenant in the United States Army and then placing him on the retired list of the United States Army as such; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 10289) to provide for increased allowances for rent, light, and fuel in third-class post offices; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.
By Mr. FLOOD: A bill (H. R. 10290) for the purchase of buildings and grounds for the embassy of the United States at Brussels, Belgium; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.
By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 10291) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply the deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, to place men furloughed to the Regular Army reserve in the same status as regards preferment in the civil service as honorably discharged soldiers, sailors, and marines; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.
By Mr. GARRETT: Resolution (H. Res. 366) providing for the consideration of House concurrent resolution 35; to the Committee on Rules.
By Mr. GARLAND: Resolution (H. Res. 368) providing for the investigation of certain reports regarding organized wage earners in western Pennsylvania, and particularly Allegheny County, in said State; to the Committee on Rules.
By Mr. JUUL: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 242) proposing an amendment to the Constitution and providing that all amendments thereto shall be ratified by three-fourths of the voting strength herein provided for of the legislature of the several States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:
By Mr. BENHAM: A bill (H. R. 10292) granting an increase of pension to Mattie Shepherd; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. HAYS: A bill (H. R. 10293) granting a pension to Martha E. Holder; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. IRELAND: A bill (H. R. 10294) granting an increase of pension to Frank Godar; to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. JAMES: A bill (H. R. 10295) granting a pension to May A. Sanders and minor children; to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. KEARNS: A bill (H. R. 10296) granting an increase of pension to William Perkins; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. LUCE: A bill (H. R. 10297) granting a pension to Flora E. Horton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. McDUFFIE: A bill (H. R. 10298) granting a pension to Jacob Cain; to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 10299) granting a pension to Eliza M. Keyes; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. SCULLY: A bill (H. R. 10300) to remove the charge of desertion against Nelson P. Robinson; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
By Mr. SMITH of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 10301) granting an increase of pension to Patterson Short; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.
By Mr. SWEET: A bill (H. R. 10302) granting a pension to Mary Hewitt; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 10303) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin Jackson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10304) granting a pension to Rhoda Beeler; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. IRELAND: Resolution (H. Res. 367) to pay Emil Edward Hurja, clerk to the late Hon. Charles A. Sulzer, one month's salary; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRIGGS: Petition of Soldier Settlement Board of Texas, indorsing Mondell bill for soldier settlement under the so-called Lane plan; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Ninetieth Division Association, indorsing universal military training in limited form; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BURROUGHS: Resolutions of the Educational Council of New Hampshire, by H. P. Swett, secretary, advocating the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. CRAGO: Petition of Ninetieth Division Association, Dallas, Tex., favoring an adequate Regular Army as a nucleus for properly training citizens universally for military service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. EDMONDS: Petition of Philadelphia Board of Trade, opposing passage of Senate bill 1469; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of Free Sewing Machine Co., Rockford, Ill., favoring passage of Senate bill 2904 and House bills 8115 and 8315; to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of the Monroe County (N. Y.) Civil War Veterans' Association, favoring the Fuller pension bill, House bill 9369; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of the Women's Relief Corps, of Streator, Ill., for increase in Civil War pensions; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KAHN: Petition of Ninetieth Division Association on the importance of universal military training for the youths of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Petition of Philadelphia Board of Trade in opposition to the bill to create a Federal home loan board; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: Petition of Sanford, Chamberlain & Albers Co., of Knoxville, Tenn., favoring passage of House bill 5123 without amendments; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. TILSON: Petition of bottling concerns of New Haven, Conn., for repeal of section 628 of the revenue act of 1918; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. VARE: Petition of Philadelphia Board of Trade, protesting against passage of Senate bill 1469, to create a Federal loan board; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, October 31, 1919.

(Legislative day of Thursday, October 30, 1919.)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock noon, on the expiration of the recess.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 641) to amend section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9112) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan Army rifles to posts of the American Legion, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate numbered 15 assuring the administration of the support of the Congress in dealing with the present industrial emergency.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

H. R. 9205. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9697. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across Pearl River, between Pearl River County, Miss., and Washington Parish, La.

TREATY RESERVATIONS (S. DOC. NO. 148).

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for a reprint of Senate Document No. 135, a compilation of treaty reservations. It includes all that were in the bound volume, but there were some treaties later that were not included in the bound volume and in which I find two cases of reservations. I should like to have a reprint to include those two cases.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEAGUE FOR PRESERVATION OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE.

Mr. LODGE. I present a letter from the Nebraska League for the Preservation of American Independence. I ask that it may be printed with the enrolled membership in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEBRASKA LEAGUE FOR THE PRESERVATION OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE,
Fremont, Nebr., October 27, 1919.

HON. HENRY C. LODGE,
Chairman Committee on Foreign Relations,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LODGE: Herein find a batch of original membership rolls in our League for the Preservation of American Independence. Many other towns are in process of organization, and many actually organized have retained the membership rolls.

This inclosure contains the following signed rolls from the following places in Nebraska, with the number of signers, to wit:

Fremont and Dodge County	188
Fairmont	64
Hastings	84
Callaway	8
Hebron	10
St. Paul	27
Fullerton	15
Pawnee City	20
Ord	11
Oakdale	105
South Omaha	10
Lexington	148
Fairbury	2
Total	692

In addition to the foregoing, there are large organizations in each of the following towns in Nebraska, to wit:

Omaha, Lincoln, Beatrice, Aurora, David City, Columbus, Silver Creek, and others.

Practically without funds or men we have accomplished all this in four weeks.

The strongest argument against the present covenant of the league of natfons we have found to be the covenant itself.

The sole obstacle we encountered has been the serene belief of the people that the Senate could be trusted to prevent the consummation of this international assininity.

We all believe our fight won, but are conscious that there are often relapses in hysteria.

We thank you for your great service to the Nation.

Yours, very truly,

W. M. CAIN, Secretary.

THE GOVERNMENT AND THE STRIKE.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, in this morning's Washington Post there appears an editorial on the Government and the strike. It expresses the situation so clearly and so plainly that he who runs may read. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial is as follows:

"THE GOVERNMENT AND THE STRIKE.

"The resolution adopted by the United States Senate accurately reflects public sentiment. The people stand solidly behind the President and applaud the vigorous policy of the Government in preparing to frustrate the efforts of the deluded men who seek to freeze and starve the country into surrender to their unreasonable demands. If the leaders of the coal miners have any discretion, they will avoid going a step farther on the road that leads to prison; and if the miners stop and think, they will refuse to be made the tools of agitators who are seeking only their own individual advantage.

"The Government is in duty bound to protect the people. If moderate measures do not avail, then sterner measures will be used. There is no limit to the power that can be exerted by the Government. It can crush to powder any combination that raises its hand against the public welfare. It can reach out and take into custody every individual, high or low, who conspires to interfere with the output of coal or who aids or abets in such interference. It can take charge of the mines, put men at work, and protect them while they work. The utter folly of the United Mine Workers' leaders in assuming that they can with impunity defy the United States will become apparent very quickly if they dare to go on with their criminal work.

"There are rumors that other labor leaders will endeavor to bolster up the coal strike by ordering strikes on the railroads. Let us hope that these leaders will not make such a mistake, which would be so disastrous to themselves personally and so injurious to the cause which organized labor has given into their keeping. These leaders have no right to sacrifice their followers through motives of malice, anger, or private advantage. They hold a solemn trust—the welfare of hundreds of thousands of families. They should put aside their personal feelings and recognize their responsibility to their followers. The same law which forbids conspiracies to limit coal production also forbids conspiracies to interfere with transportation. The penalty for violation of the law is plainly stated, so that no man need become guilty through ignorance. If any man draws down upon him the heavy hand of the Government and is sent to prison, it will be his own fault, because he has been duly warned to avoid committing unlawful acts.

"The blunders made by such men as Foster in the steel strike and Lewis in the coal strike are a sharp reminder to union labor that it should be extremely careful in selecting its leaders. The man of violent speech and extreme action is not the man who should be clothed with responsibility for the cause of union labor. This is not a brute-force struggle, but a battle of brains. If the workers will run over the list of labor leaders during the last 50 years, they will notice that union labor received most benefit from moderate, quiet, intelligent men, who carefully worked forward, point by point, and held by law and logic every inch they gained. The least benefit was derived from the haranguing agitators who bragged of their devotion and who advocated extreme methods. The most successful labor unions are those that are never engaged in strikes or other interruptions.

"Americans are more than glad to defend the rights of labor. All of them who are worth their salt are themselves workers at something useful. The country looks with favor upon unions and recognizes that a man has a right to work or quit work as he pleases. The Government has not the slightest intention to interfere with the right of the coal miners to quit work. Attorney General Palmer has made this fact very clear. This is a free country, and the people will keep it free. Those who wish to quit can quit, but they can not make others quit. Those who wish to work can work, but they can not make others work. Therefore there is no ground whatever for the fear expressed by certain labor leaders, to the effect that the Government is to be used as an instrument of tyranny in behalf of employers against employees. That suggestion is a gratuitous piece of disloyalty, and if the labor leaders in question were really patriotic Americans they would not have uttered it. They arouse suspicion as to the quality of their Americanism when they impute base motives to their own Government.

"This is not a propitious time for any labor leader to impugn the Government, but rather a time for fearless opposition to the Bolshevism that anti-Americans are trying to inject into organized labor."

EX-PRESIDENT TAFT'S VIEW OF THE STRIKE SITUATION.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to call attention to an Associated Press dispatch in the morning papers giving an account of a speech made by ex-President Taft in Massachusetts. In that speech this language was used, according to the Associated Press dispatch:

"In an ordinary strike," he said, "incidental annoyance to the public, which is negligible, does not render the strike illegal. But when enormous combinations of workingmen deliberately enter upon a country-wide plan to take the country by the throat and compel the country to compel the employers in that particular field of industry to yield to the demands of the men, they are engaged in an unlawful conspiracy. The sacredness of their individual right to labor on such terms as they choose and to leave their employment when they will does not protect or justify them in such a conspiracy.

"That is the kind of a conspiracy the bituminous coal miners propose to begin on November 1."

I ask that the entire dispatch may be printed in the RECORD, and I ask the consideration of the Senate to the suggestion that there are two different kinds of strikes, and that the class of strikes referred to by the ex-President and termed "unlawful" and termed a "conspiracy" against the Government is one that we may well reach not only now under the fuel-control act but in time of peace, and that if legislation is not already sufficient to suppress such a movement the responsibility is upon us to pass such legislation.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"TAFT DECLARES CALLING OF SOFT-COAL STRIKE ILLEGAL CONSPIRACY.

"MALDEN, MASS., October 30.

"Former President William H. Taft, speaking to-night at a political rally here, declared that the bituminous coal miners in calling a strike were 'engaged in an unlawful conspiracy,' and that Congress had full power to 'condemn such a cruel conspiracy as an offense.'

"'In an ordinary strike,' he said, 'incidental annoyance to the public, which is negligible, does not render the strike illegal. But when enormous combinations of workingmen deliberately enter upon a country-wide plan to take the country by the throat and compel the country to compel the employers in that particular field of industry to yield to the demands of the men, they are engaged in an unlawful conspiracy. The sacredness of their individual right to labor on such terms as they choose and to leave their employment when they will does not protect or justify them in such a conspiracy.

"'That is the kind of conspiracy the bituminous coal miners propose to begin on November 1. The extent of the suffering that they plan to impose upon the public can not be measured. It will fall upon the poor wage earner whose employer will have to shut down for lack of coal.

"'The locomotive firemen are threatening a similar strike. If they enter upon this plan, it will constitute a conspiracy to starve the people of the United States into some kind of action to compel the authorities to pay the wages they demand. Congressmen condemn this as an unlawful conspiracy, too.'"

INDUSTRIAL UNREST.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I have here a very timely editorial from the Laurens Advertiser, of Laurens, S. C., one of the very sound newspapers of the country, on the subject of strikes. I ask unanimous consent that without reading it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"INDUSTRIAL UNREST.

"Picking up at random a daily paper of Saturday and reading the top headlines of every column on the page showed that without exception every column dealt with the industrial unrest of the day. Six of the seven columns dealt with labor troubles in the United States and the seventh dealt with similar troubles in England. The problem of the war has given way to its after effects, and the after effects seem harder to solve than the war itself. Their results, in this country at least, promise to be more far-reaching than the war.

"The problem of the equitable distribution of profits in industry is a difficult one. That the laborer with his hands as distinguished from the laborer of brains is entitled to a fair share of profits can not be denied, the difficulty being a division of the profits without endangering the permanence of the industry. When the rewards of mental labor cease to be as large as those for hand labor the incentive for education and training will be removed, to the great loss of the industry itself. This and the creative power of capital with the risks that capital runs do not seem to appeal to those why cry out for 'industrial freedom' and demand an unreasonable return for the day's labor. They may be killing the goose that is laying the golden egg. Unless a stopping place is reached pretty soon we may expect a paralysis of industry, and the regular pay roll, small as it may seem now, may cease altogether, and conditions in this country will arise similar to those in Russia to-day.

"Collective bargaining, so called, is all right, provided it is confined to bargaining. When it begins to resolve itself into collective intimidation and opposition to the law it is all wrong. The Constitution of this country guarantees every man the right to earn an honest living, and when collective bargaining is stretched into the privilege of keeping another man from work it has transgressed the rights guaranteed to every citizen. The law and the Constitution should be upheld to the letter."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, as a matter of personal privilege, I should like to call attention to the fact that in this morning's New York Tribune there appeared two articles, one of which was intended to put me in a very ridiculous position in the eyes of the world and the other in rather an embarrassing position as between myself and one of my colleagues in the Senate, both of which were absolutely untrue.

The first purported to give a report of my call upon the King of the Belgians during his visit to the city of Washington, in which it was said I was compelled to cool my heels in the antechamber while the King was conversing with Mr. Samuel Gompers. I never called on the King of the Belgians while he was in the city of Washington and never saw the King of the Belgians except as I saw him here in the Chamber, where we all were glad to do him honor.

The other article had reference to a remark made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] during his address in the Senate yesterday. It was in relation to some confusion in the Chamber, and it is stated that the Senator from Wisconsin turned and remarked that if there was a little more order in the coal section of the Senate he could proceed, indicating, as the paper stated, Senator KNOX, of Pennsylvania, Senator SUTHERLAND, of West Virginia, and Senator ELKINS, of West Virginia.

I have not spoken to the Senator from Wisconsin upon this subject at all, but I should like to ask him if at any time during that or any other address he ever made while I was in the Chamber he did not receive my most respectful attention?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I will say that whenever I have addressed the Senate I have always been honored and encouraged by the considerate attention of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I remember well the first attempt that I made to address the Senate at the beginning of my service here. The junior Senator from Pennsylvania sat very near to me then, in what was known as "the Cherokee strip," and by suggestions and friendly attention encouraged me throughout my first speech in the Senate. I presume he has forgotten that occasion, but, sir, I never have forgotten it. From that time down to this day I have never made an address in the Senate that I have not had the very closest attention from the Senator from Pennsylvania when he was present, often I have thought beyond the deserving of my effort.

Upon the occasion to which he has just referred, when I spoke upon the resolution offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], I recall that I was interrupted by the audible conversation of other Senators sitting quite apart from the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. I did at the time make some reference to the interruption, which I withdrew from the RECORD, as I was satisfied that no discourtesy was intended.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 9112. An act authorizing the Secretary of War to loan Army rifles to posts of the American Legion was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented the petitions of L. G. Grey, a citizen of the State of Michigan, praying for the separation of the league of nations covenant from the treaty of peace with Germany, remonstrating against the adoption of the proposed league of nations covenant unless certain reservations are adopted, and remonstrating against the ratification of the treaty of peace with Germany, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Local Lodge No. 848, Brotherhood of Railway Carmen, of Muskegon, Mich., remonstrating against the adoption of certain clauses in the so-called Cummins bill for the private ownership and control of railroads, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of the Michigan Association of Creamery Owners and Managers remonstrating against the enactment of legislation which will in any way conflict with the established trade practices in the creamery industry, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of Local Council No. 1585, Knights of Columbus, of Baraga, Mich., remonstrating against the War Department taking over work heretofore performed in Army camps by various welfare societies, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PAGE presented a memorial of the Ladies' Auxiliary, Ancient Order of Hibernians of America, remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial of the State Council of New Jersey, Junior Order United American Mechanics, and a memorial of sundry citizens of Framingham, Mass., remonstrating against the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty unless certain reservations are adopted, which were ordered to lie on the table.

DEPORTATION OF ALIENS.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, yesterday I reported from the Committee on Immigration the bill (H. R. 6750) to deport certain undesirable aliens and to deny readmission to those deported. The bill has passed the House, and I understand by a unanimous vote. I am in possession of a letter from the Attorney General urging the immediate passage of the bill. It should be done before the treaty is acted upon, as without this additional legislation those who are now interned and those who have violated any of the war acts and have been convicted of the same must be turned free. I therefore ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not know that I shall have any objection whatever to the bill, but I wish to say that I can not consent this morning to its immediate passage without some consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP OF AMERICAN RAILROADS.

Mr. KELLOGG. By direction of the Committee on Interstate Commerce I report back favorably without amendment Senate resolution 222, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration. I will state that the resolution simply requests the Interstate Commerce Commission to investigate and furnish the Senate the information as to either the present or the prospective ownership by the Canadian Government of any railroads within the United States.

There being no objection, the resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Interstate Commerce Commission be directed to investigate and report to the Senate the facts in connection with the present or prospective ownership or control by the Government of the Dominion of Canada, either directly or through the ownership and control of the stocks of any corporation or company, of any line or lines of railway or part thereof, situate within the territory of the United States, together with a statement of the mileage of said railroads.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WOLCOTT:

A bill (S. 3349) granting an increase of pension to John A. McAleer; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 3350) granting an increase of pension to Henry S. Back (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 3351) to create in the Army of the United States a corps to be known as the Corps of Chaplains; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 3352) increasing the limit of cost of the Aqueduct Bridge across the Potomac River; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. HENDERSON:

A bill (S. 3353) to save daylight in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A bill (S. 3354) to authorize the President of the United States to reappoint Seth William Scofield major of Cavalry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HENDERSON:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 121) declaring November 11 a legal public holiday to be known as armistice day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—SALLIE HARDWICK.

On motion of Mr. FLETCHER, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill (S. 589, 66th Cong., 1st sess.) granting a pension to Sallie Hardwick, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE IRISH QUESTION.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Michael J. O'Brien, the historiographer of the American Irish Historical Society of New York, in answer to a portion of a recent speech by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] in regard to the service of soldiers of Irish extraction in the Civil War. The letter is very short, and I ask that it be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OCTOBER 22, 1919.

Hon. DAVID I. WALSH,
United States Senator from Massachusetts,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am taking the liberty of addressing you for the purpose of requesting that you have inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an answer to the speech of the Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS in the Senate on October 16. In that speech much was said about the Irish in the Civil War. It was asked, among other things, "What did the Irish have to do with it?"

In a previous letter I quoted, among other unquestionable evidence proving Irish participation in the Revolutionary War, the testimony of the commanding general of the enemy forces, and I shall now quote for your information a statement of the commanding general of the enemy forces in the Civil War, Gen. Robert E. Lee.

If one will look up the files of the New York Sun at the Library of Congress and turn to the issue of that paper of April 17, 1885, he will find a report of a long interview which Rev. George W. Pepper, chaplain of the Fifteenth Corps, Army of the Tennessee, had with Gen. Lee. The interview was held in Richmond a short time before the close of the war, and among the many interesting things contained in it I quote the following, word for word:

"To the question, 'What, Gen. Lee, in your opinion, caused the failure of the South?' 'I am not a very good extemporaneous speaker,' he replied. 'The most important factor was the superiority in the immense numbers of your soldiers and in your unbounded resources. The North had all the advantages, a land of vast wealth, cities secure from the evils of civil war, and a constant stream of emigrants from Ireland and Germany to replenish your diminished ranks. In a speech of Mr. Everett's, which I have been reading this very day, he states that there were at one time 200,000 Irishmen in the Federal armies. The population of the South was never more than 7,000,000. With 5 to 1 against them the men of the Confederacy performed a mighty task and made a tremendous step toward their independence.'"

In another part of this remarkable interview, Dr. Pepper wrote: "Our next topic of conversation was the European element in both armies. Speaking of the Irish, he declared with much feeling that 'the South could not reconcile with their ideas of consistency how Irishmen who were so violently opposed to the thraldom of Britain could enlist on the northern side when all the wrongs of Ireland were mosquito bites in comparison to those inflicted on the South.'

"Adverting to the character of the Irish as soldiers, the general paid them a high compliment. 'Cleburne,' he said, 'was possessed of a hero's heart and a soldier's honor. On a field of battle he shone like a meteor in a clouded sky. Not a single vice stained him. The care which he took of his soldiers was incessant. His integrity was proverbial.'

"I mentioned the name of Thomas Francis Meagher as the popular idol of the northern Irishmen. 'Yes,' continued he, 'Meagher on your side, though not Cleburne's equal in military genius and experience, rivaled him in bravery and in the affections of his soldiers. The heroic stand and desperate though fruitless gallantry of that brigade of Meagher's upon the heights of Fredericksburg never has been equaled. Though totally routed they reaped a harvest of glory. Their reckless and splendid charges upon our lines excited the heartiest applause of our soldiers and officers. Meagher was the bravest of the brave.'

"I inquired about the residence of John Mitchel, upon whom I subsequently called. He gave me the address and continued: 'Mitchel is a born Confederate, a powerful and brilliant writer, a scholar of splendid ability, a gallant gentleman, to the South always true, and a tower of strength to our cause.'"

It is to be assumed that Gen. Lee was as competent a witness to testify upon the events of the Civil War as Gen. Clinton was upon the events of the Revolutionary War, and now that the Senator has had this remarkable statement brought to his attention, I hope he will act the part of a southern gentleman and withdraw his cruel and unjustifiable animadversions upon the Irish in the Civil War.

Very respectfully, MICHAEL J. O'BRIEN.

PRESSING DOMESTIC QUESTIONS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an article by Mr. William R. Boyd, jr., national campaign manager of the League to Enforce Peace, the article being entitled "Serious business," and calling attention to the number of very serious domestic questions the solution of which is awaiting the disposal of the pending treaty.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

"SERIOUS BUSINESS."

[By William R. Boyd, jr., national campaign manager League to Enforce Peace.]

"A merchant in a middle western town recently said to me that the Senators will soon discover something serious is likely to happen to business unless action is had on the peace treaty. His statement recalls the old negro woman who, when told of the sudden death of her husband, exclaimed, 'My Gawd! Dere must a been sumpin serious de matter wid him.'

"There is something seriously the matter with the whole world. No one knows it better than the American business man. He knows that the Senate of the United States is playing with fire every day it delays the ratification of the peace settlement.

"The business man knows that almost all of Europe and Asia is in a state of upheaval, evolution, and revolution. He knows that right here in America a fire is being fanned by a large, unassimilated, and un-Americanized foreign population.

"INDUSTRIAL RECONSTRUCTION WAITS.

"The business man knows that capital, ever timid, hesitates to pour its money into industrial reconstruction through fear of political disturbance or revolutionary changes in industrial methods. He knows that credit and currency and living costs are inflated, and that the public generally is restless and clamoring for reduced prices for necessities and all manufactured goods. He knows that operating costs and wage levels are skyrocketing and production decreasing.

"The business man knows that the country over merchants report an orgy of consumers buying luxuries, both in rural and urban sections, with a tendency to expand individual credit. He knows that the country banks, though bulging with deposits, are loaned almost to the limit of their capacity.

"The business man knows that international problems do have a far-reaching effect upon the prosperity of this Nation and the happiness of its people. Ditto, domestic problems, like the seemingly forgotten transportation situation, in which even the babes in arms of our land have a vital interest.

"The business man knows there is important work to be done by the Congress of the United States and that the Senate ought to facilitate that work by ratifying the treaty of peace now—and without amendment or destructive reservations that would require renegotiations or resubmission to another conference of nations, thus holding in abeyance the settlements growing out of the war.

"WHILE THE SENATE TALKS,

"Knowing these things, ought not the business man to tell the Senate what he knows in forceful and unmistakable language? And, to purloin a Wattersonian phrase, in America every man who is not a policeman or a dude—the banker, the minister, the lawyer, the doctor, the farmer—is a business man.

"While the Senate consumes precious time gas attacking parts of the treaty which it knows it can not rewrite without the consent of other signatory nations, Germany is mobilizing for war. Oh, no; not in a military sense, for the treaty will force her to beat her swords into plowshares once it gets into effect. Already Germany is 'consolidating her positions,' industrially speaking, and her horde of commercial soldiers are invading Russia and Scandinavia and all the rest of the world where she may be able to obtain passports for them. Thus, while our Senate talks, talks, talks, our chief enemy consolidates her industrial forces for teamwork to attempt to commercially Germanize the markets of the world. Now, Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium have ratified the settlement made at Versailles and are moving their commercial batteries into position.

"THE FOUR BIG FACTORS.

"Here four powerful and contributory forces are admittedly influencing readjustments and the status of our domestic and foreign commerce, to wit:

"First. The peace treaty.

"Second. The labor problem.

"Third. The money market.

"Fourth. Foreign credits and exchange.

"Business, generally, optimistically expects all four of these problems to be worked out with reasonable promptness. The war settlement contained in the peace treaty is regarded as the paramount factor in readjustments. It also has particular influence upon the third and fourth propositions above stated. Therefore, the first move to be expected is action by the Senate, as it alone has the power to remove the first disturbing factor and permit final decision on the many business commitments that are being deferred until the treaty is ratified.

"CAPITAL, LABOR, THE PUBLIC.

"The second proposition—the labor problem—is now under discussion by the Industrial Conference, meeting in Washington upon invitation of the President. There two warring elements have been brought together in council—with representatives of the consuming public occupying the middle ground—to confer over conditions fundamental to the tranquillity and prosperity of the entire citizenship of the Nation. Business circles regard this conference as an augury of better arrangements; as an opportunity to prove that labor, capital, and the public can work with, not for, each other; a chance for them to get together and pull together during the era of commercial rivalry which we are now entering upon.

"The third proposition—the money market—is only partially dependent upon the working out of the first and second. In a degree not altogether measurable we are suffering from abnormal speculation, due in part perhaps to the fact that some elements of business are joy-riding and exceeding the speed limit. The turnover in high-priced and luxurious mercantile stocks is remarkably large and testifies how 'leaky' the dollar is, and partially explains the general demand for higher compensation for service. Large amounts of money are being diverted into highly speculative channels while credit and currency are required in large volume for crop moving and governmental and legitimate corporate financing. Despite all this, however, thanks to our admirable Federal Reserve system, there is no scarcity of money at the moment for purely commercial requirements, though the rate is high.

"FOREIGN CREDITS AND EXCHANGE.

"The fourth proposition—foreign credits and exchange—can not be worked out definitely until after ratification of the peace treaty. Safe and definite plans must be made to facilitate the carrying on of our trade with the rest of the world. In the case of Europe and South America the exchange situation is hindering American exports, and it is imperative that an early solution be found of the method of payment for the goods we sell them. A sound system of credits must be developed and inaugurated if we are to enjoy the prosperity that follows the sale of our surplus commodities for foreign consumption. To aid in finding the solution of some of these pressing problems, business men from England, France, Italy, Belgium, and other countries are now meeting with American business men in Atlantic City, under the auspices of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. Here the viewpoint of the occidental business world will seek common denominators by means of round-table discussion, a principle sought to be applied to the settlement of many world problems through the proposed league of nations.

"JOHN H. PATTERSON'S VIEWS.

"One of America's foremost and far-sighted business men is just home from an investigation of business conditions in France, England, Belgium, and Germany. He publicly reports his impressions, and, among other things, he emphatically says:

"I have just returned from a trip to Europe. I went to study business conditions. The most important thing to do to restore international business is to quickly ratify the treaty of peace and establish a league of nations.

"That business man is John H. Patterson, the president and general manager of the National Cash Register Co., which concern has ramifications throughout the commercial world. His viewpoint seems to be general among business men everywhere.

"The American business man knows the Senate ought to ratify the treaty at the earliest possible moment, and then get the Congress down to work on other pressing problems. He knows that the mind of individual Senators is decided about what each is going to finally do when the vote on the treaty is taken.

"Why, then, can not American business, big and little, from Duluth to Mobile and from Santa Barbara to Wilmington, let the Senate know that what it needs and wants is more light and less heat, more speed and less procrastination on Capitol Hill, Washington, D. C.? Concerted action on the part of the American public usually gets results, for the people's Senators understand what that means.

"Let the American business man do some quick thinking and acting. Also the American farmer, who, collectively taken, is the biggest business man of all; he should speak first and loudest."

OIL AND GAS LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, and request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, the conferees on the part of the Senate to be appointed by the Chair.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. FALL, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. PITTMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain be printed, showing the amendments of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONTROL OF RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. CUMMINS. I submit a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (S. 641) to amend section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918. I ask that the report be printed in the RECORD. I hope to call it up to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill S. 641, entitled "An act to amend section 10 of an act entitled 'An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes,' approved March 21, 1918," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the House numbered 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, and agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the proviso of said amendment after the word "made" insert the words "by him," and at the end of said amendment insert the following: "except that this proviso shall not apply to cases now pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, which cases shall proceed to final determination under the law as it existed at the time of the passage of this act"; and the House agree to the same.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JOHN J. ESCH,
E. L. HAMILTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	La Follette	Sheppard
Ball	Hale	Lenroot	Sherman
Brandegee	Harris	Lodge	Smith, Ariz.
Capper	Harrison	McCumber	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Henderson	McLean	Smith, Md.
Colt	Hitchcock	McNary	Smoot
Culberson	Johnson, S. Dak.	Moses	Spencer
Cummins	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Sterling
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Newberry	Swanson
Dial	Kellogg	Norris	Thomas
Dillingham	Kendrick	Nugent	Townsend
Elkins	Kenyon	Owen	Trammell
Fall	Keyes	Page	Walsh, Mass.
France	King	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Gay	Kirby	Pomerene	Williams
Gerry	Knox	Robinson	Wolcott

Mr. CURTIS. I was requested by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs to announce that that committee is holding a joint meeting with the Committee on Military Affairs of the House this morning and that a number of Senators on that committee are absent on that account.

Mr. GERRY. The senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], and the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are detained on public business. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] are absent on official business. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] are detained on account of illness. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent on account of illness in his family.

Mr. GAY. The senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] is detained from the Senate on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. THOMAS resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday. The entire speech is as follows:

Thursday, October 30, 1919.

Mr. President, on the 22d of August last I submitted some observations to the Senate upon the provisions of Part XIII of the proposed treaty. I had previously devoted considerable time and thought to the 40 articles constituting that portion of the treaty, and expressed some surprise that it had not been discussed in the Senate and by the press. I then regarded it as in many respects the most important portion of the treaty. Since then I have reexamined it, giving to the task all the time which my other duties permitted, and prompted by the determination to comprehend, if possible, the full scope and extent of its provisions.

Yesterday I gave close attention to the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] upon this part of the treaty. He has reached a conclusion identical with my own, but bases it upon an entirely different line of reasoning. Stated concretely, the Senator from Wisconsin criticizes Part XIII because it does not protect and safeguard American labor. But he also challenges the constitutionality of some of the articles, and in that respect I am disposed to accept his contention. Without repeating what I said last August, I shall consider Part XIII as an integer of the league and its relation to the Government and people of the United States, together with certain changes by way of amendment already in contemplation. For I am persuaded that Part XIII as now constructed contains the framework of a supernation, armed with certain conditional powers of administration, both executive, legislative, and judicial, including the power to summon a member upon the complaint of any industrial organization, of the governing body, or of any delegate to the general conference, who may charge it with failure to enforce its covenants to the bar of its commissions of inquiry and pass judgment upon it.

Treaties between nations are stated by a competent authority to be "unconstrained acts of independent powers placing them under an obligation to do something which is not wrong." As understood by writers upon international law, a treaty constitutes a pact or agreement between two or more nations acting in their sovereign capacity and competent to make and observe the covenant.

The pending treaty purports to be one of 27 nations with Germany, but it as well includes a segment or class of people common to all of them, and that the wage-earning class. These are lifted from the common mass of mankind and given a distinct individuality in the treaty, which confers upon them certain rights and privileges in recognition of what is said to be their peculiar need, and of course in the interests of a permanent universal peace. That is the remarkable feature of Part XIII; one hitherto unknown in the treaty agreements negotiated heretofore between sovereign nations.

Part XIII was not drafted by the Versailles congress. The Senator from Wisconsin told us yesterday of its origin. It was drafted by a commission, representing several nations, not exceeding 9 or 10, and consisting in the aggregate of about 15 delegates. These delegates were the representatives of, and identified with, the class to which Part XIII relates. I think it may be assumed that men empowered to draft an agreement in their own interest will carefully and vigilantly safeguard that interest, whether the agreement be between individuals or between nations. That is human nature. I am not criticizing, I am commending it, but I emphasize the fact that in the preparation of Part XIII the principal thing in view was not permanent peace among the nations, not the welfare of all mankind, except as that welfare might be common to the class for whose benefit Part XIII was specially designed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRANDEGEE in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Will the Senator permit me in that connection to call attention to the fact that the five great nations, constituting the power of decision in the peace conference, were represented in this legislative commission of which he is now speaking?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; that is, the United States, the British Empire, France, Italy, and Japan.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Yes; and of course they held the controlling power on the commission.

Mr. THOMAS. They were the controlling power.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. They were represented by two delegates each to whom were added——

Mr. THOMAS. To whom were added the representatives of four other nations.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. To whom were added the representatives of four other nations.

Mr. THOMAS. Belgium, represented by two delegates; Cuba, Poland, and the Czecho-Slovak Republic, represented by one delegate each. That is correct.

Mr. OWEN. Was it a unanimous report?

Mr. THOMAS. I think the report was unanimous. It would, perhaps, be more correct to say that the report was made by the president and secretary by the direction of the commission.

Upon the return of Mr. Gompers to America he stated, among other things, in discussing Part XIII, that "the labor articles of the treaty were drawn by labor men for labor." That is a very frank and clear statement of the fact. It does credit to Mr. Gompers, who gives the plain, unvarnished truth to the people. A treaty or a part of a treaty drawn by a certain class of men for themselves, whatever their occupation, is not in essence intended for the peace of the world or the welfare of mankind, but it is intended for the benefit of that selected portion thereof authorized to negotiate articles for their peculiar interest. Indeed, Part XIII begins and concludes with recitals supporting this contention. The preamble reads:

Section I.

ORGANISATION OF LABOUR.

Whereas the league of nations has for its object the establishment of universal peace, and such a peace can be established only if it is based upon social justice;

And whereas conditions of labour exist involving such injustice, hardship, and privation to large numbers of people as to produce unrest so great that the peace and harmony of the world are imperilled; and an improvement of those conditions is urgently required; as, for example——

And so forth.

Turning now to the concluding article in this part of the treaty, I read:

Article 427.

The high contracting parties, recognising that the well-being, physical, moral, and intellectual, of industrial wage earners is of supreme international importance, have framed, in order to further this great end, the permanent machinery provided for in Section I and associated with that of the league of nations.

These gentlemen regarded that section of humankind which they represented and were identified as needing special international regulations for their welfare because their "well-being, physical, moral, and intellectual," was "of supreme international importance"; and when we ratify this treaty we commit the United States to an official and irrevocable indorsement and recognition of that recital. So far as it goes, the recital may be true; but I contend that the well-being of the industrial wage earner, either in the United States or elsewhere, is of no more "supreme international importance" than is the welfare of the farmers, the intellectual wage earners, the merchants, and the manufacturers of the world. All are of equal importance in all well-regulated and law-abiding communities; and I question the propriety or the justice of incorporating such a distinction in a treaty, however important it may be for the peace of the world, for it unquestionably confers upon the particular class thus distinguished the right not only to insist but to assume and to base the assumption upon an international covenant that their welfare is of an importance superior to and beyond that of all other classes of men and therefore entitled to special consideration.

I am unable to harmonize such a declaration with the general doctrine of democracy which is founded upon the principle of equality and dedicated to the principle that the welfare of all men is the first duty of governments. If this war was fought "to make the world safe for democracy"—an assertion which I have sometimes questioned—the end for which our blood and treasure were expended in unstinted measure must be ignored, if we are to supplement our victory by crystallizing into a treaty of peace the official recital that one part of the people of the world is of supreme international importance as compared with all other parts thereof.

If in place of the words "industrial wage earners," in section 427, we inserted the word "farmers," the assertion of the sentence would be equally true; and when we consider that in the United States there are 4,000,000 unionized wage earners and 13,800,000 farmers, numerically speaking, it would be more true. We might substitute for the words "industrial wage earners" those which are descriptive of any other class, and it would be true; but if we did, we would be accused of class discrimination and warned that its elevation by treaty covenant instead of securing would inevitably disturb the future peace of the world. Let us not forget that these recitals are a part of the treaty and part of the league covenant. Once ratified they may stand for all time as the solemn recognition by the world of an international class distinction, which can not well be recalled, and which will sooner or later vex the peace of the world.

The basis and justification for Part XIII, as stated in its beginning and at its close, emphasize a fundamental objection to its integrity.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Does not the Senator from Colorado see a relationship between the recitals which he is now criticizing and the beginning of the second paragraph of section 1 of Part XIII? Ought not the two really to be read together? Does not the Senator think that the words in article 427, "Recognizing that the well-being, physical, moral, and intellectual, of industrial wage earners is of supreme international importance," ought to be taken into account and construed with the recital in the first two lines of the second paragraph of section 1 of Part XIII, where it is stated, "And whereas conditions of labor exist"——

Mr. THOMAS. I did read them together, Mr. President.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I know the Senator did; but he is directing his criticism particularly against the language of article 427 and has departed from and quite lost sight, apparently, of the recitals in section 1, where it is said, recognizing an existing condition, which I think will not be disputed by the Senator from Colorado:

> And whereas conditions of labor exist involving such injustice, hardship, and privation to large numbers of people as to produce unrest so great that the peace and harmony of the world are imperiled.

Therefore, does it not follow logically that a better condition is necessary; that "the well-being, physical, moral, and intellectual, of industrial wage earners is of supreme international importance," taking into account the recitals made in section 1?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, to that suggestion I have two replies. The first is that the better condition can be obtained without a species of international class legislation. Moreover, assuming the truth of these recitals, the structure of Part XIII is such that if put into full operation it will not better but reverse those conditions. The rest of mankind will then more likely be involved in these conditions of injustice, hardship, privation, and so forth, which now are said to imperil the peace of the world because imposed upon labor. The other answer is that the conditions mentioned, while existing in many places in the world, is not peculiar to the wage earner; and I shall contend hereafter that Part XIII is designed for the organized wage earners of the world only and not for the vast body of wage earners outside the pale.

[At this point Mr. THOMAS yielded to Mr. PENROSE, who suggested the absence of a quorum, and the roll was called.]

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, whatever the final action of the United States may be with regard to this treaty, whether Part XIII remains a part of it or not, the conditions recited in section 1 of Part XIII, however deplorable in fact, will not be effaced. They may be mitigated; they may be changed; but, in my judgment, they will be accentuated, and in the United States particularly; for it is as true to-day as at the dawn of creation that an equalizing process can only be made effective downward. You may raze the mountain to the plain; you can not elevate the plain to the summit of the Sierras. The surface of the ocean is the standard from which all heights and depths are measured, and the general mass of mankind must always furnish the standard for any leveling process designed to secure equality.

I may say, in passing, that the expressed purpose of Part XIII to produce strict uniformity in conditions of labor throughout the world is impossible and would be grotesque if it were not pathetic. It may be done through years of suffering, of oppression, and of agony, by processes with which Russia has become unhappily familiar, by the decimation of the human race and the return to primitive conditions, but when it is over the level will be that of China and India, not that of the United States.

In his great work upon "Liberty and Democracy," Mr. Lecky has demonstrated with the precision of a problem in Euclid that democracy and liberty are inconsistent, but that democracy and equality are synonymous. Liberty consists in the right to exercise every power with which a man has been endowed, either by nature or by acquisition, of course in recognition of and limited by the exercise of a similar right in every other citizen. That does not produce equality. It is the antithesis of equality; it is liberty, which does not consist with pure democracy. It is a remarkable fact that in all of the writings, speeches, and public documents of Abraham Lincoln you can not find the word "democracy" except as descriptive of a political party in America.

When Mr. Jefferson founded the Democratic Party, he properly christened it "the Democratic Republican Party"—a democracy governed through a republic, a representative government; and it was that to which Mr. Lincoln devoted his life, and in whose preservation he suffered martyrdom. We may pile treaty upon treaty, and convention upon convention, in the vain task of establishing strict uniformity in labor conditions in the world; but in the end we shall confront the fact that in their practical operation the high standards reached in advanced countries like the United States and Canada must give way to those lower ones more universally prevailing or the end will never be attained.

Moreover, Mr. President, the hard conditions of labor, said to involve injustice, hardship, and privation to wage earners, are just as common to other classes and conditions of men, and particularly in this country; as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] suggests, much more common with some of the others.

If Part XIII assumed to separate the great farming class of the world from the rest of mankind, and give them international rights of conditional legislation and power to enforce their covenants, labor would justly complain. Indeed, the effort was made at this congress to include the farming elements of the world in the new dispensation. That was vigorously contended for by the delegates from France and from Italy, but unsuccessfully so. If the manufacturing class were so selected and favored, all other conditions of men would protest. So of any other class except the wage earners. I have been amazed, Mr. President, that this differentiation between millions of human beings from all other human beings in a great State paper, and their endowment with privileges and rights of legislation and of recognition not accorded to all, has passed almost unnoticed in the Senate or by the public, while months have been devoted to the consideration of Part I of the league, although Part XIII is another and an equally essential portion of it.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if he knows what countries objected to this particular recognition of the farmers to which he has just referred?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not remember the report clearly, but my recollection is that the others objected.

Mr. GORE. All of them?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. I will be glad to furnish the Senator with a copy of that report, if he would like it.

Mr. GORE. I would thank the Senator for it.

Mr. PENROSE. Does the Senator realize that this provision was considered and favorably passed on without a full realization of what it meant?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am satisfied that those who drafted Part XIII knew well what it meant.

Mr. PENROSE. I have no doubt that some of the conspirators did.

Mr. THOMAS. But I can not understand its adoption by the congress at Versailles in its present form upon any rational hypothesis.

Mr. PENROSE. The reason why I ask, Mr. President, is that I think it ought to be realized fully by the Senate, for instance, that this provision was indorsed at a meeting at Atlantic City by the American Federation of Labor. Since then several of the heads of different trade-unions have called on me to tell me that the convention did not understand the full effect of this part of the treaty, and repudiated it, asking me to vote against it.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I know, Mr. President, that some sections of organized labor have become impressed, and I am glad to know it, with a realizing sense of the dangers involving them in this part of the treaty. The farmers are against it, so far as I have heard from them, and well they should be. The seamen are against it.

Mr. PENROSE. I believe, Mr. President, that if it was understood there would not be a trade-union in the United States that would not repudiate this article.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I hope to demonstrate before I resume my seat that one or two of these articles are plainly and palpably unconstitutional, and that we can not vote to accept Part XIII consistently with our oaths of office.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator will recall that the Committee on Foreign Relations, in adopting a number of reservations which are to go into and become a part of the treaty, adopted No. 4.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I am aware of that.

Mr. McCUMBER. And Part IV very briefly states that—

The United States reserves to itself exclusively the right to decide what questions are within its domestic jurisdiction and declares that all domestic and political questions relating wholly or in part to its internal affairs, including immigration, labor, coastwise traffic, the tariff, commerce, the suppression of traffic in women and children and in opium and other dangerous drugs, and all other domestic questions, are solely within the jurisdiction of the United States and are not under this treaty to be submitted in any way either to arbitration or to the consideration of the council or of the assembly of the league of nations, or any agency thereof, or to the decision or recommendation of any other power.

Mr. THOMAS. I am familiar with that reservation.

Mr. McCUMBER. The only virtue I see in this entire labor provision is its impotency, that it is unworkable; and, conceding that, does not the Senator believe that if this reservation is adopted it will really dispose of the whole matter?

Mr. THOMAS. It will be much better than nothing, Mr. President. I have studied that reservation carefully, and I have prepared and introduced four of my own. But I am not at all satisfied that they go far enough or that they can go sufficiently far to cure many of the objections that I see to it. Nor do I regard this part of the treaty as impotent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly the Senator must agree that everything which pertains to labor is purely a domestic question; and doubly so in this country, where it is domestic as to the Federal authorities and still more so as to the State authorities.

Mr. THOMAS. That is very true.

Mr. McCUMBER. And the question can not be submitted either under our Constitution or, if this is adopted, under this provision to anybody else.

Mr. THOMAS. That is very true, Mr. President. But there is a practical side to this Part XIII which no reservation can reach. I refer to the expense of its administration. I believe I can show to the satisfaction of the Senate, before I am through, that the administration of Part XIII will cost fully as much as the administration of our own Government and require almost as large a staff of officials, servants, and employees as we use in our civil administration. No reservation has reached that feature, and I do not think it can be safeguarded in any other way than in rejecting the proposition in toto. Of course, I shall vote for the reservation, if this part remains in the treaty, and I hope that it will have the effect, in practical operation, that the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], in whose judgment I have every confidence, hopes for.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. KING. I heard only a portion of the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]; but, with the permission of the Senator from Colorado, I wish to make this suggestion: If Part XIII remains, the duty unquestionably would rest upon this Nation to do its part to carry out its terms, to appoint the delegates, and leave somebody to challenge the constitutionality of the action of this Government. Certainly the Senator does not take the position that if we adopt the treaty with Part XIII in we would refrain from doing anything because of the reservation of control over domestic affairs. We would attempt to reconcile a reservation with respect to domestic affairs with some sort of action taken under the treaty, and there would constantly be a conflict between the legislation which we enacted, or the steps which the Government took, and the contention that we were infringing on the Constitution and were violating the terms of the peace treaty because we were committing to this international tribunal matters that were purely domestic.

Mr. McCUMBER. With the permission of the Senator from Colorado, I will call the attention of the Senator from Utah to the next to the last paragraph of article 405, which paragraph makes the decisions of this labor convention advisory only, and especially provides that it shall be construed only in that light. Taking that into consideration, and in connection with a reservation that I believe will be adopted, I can not see that it will have any other influence than a mere advice or suggestion, which, by the terms of the treaty, must be treated by this country only as a suggestion.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the interchange of ideas between the Senator from Utah and the Senator from North Dakota anticipates one feature of the argument which I have outlined, and which I will reach later.

Let me say, however, that this introductory statement leads us to the proposition that Part XIII creates a supernation composed of a particular class of people in the world and practically confers upon that class the authority to legislate conditionally and enforce its covenants after acceptance by members of the league. In other words, a scheme for the permanent peace of the world is linked with a covenant recognizing and exalting a class common to all the nations, upon the hypothesis that it is essential to that peace. That is what the treaty of Vienna did for autocracy and for the same reason. Where is autocracy to-day?

[At this point Mr. THOMAS yielded the floor for the day.]

Friday, October 31 (legislative day of October 30), 1919.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the international organization provided by Part XIII is to be framed by its own representatives in its own interest and then made permanent. The executive council and the assembly under Part I of the treaty are composed of representatives chosen by the member nations, and, while there is no limitation upon their tenure of office, it is presumably subject to the control of the appointing power.

In the framework of the organization under Part XIII the general conference is selected by the member nations in the proportion of two representatives of the Governments, one representative of employees, and one representative of employers. These are appointed also without limitation as to time of service, and, like the members of the executive council and the assembly under Part I, they are presumably under the control of the appointing authority. But in their selection there is this difference, that the employer delegate to the conference and the employee delegate to the conference must be chosen in agreement with industrial organizations which are most representative of these two classes of people. These delegates select the members of the governing body by the choice of eight delegates representing the principal manufacturing or industrial nations, the remaining delegates to the conference selecting four others. The remaining twelve are elected by the delegates to the general conference representing employers and employees, respectively, each choosing six representing their respective pursuits.

They hold office for three years and appoint the director who is an executive and administrative official, having the power of appointment and selection of all subordinate officials and employees of the organization.

Now, at first blush, the composition of the general conference would indicate an equality of representation between the members, on the one hand, and two classes upon the other, to wit, the employers and the wage earners. That apportionment was bitterly opposed by some labor organizations and by some of the members of the drafting commission because unfair and unjust to the wage-earner class. It was not, therefore, an arrangement which satisfied all representatives in that body, but the prospect of controlling the member delegates induced its acceptance. In his report to the Versailles conference, Mr. Gompers, referring to this feature of Part XIII, said:

Moreover, it was likely, especially in the future, that the Government delegates would vote more often with the workers than against them. If this were so, it was obviously to the advantage of the latter that the Government should have two votes instead of one, as it would render it easier for them to obtain a two-thirds majority, which under the Franco-American proposal would be practically impossible if the employers voted in a body against them.

This arrangement was accepted then because of the probability that the wage-earning class would be more likely than the employers to secure the cooperation or control of the delegates representing the member nations; and I think that this expectation will be realized, particularly in countries like France, Spain, Italy, and Germany, which latter has just been given representation in the conference, and other nations where the modern political labor movement is either in the ascendant or possesses a predominant influence in political circles.

Hence we may agree with Mr. Gompers that in practical operation the delegates to the general conference will be dominated by the interests subserved by Part XIII, and that they will sooner or later become the distinctive controlling feature of the international labor organization.

We have, therefore, as the official organization of the league of nations, first, an executive council consisting of the principal allied and associated powers and four other members to be chosen as provided by Part I; second, the assembly of the league of nations; and third, a permanent, powerful organization created in the interest of and controlled by a specifically designated section of the people of the world.

This is said to be necessary to a permanent and enduring peace. If so, it can be defended; but I affirm that there can be no enduring peace in a world whose people are subdivided by a treaty expressly distinguishing and discriminating some of them from the masses of mankind and endowing them with power to legislate in their own behalf.

The fundamental vice of autocracy, of oligarchy, of plutocracy is their domination by certain sections of the people; classes jealous of their own prerogatives and sternly opposed to their extension to others; governments founded upon injustice and inequality, therefore leading inevitably to revolution and insurrection. With the example of the world's history confronting the Versailles congress and with full knowledge of the eternal fact that governmental inequalities between the people produce discord and difficulty, it has deliberately crystallized into the proposed treaty that unfortunate distinction; and the result will be identically that which would have followed if any other class of people had been selected for its bestowal.

There can be no harmony between modern democracy and class distinctions in political life. I care not whether the discrimination falls in one or in another direction; it is the principle which is vicious, and through its operation peace and happiness can not endure.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator speaks of an organized effort in the interest of the laboring classes as a class distinction. Well, so it may be; but is it not a fact that every civilized government has found it necessary to legislate concerning the laboring classes in its own country? Has it not found that it was necessary to protect them from oppression, to protect them from certain dangers from which they were not able to protect themselves? The Congress has done it, every one of our State legislatures has done it, and I think it has been done in every civilized country, because, from the very nature of those who belong to the laboring classes, they have not been considered in a position to protect themselves. Out of that there has grown quite a distinction between countries as to labor conditions. We have found in this country, for instance, after having eliminated pauper labor, the claim made that pauper labor from other countries was coming into competition with our labor, because of goods imported into this country that cost a great deal less to manufacture than goods manufactured here.

Now, is it not possible for the Senator to see that if labor all over the world could in a measure be equalized, if child labor could be restricted, if the hours of labor could be equalized, that cause of friction between different countries might be eliminated; and would it not be a reasonable thing, if nations are entering into this arrangement for the good of mankind, to have these international conferences for the purpose of equalizing labor all over the world and putting a stop to this inequality of conditions and the disturbance of commerce as a result?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it is true that in every enlightened modern nation laws have been enacted for the protection of the weak and the unfortunate. They have also been enacted for the welfare of what is generally termed the laboring class. They have also been enacted favoring farmers and manufacturers. It is the duty of every government to protect, by equitable laws, those who can not protect themselves. No man questions the wisdom or the necessity of such legislation. It would also be a consummation of great benefit to humankind if an equality of conditions could be attained as to the wage earner all over the world. Such a situation would be as near an approach to the millennium, provided it eliminated discontent, as any human situation ever can be; but no scheme of man is sufficiently omniscient and powerful to accomplish such a benign result. I discussed that feature of world conditions yesterday somewhat briefly. I then sought to maintain the proposition that inequalities will always exist until some leveling process downward can be secured and acted upon which will prove satisfactory to mankind.

Mr. President, legislation by governments for the welfare and protection of the helpless and dependent should, and probably will, continue to be enacted, whatever the fate of this treaty; and such enactments, I trust, will be all sufficient, as in the United States they have proven more than sufficient, to reduce inequalities and extend protection. The analogy which the Senator suggests, however, does not exist. If in America the people were to establish a tribunal composed of and representing the wage earners, the farmers, or any other distinctive class, endowing them with the power to make their own legislative recommendations, to carry on their own governmental equipment, function governmentally side by side with that of the United States, and possessing the added power to cite the latter before the tribunals upon complaint made against it regarding its particular legislation, that would furnish some analogy to the edifice which is to be erected upon the foundations of Part XIII.

Now, every man of common sense knows that such an arrangement would prove inoperative. There can be no such thing as a dual government, equal in authority and in jurisdiction, anywhere. One or the other must become supreme, and in the interval between their establishment and the supremacy of the stronger there must be disorder, difference, conflict, and possible bloodshed.

It is not, therefore, the need suggested by the Senator from Nebraska that I am discussing, but the method by which it is proposed, in a world treaty, to accomplish that need; and that method seems to me so irreconcilable with all our notions of government, with all our experiences in the activities of a great democracy, and with every object sought to be subserved by the ratification of this treaty, that I am unable to give my assent to it.

Mr. President, the officials of the international labor office and the general labor conference and I suppose the other high officials of the organization will enjoy diplomatic immunity under article 7 of Part I, which I presume will extend to their households and subordinates. I have no objection to that as a general proposition; but the immediate application of the principle to affairs now existing in Washington furnishes an object lesson of the extent to which it can be carried, because here in the city of Washington are delegates to this first international labor conference from Germany and from Austria, with whom we are technically yet at war, and who last night, by an overwhelming vote, with but one dissenting, were admitted to full membership. They may be, and probably are, entirely free from any other purpose than that of serving their respective countries in this conference; but it is a startling fact that to-day in the city of Washington are these delegates, enjoying diplomatic immunity, from the Governments of Germany and Austria, with the peace treaty yet to be ratified. It is a modern instance of the lion and the lamb lying down together; it may be a precedent which time will demonstrate to be entirely innocuous; but, frankly, it is a sinister situation that to me seems most disturbing.

The disturbing feature is that the first conference under Part XIII, called in Washington before the treaty has been ratified, wholly disregards the conditions of membership imposed on the delegations of that organization by the express terms of Part XIII. These delegates must be confined to the members of the league, each being entitled to four, with their advisers. There is no thought of admitting Germany or Austria to the league in the immediate future, unless the announcements made heretofore by the Versailles conference are unimportant and meaningless. But these countries have had no difficulty whatever, treaty or no treaty, in identifying themselves with an international body to be established by it, although it prescribes the qualifications of delegates to that body to which they can not possibly conform. Mr. President, the labor conference now in session is not entirely responsible for this sudden, summary admission of delegates from enemy countries to its membership.

They are merely acting upon the recommendation of the Versailles conference, whose president and spokesman is Premier Clemenceau. On the 22d day of last May Count Brockdorff-Rantzau, in the name of the German delegation, sent a communication to the Congress protesting against the framework of Part XIII. I shall have occasion to refer to that hereafter. On the 31st of May Premier Clemenceau replied to that letter, and answering one of the objections said:

> 4. The allied and associated Governments have already decided to accept the idea of early admission of German representatives and to ask the Washington conference to admit them immediately thereafter to full membership and rights in respect to the industrial labor organization and the governing body attached thereto.

We have had recommended to us for ratification the framework of a treaty, supposedly the official product and the complete official product of the treaty-making powers at Versailles, which creates a body known as the general labor conference, which limits delegations to it and prescribes their qualifications. But a month and a half before it reached us that identical congress officially recommended the disregard of these qualifications by accepting representatives from countries which are not and for a long time can not become members of the league. I am unable, Mr. President, to reconcile this advice—and it is very difficult to comprehend to whom the advice was given, as there was no organization to receive it—with the express terms of a national compact, and particularly when that advice recommends the inclusion in the conference of the delegates of the two powers with which we are still at war. Here is an inconsistency which requires a higher intellect than mine to reconcile.

The press also announces that this conference, now in session, or some delegate to it, has recommended the inclusion of delegates from Mexico. Why not? Mexico, a disorganized country, is at least a friendly country, politically speaking. Her delegation should be more welcome than those of Germany and Austria; and if Mexico, why not every other nation on the earth, whether they be invited to membership in the league of nations or not?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does the Senator understand that the conference which is now being held here in Washington, to which the Senator refers, is called and held by virtue of the provisions of the league covenant?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; ostensibly so.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Who called it?

Mr. THOMAS. It is fixed by the recitals of Part XIII.

Some time ago the Department of Labor, through the President, called the attention of Congress to the probable convening of this body before final action was taken by the Senate upon the treaty, and requested special authority to invite these delegations here notwithstanding, and that authority was given.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator that the annex provides, under article 426, that—

> The Government of the United States of America is requested to convene the conference.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course; but the manner of its convening was, as I have said, by this resolution of the Congress conferring special authority in advance of final action upon the treaty. I am not prepared to say that the invitation was extended to Germany and to Austria, although it must have been, else their delegations would not have been selected and admitted. We do not know how they were selected. There may be two members representing the Government, one representing the employer class and one the wage earners.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. THOMAS. In just a moment. On the other hand, they may have been selected upon some other basis, which, under the circumstances, would be quite as lawful as though the provisions of the treaty had been complied with. Now, I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. The Senator must be aware of the fact that it is easy to make inquiry as to whether invitations were sent out by this Government to the Governments of Austria and Germany to send official representatives from those countries to this conference.

Mr. THOMAS. Undoubtedly; but the outstanding fact is that they are here, that they have been admitted, and that they have all the qualifications and powers of delegates to that conference that will be bestowed upon member nations when this treaty is ratified.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator see either any inconsistency or any impropriety, considering the purposes of Part XIII, in inviting the German and Austrian delegates to participate?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. The purpose of Part XIII, as I read it, is to equalize labor and labor conditions throughout the world, and inasmuch as the second object, which might be included under the second proposition, is to reduce the number of working hours throughout the world, and thereby reduce the output of labor, would it not be quite proper that they should hold Germany and Austria to the same conditions of six or eight hours, in order that the other nations of the world might be able to compete in their products? Is not that one of the purposes? I do not agree with their purposes at all, but is not that the purpose of Part XIII?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, at present I am not concerned with the purpose but with the abrogation of an important article of the treaty. I will refer later, before I take my seat, to some of the articles which comprehend a part of the purpose. But I contend there is no reason which would exclude Germany and Austria from membership in Part I of the league of nations that does not exclude them from membership in Part XIII. They should either be excluded entirely or they should be required to come in and enjoy all of the privileges and assume all of the responsibilities of the league as a whole. We must not forget that the two together comprise the league of nations; not one of them, but both. It becomes a complete entity only by the functioning of the executive council, the secretariat, the assembly, the general labor conference, the governing body, and the director. To admit our enemies to participate in two of these bodies and exclude them from the other two is a self-evident contradiction, and that regardless of the purpose to be subserved by the respective branches of this quadrilateral creation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator ought to suggest at this point that if these delegates possess such unlimited power as that now, in defiance of the terms of the treaty, and admit persons to participation who have no right under the treaty, it is a prophecy of what this organization may grow into in the future. It may seek the assumption of governmental powers far beyond that which is contemplated by the terms of the treaty, and it may admit members ad infinitum from various Governments of the world and various organizations until it may become a veritable imperium in imperio.

Mr. THOMAS. I shall refer to that later on, Mr. President.

Mr. KING. I want to suggest, if the Senator will pardon me, one thought in connection with the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER]. If this provision of the treaty contemplates the diminution of production or the reduction of production, it ought to be a very strong argument against the adoption of this portion of the treaty.

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator from Colorado will allow me, does the Senator from Utah doubt for a moment that that is one of its purposes? Does the Senator doubt for a moment that one of its purposes is to decrease the hours of labor throughout the great manufacturing world and thereby decrease labor's output?

Mr. KING. Probably that is the thought in the minds of some who are proponents of the plan; yet I can not conceive that the representatives of labor would be desirous of committing suicide and of working irreparable damage and injury to the entire world.

Mr. THOMAS. In this connection, Mr. President, it may be well to read into the RECORD article 387, which is the first article of chapter 1, and which provides for the permanent organization of this international labor body. It recites that—

> The original members of the league of nations shall be the original members of this organization, and hereafter membership of the league of nations shall carry with it membership of the said organization.

Of course, the converse of the proposition is equally obvious: There can be no representation without such membership.

Mr. President, I have very hastily and imperfectly sketched some of the consequences which may flow from the inclusion in this conference of the delegates from these enemy countries. The action of the conference, though ultra vires, seems to have the sanction of the Versailles conference.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President——

The PRESDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. THOMAS. I will in just a moment, if the Senator will pardon me.

The members from Germany may hold the balance of power in the conference and so determine its action. The United States has no representation in that conference, because it has not yet ratified the treaty; hence the inclusion in the conference of these outside delegations is done by those who have been commissioned to that conference from other nations, and they, therefore, have a greater authority and voting power, relatively speaking, than would otherwise be the case. Germany, though excluded from the first 26 articles of the treaty, may nevertheless enjoy the prerogatives of one of those articles and of the 41 articles of Part XIII, and Germany may, also, be one of the members of chief industrial importance from whose delegation one member of the governing body may be selected. I now yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator if he intends, before concluding his comments upon this part of the treaty, to advert once more to the suggestion of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER] that the underlying and fundamental purpose of Part XIII is to bring about a general, universal, and uniform reduction in the hours of labor, with its consequent effect upon productivity, and if that be the case may I indicate to the Senator another of the purposes of the treaty, inasmuch as the great powers of the reparations commission will be directed toward the speeding up of German productivity in order that Germany may be able to meet the extraordinary demands which have been laid upon her under the terms of the powers granted to the reparations commission?

Mr. THOMAS. I can not enter into the discussion of that phase of Part XIII at this time, although its importance is obvious.

In the speech which I delivered upon this subject on August 22, I attempted to analyze a number of the articles composing Part XIII. I shall not repeat that analysis, but rather attempt to supplement it by considering certain other articles which were then barely referred to and which I have since had occasion to examine at greater length.

I come to a consideration, therefore, of certain specific articles in this part of the treaty, because they illustrate, as nothing else can, the character of the proposed organization and the consequences, financial and otherwise, to the United States when they become practically operative.

Article 399 may be called the financial portion of Part XIII. I will read it:

Each of the members will pay the traveling and subsistence expenses of its delegates and their advisers and of its representatives attending the meetings of the conference or governing body, as the case may be.

All the other expenses of the international labor office and of the meetings of the conference or governing body shall be paid to the director by the secretary general of the league of nations out of the general funds of the league.

All the other expenses shall be paid to the director general by the secretary general of the league of nations out of the general funds of the league, and, of course, all funds must be furnished by the members of the league, doubtless in proportion to their resources. If that be so, the contribution of the United States to this fund will necessarily exceed, and very largely exceed, that of any other nation and perhaps of all the smaller nations combined.

It is well to consider what the expense of the assumption of any new enterprise may be, whether that enterprise be personal or national. There are many things which men would like to do and many duties which nations would like to assume, but which are not undertaken because of the enormous burden of expenditure essential to their accomplishment. I said yesterday, and I repeat, that once this international labor office is established under the treaty and equips itself for the performance of the activities which are imposed upon it, the employees essential to the accomplishment of the task and the expense attending its administration will parallel, if they do not exceed, the actual expenditures of the Government of the United States, exclusive of extraordinary expenditures entailed upon us by the war.

I now turn, in elaboration of that assertion, to article 394, which provides for a director of the international labor office, to be appointed by the governing body, subject to the instructions of that body, responsible for the efficient conduct of the office, "and for such other duties as may be assigned to him." That reads like the general-welfare clause of the Constitution.

Article 395 provides that—

The staff of the international labor office shall be appointed by the director, who shall, so far as is possible with due regard to the efficiency of the work of the office, select persons of different nationalities. A certain number of these persons shall be women.

The director, then, has the supreme appointing power, with no limitations of civil service, which may prove to be a blessing. His authority is absolute, limited only to the recognition of nationalities and of sex.

We can well imagine, from our experiences here, the influences that will be brought to bear upon this director, whoever he may be, to appoint everybody who wants to work for the international organization. I have already received a number of applications for indorsement of gentlemen who genuinely thirst for an opportunity to display their abilities under this new organization, and I have no doubt that as soon as the treaty is ratified these applications will come in, not by the hundreds but by the hundreds of thousands. What is true of the United States is true also of the world, for there are just as many people, relatively speaking, in Japan, Great Britain, France, Greece, Spain, and Belgium perhaps needing employment of this sort whose merits and whose influence will be brought to the attention of the director.

Let us see how many he may need, although, like other appointing powers, he may not strictly confine himself to the necessities of the situation. Article 396 provides that—

The functions of the international labor office shall include the collection and distribution of information on all subjects relating to the international adjustment of conditions of industrial life and labor—

That is a pretty big program—

And particularly the examination of subjects which it is proposed to bring before the conference, with a view to the conclusion of international conventions, and the conduct of such special investigations as may be ordered by the conference.

The proper collection and distribution of information upon all subjects relating to the international adjustment of conditions of industrial life and labor necessarily means its collection and distribution throughout the world. Inasmuch as we are now admitting enemy countries to this organization that assertion must be taken literally.

I have made a tabulation of the populations of those countries which participated in the making of this treaty, exclusive of Germany and her recent allies. They aggregated 1,210,007,605 people, to which must now be added the populations of Germany and Austria, making in round numbers 1,300,000,000 of people from whom these statistics and information must be collected and to whom they must be distributed—1,300,000,000 of people, covering an area of 31,330,414 square miles, including populations speaking more than 16 different tongues. The mathematical problem presenting itself here for solution is, given this task, how many people are essential to its performance and how much material? My prediction is that employees essential to the performance of this task will aggregate at least 1,000,000, and inasmuch as their activities are world-wide they must travel over the face of the globe; certainly all agents must familiarize themselves with these conditions throughout the territory of their own nation; the material acquired must then be sent to Geneva and there published and circulated.

Mr. NEW. Under frank.

Mr. THOMAS. I have no doubt that the franking privilege will be invoked, but whether it is or not we must bear the expense. The mails will be burdened constantly, overburdened most of the time, with thousands upon thousands of tons of so-called industrial literature, which not one man or woman in 10,000 will read and which not one man out of a thousand in most of the countries constituting the membership can read. To this vast army of agents obtaining and distributing this literature must be added those needed to print and bind it in appropriate form for mailing. Then the housing problem, somewhat acute here some months ago, but by no means so acute as it will be in Geneva, immediately presents itself. Where can shelter be found for this new industrial army of tax eaters? The commonest principles of humanity will demand that if they can not be found they must be furnished. And where can storage places be discovered for the constantly accumulating masses of documentary information? They are not in Geneva. Hence they must be built, and we will be required to supply the needed funds.

We must remember that international building should be appropriate to the dignity of this great supernation. The building program necessary to house the activities of this branch of the league will dwarf the building programs in the desolated parts of France and Belgium, not in magnitude or area but in prodigality of expenditure; and if the buildings are constructed on the plan of the six-hour day, five days in the week, and time and a half for overtime, an added increase in expense must be provided for.

But I have not finished reading the duties of this international labor conference. The article proceeds:

It will carry out the duties required of it by the provisions of this part of the present treaty in connection with international disputes.

These international disputes, Mr. President, will be countless as the sands of the sea once this treaty is ratified. Be it remembered that under Part XIII any organization of wage earners, I care not how small or how remote, is given authority to complain that any member nation is not effectuating or observing its covenants, including those which may be subsequently adopted, whereupon the nation complained of is required to make answer at Geneva. If the horseshoers' union in Melbourne, Australia, feels that the United States Government has been derelict in its observance of one of these covenants it may cable or otherwise communicate its grievance to the governing body, upon which the United States will be respectfully asked to show cause why the complaint of the horseshoers' union should not be affirmatively considered.

When we contemplate that what is true of the instance suggested is true universally, and that complaints against the enforcement of the law, many of them doubtless well founded, are one of the common conditions of our domestic industrial life, and when we further consider that any member of the conference, as well as the governing body itself, may also summon nations to the bar for similar reasons, we may be sure of a constant procession of complaints, notices, and trials, each crowding the heels of the other, thus creating an activity of investigation irritating in the extreme and expensive to the last degree.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand the Senator from Colorado, my analysis of the provisions, such as I have been able to give, led to the same conclusion—that is, that any labor union anywhere can bring the United States or any other country to the bar of this international conference.

Mr. THOMAS. That is a fact. That power is given it by article 409 of Part XIII. But this labor office must also—

Edit and publish in French and English, and in such other languages as the governing body may think desirable, a periodical paper dealing with problems of industry and employment of international interest.

"A periodical paper" may include a paper issued every year, every month, every week, every day, or every hour. It is safe to say that such a periodical, "dealing with problems of industry and employment of international interest," will be produced in rapid succession, weekly if not daily. To print it in French and English is provided expressly, but discretion is given to print also "in such other languages as the governing body may think desirable."

I have called attention to the fact that there are 16 or 17 languages involved in the membership of this proposed league, and certainly those who can not speak English or French will not be satisfied until this periodical is translated and printed in their own language. There is no question, therefore, that it will accommodate itself to the linguistic necessities of all the members of the league; and its circulation among thirteen hundred million of people—and I have no doubt it will be fully circulated—gives added and eloquent suggestions of expenditures of the first magnitude.

We must in this connection also visualize the magnitude of the printing or publishing department of this league. It costs us $8,000,000 a year to run the little Government printing establishment here; what will it cost to publish a periodical in 17 different languages and to be circulated among thirteen hundred millions of people? We shall have to establish a printing house of rather formidable dimensions and employ a printing force almost equal to the population of Switzerland, and quadruple the world's postal capacity to accommodate this periodical. If it is necessary to permanent peace, let us have it; but if it is not, let us not commit ourselves to it without fully comprehending the financial burden this international labor office will impose upon the already overburdened taxpayers of the world. I warn my countrymen that this new obligation will take billions from their pockets with no compensating advantage.

There is another feature of this proposed publication which I desire to impress upon the Senate. The contributing nations will have nothing to do with dictating or controlling the substance of its contents. It may publish the wildest and most anarchistic doctrines ever penned by man; it may advocate extremes of revolution; it may adopt and disseminate the doctrines of I. W. W.ism over the world, while those who pay the bill have nothing to say, either as to what shall be printed or where it shall be sent. I can conceive of no more formidable scheme for subjecting the rights and the property of the world to the propagation of any doctrine or any proposition, however irresponsible its authors or however dangerous its character.

Mr. President, I have made no estimate of the aggregate cost involved in the administration of this international labor office, but I have no hesitation in again affirming that the cost will equal, if not exceed, the annual expenditures of the Government of the United States, and most of it must come from the pockets of our people, since we can better respond to such a demand than any other nation, and that will be one of our obligations under the league. Unless I can be convinced that this enterprise is absolutely essential to the welfare of all mankind, I can not accept it. Its expense is prohibitory, its usefulness may well be challenged, and its potentiality for disturbing instead of promoting the peace of the world is almost unbounded.

Mr. President, there is another feature of article 396 to which I will briefly refer. The concluding sentence is:

Generally, in addition to the functions set out in this article, it shall have such other powers and duties as may be assigned to it by the conference.

That is as broad as language can be—"in addition to the functions set out in this article it shall have such other powers and duties as may be assigned to it by the conference." The conference, in other words, is thus endowed with authority to assign such powers and impose such duties upon the international labor office as it may deem necessary or desirable. It may be said that there is a limitation—a constitutional limitation, if you please—existing in some countries which would necessarily restrict the exercise of this authority; but I do not believe that the international conference will be very keen to observe such limitations if they should conflict with any determined purpose of its own or with any object which, in the opinion of a majority—and it will require but a majority to act under the section, as I shall show—should be tested; I do not believe their compunctions would be so great as to restrict or limit their action; and we may be sure that any power or duty which the conference assumes to place upon the international labor office will be accepted by that office and the power will be exercised or the duty will be performed, as the case may be, since nations challenging the power or the duty may be haled before the commission of inquiry by any industrial authority which may be interested in the problem and impatient of objections to its attempted solution. No more comprehensive grant of authority can be found in the charters and constitutions of all time. Its abuse is as sure as the procession of the seasons. The most conservative body clothed with such authority would in time wield it to the undoing of some one. The most radical of all bodies, as these conferences will surely become, will eagerly welcome the opportunity to reform the world by a fanatic and unbridled exercise of every scheme appealing to their sense of social justice.

Mr. President, I have said that this power can be conferred upon the governing body by a majority of the conference. I am aware that it is provided that no recommendation shall be adopted by the conference unless it shall receive a two-thirds vote. But I find in article 403 this very simple but very startling provision:

The conference shall regulate its own procedure, shall elect its own president, and may appoint committees to consider and report on any matter.

Except as otherwise expressly provided in this part of the present treaty, all matters shall be decided by a simple majority of the votes cast by the delegates present.

The voting is void unless the total number of votes cast is equal to half the number of the delegates attending the conference.

Unless my memory betrays me, the requirement of a two-thirds vote is confined to the consideration of items in the agenda. As to all other matters, then, a majority vote of the delegates present, provided 50 per cent of them shall be present, is sufficient to carry any measure. We may, therefore, have imposed upon this international labor office by one or two votes in excess of 25 per cent of the total number additional powers and duties the character of which we can not foresee, the consequences of which we can not anticipate, the expense of the administration of which we can not forecast, but which may be of vast importance to all mankind and may seriously affect the peace of the world.

Mr. President, it seems incredible that these provisions should have been deliberately accepted and crystallized into the structure of the treaty by a body of statesmen supposedly representing the intellect and the experience of all civilized nations, and I can not account for it except upon the theory that the pressure of labor unrest and the threat of social and political disturbance was so imminent in Europe that the congress yielded to the situation, abandoned the exercise of their judgment, and trusted to fate for a peaceful result. We are in no such situation thus far, and it is my earnest prayer that this Nation will never be awed into the enactment of legislation which does not conform to the measured judgment and demand of duty upon those in authority.

I come now to a brief consideration of article 423. If I can distinguish the greater importance of one of these articles from the others, I would select this article:

Any question or dispute—

Any question or dispute!—

relating to the interpretation of this part of the present treaty or of any subsequent convention concluded by the members in pursuance of the provisions of this part of the present treaty shall be referred for decision to the permanent court of international justice.

Every question, every challenge to the justice, the legality, or the constitutionality of any part of this part of the treaty or of any subsequent convention concluded by the members in pursuance thereof is to be subject to the jurisdiction of an international tribunal not yet created and from which there can be no appeal!

Mr. President, this article, if ratified, constitutes an unconditional surrender of the judicial functions of the Government of the United States to an international tribunal. It substitutes that tribunal for our own Supreme Court, as to Part XIII of the treaty, clothing it with authority to determine ultimately and finally every question and every dispute which may confront us in the future, as this part shall function once it has been ratified. Do you tell me that the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly decided that we can not enact a treaty in contravention of our Constitution, and that, if we do, the treaty, to the extent that it so conflicts with the organic act, is void? Of course, it could reach no other decision, for we have no more right in the exercise of the treaty power in the Senate to disregard the limitations of the Constitution of the United States than we have to disregard them in the consideration of bills presented for enactment into law. Would the Supreme Court assert its authority regardless of this provision of the treaty? Certainly, and successfully; but, Mr. President, with the organized power of the international labor unions behind them, with the great and irresistible influence which such bodies even now wield, with competing and interested nations behind them, with their powers of strike and boycott, who can say what might result from a conflict of authority such as I have suggested? We may be sure the international tribunal will assert its jurisdiction once it has been created and that it will be sustained by the truculent influence of the international labor office; hence the collision with this country becomes inevitable.

In the end we might triumph. In the end we would triumph, if the Nation is to survive; but in the interval the difficulties, the turmoils, the anxieties, the apprehensions, the strife, which must ensue from such collision of authority, can well be imagined.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] only three days ago emphasized the unconstitutionality of section 423. I indorse every word that he said upon the subject, and I am unable to understand those mental processes which can reconcile an affirmative vote for that article in Part XIII with an oath to support the Constitution of the United States. If we had the power to do it we should not, for it is an obvious truth that we can not afford under any circumstances to permit any other than our own tribunals to entertain and dispose of any question which may arise to disturb the even tenor of governmental authority.

I think those who have given me their attention will, if they accept my position even in part, agree that Part XIII goes far beyond Part I or any other treaty in history in what it proposes to effectuate and justifies my contention that the treaty, if ratified, erects under the provisions of Part XIII a supernation endowed with limited legislative, executive, and judicial authority to be exercised for the benefit of a small part of mankind, and necessarily superseding, to the extent that it operates, the sovereignty of those powers which ratify and accept the document.

There is another feature of this supernation thus created which I wish to briefly emphasize. It is this, that no responsibilities or obligations whatever are imposed upon the international labor organization by the provisions of Part XIII. It is given enormous powers but without limitations. That is not true of any country in the world which professes allegiance to established governmental authority. It is axiomatic that power must be attended by responsibility. One of the great difficulties in the present industrial situation lies in the fact that these huge associations of men have acquired and they wield great power with no corresponding responsibility. We have exempted them from it, as far as we can, by legislation and encouraged as far as we could their repudiation of it.

They are not required to incorporate; they are not collectively or individually responsible. Collectively they are politically too powerful to be interfered with. The German Government which perished with the war was a government possessing large powers with comparatively few responsibilities. The distinction between those governments which function for the protection of life and property, and for the securing of happiness to mankind, and those which represent a privileged class, in the last analysis consists of the lack of equilibrium between power and obligation.

The labor conference may disregard the limitations of the treaty; they may propose, and some nations, regardless of others, may accept, covenants which in their operation may be extremely injurious. But whatever injury may flow from them, whatever oppression may result in consequence of them, whatever political, social, or economic disturbances may accompany them, there is no remedy against the authors of the mischief. These tribunals sit supreme and immune from the limitations of human responsibility, and because of that very fact, as all experience demonstrates, will seek to increase at all times and to extend every prerogative which may be invoked from the terms of this treaty.

Notwithstanding this, Mr. President, the so-called provisions of the treaty are criticized by a great many representatives of organized industry because too conservative and too restrictive. They demand the power of independent legislation and, as far as the body framing Part XIII could do so, they have been promised it.

In this connection let me refer for a moment to an article published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 17, entitled "Part XIII, Labor, Treaty of Peace with Germany," from which I read this extract:

> In July of this year there met at Amsterdam delegates representing the trade-union movements of the various European nations and the United States with the purpose to reorganize the International Trade Union Congress, and this purpose was effected. On nomination by Mr. Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. W. A. Appleton, secretary of the Confederation of British Trade Unions, was elected president of the International Trade Union Congress, succeeding Carl Legien, of Germany, who was president of the congress at the time of the outbreak of the World War. According to a historical survey of the proceedings of the Amsterdam meeting published in the Democrat, of London, edited by Mr. Appleton, directly after the adjournment of the International Trade Union Congress convention the delegates reassembled into an international socialist convention, in which all countries were represented by the same delegates they were represented by in the International Trade Union Congress, with the exception of the United States and its delegates. According to the same article or survey, the Amsterdam International Trade Union Congress adopted a resolution, binding upon all members, which set the objective in the international labor conferences to be held under the auspices of the league of nations to be the program of the international trade-union conference that was held early in 1919 at Berne, Switzerland. In this connection it is interesting to note that the American labor movement was not represented at the Berne conference. It is also just as interesting to note further that the international trade-union conference at Berne of 1919 declared that an international parliament of labor should be set up by the league of nations with power and authority to issue not only international conventions with the binding force of law behind them but also international laws which, immediately upon adoption, should have the same force legally as national laws in all nations.

That is to say, Mr. President, that the International Trade Union Congress which met at Amsterdam immediately upon adjournment resolved itself into an international socialist convention, the latter composed of precisely the same delegates, with the exception of those from the United States, and then adopted the program of the international labor union at Berne in June previous, wherein the right of independent and effective legislation by this international body was insisted upon.

On the 22d of May Count Brockdorff-Rantzau, head of the German delegation at Paris, and in the name of that delegation, addressed a letter to President Clemenceau upon this subject, protesting against the provisions of Part XIII because they disregarded the demands of the international conference at Berne, and also because delegates from all nations, whether belonging to the league or not, were excluded from participation in the conference. President Clemenceau, in replying to that letter upon the 31st, among other things, said, referring to the labor commission which drafted Part XIII:

> It also adopted a resolution in favor of the organization—

That is, the international organization under Part XIII—

> being given power as soon as possible to pass resolutions possessing the force of international law. International labor laws can not at present be made operative merely by resolutions passed at conferences. The workers of one country are not prepared to be bound in all matters by laws imposed on them by representatives of other countries; international conferences, as provided for under the peace treaty, are therefore at present more effective than international labor laws, for the infringement of which no penal sanctions can be applied.

Mr. Clemenceau attached to his letter a copy of the resolution which this commission seems to have unanimously passed. I read it:

> The commission expresses the hope that as soon as it may be possible an agreement will be arrived at between the high contracting parties, with a view to endowing the international labor conference, under the auspices of the league of nations, with power to make, under conditions to be determined, resolutions possessing the force of international law.

That resolution seems to have received the sanction of Clemenceau, speaking as the official head of the conference at Versailles. Does anybody doubt, Mr. President, that the next move to be made, and which will unquestionably be recognized and validated by a number of the members of the league of nations, will be the adoption of a convention clothing the international labor conference with powers of independent international legislation, if this treaty ever becomes an accomplished fact?

I have here an extract from a communication to the New York Times from the pen of Mr. William English Walling, a gentleman who was present at the sessions of the Berne conference, in which he gives an account of the purposes of the Labor Union International, as it is called; that is, the body which was represented at Berne. He says:

> The Labor Union International does not intend to lose time or opportunity. It has decided also to call a conference—which will probably be a regular congress of the entire world-wide organization, representing 17,000,000 organized wage earners. The possible effect of this meeting on the labor-union situation in America, England, and other countries, and even upon world politics, scarcely needs to be insisted upon.
>
> We can easily get a general idea of the position of this organization from the congress at which it was organized a little more than two months ago—a congress at which I was present and where I had every facility for becoming acquainted with the leading delegates.
>
> ULTIMATUM TO LEAGUE OF NATIONS.
>
> The chief action of this congress was an ultimatum to the league of nations, against which the American and British delegates alone protested. This ultimatum declared that the federation would endeavor to prevent the labor organizations of any nation from attending the league of nations labor conference unless two conditions were fulfilled:
>
> (1) All nations must be invited; and
>
> (2) The regular labor organizations affiliated with the international federation must be recognized in every instance as the representatives of the employees.

It is clear, Mr. President, that that part of organized labor for which the international federation assumes to speak will, if it has its way, be the only part of all the labor of the world permitted to participate in and which proposes to control the proceedings of the conference.

We have, then, a determination, first, to extend the activities of the conference so as to embrace all nations, whether members of the league or not. Second, that unorganized labor need not apply for recognition, nor organized labor, either, unless it submits to the domination of the labor union international. Thirdly, that the organization is to be officially accepted by the league as international spokesman for labor under the covenant; and, lastly, that independent power of international legislation shall be conferred upon the proposed international labor conference.

We are progressing indeed, Mr. President. This Part XIII, christened by the President as the magna charta of labor, is to be endowed with powers of international legislation having universal effect without regard to the conditions and to the sovereignties of the member nations, and it is to be organized and administered in the interest of a close organization of men assuming to be the exponents and the dictators of labor's destiny throughout the world.

Mr. President, think for a moment of the startling fact that only the representatives of Great Britain and of the United States opposed that program in the first instance. Contemplate the additional fact that Germany has been taken into this conference, which represents the ideas outlined by Count Brockdorff-Rantzau on May 22 in his letter to Clemenceau.

Then tell me whether it is extravagant to predict that these separate steps for the establishment of a wage-earning oligarchy will not be taken, and taken in the immediate future.

Mr. President, I must express my admiration for the ingenuity, the ability, the consummate business-like statesmanship displayed by organized labor from the inception of the league of nations idea down to the present time. They have had a program: they have known what they wanted; and they have used their power, their influence, and their ability for the accomplishment of that object. They have never lost sight of it. The permanent peace of the world is wholly subordinate to their ultimate purpose, to dominate mankind though it inevitably means a return to despotism, a despotism without responsibility, a despotism bound to function as all despotisms of the past have functioned, a despotism in the atmosphere of which republican institutions can not survive, a despotism inevitably operating as similar governments have operated in all the history of the past.

It is significant in this connection to reflect upon the fact that this international congress, synchronizing with the meeting of the international conference, and called to meet at Washington, is also now in session. That is not a mere coincidence; it could not be. It is designed to enforce the mandates so clearly outlined by Mr. Walling in the article to which I have referred, and I think it is safe to say that this congress will continue to synchronize with the meetings of the conference until the latter is absorbed or becomes the supine instrument of this labor union international which proposes—let me emphasize that again—to restrict the benefits of this new legislative authority to the members of the international federation only.

The greater part of labor in the world is unorganized. The greater part of it never can be efficiently organized. Under the program of this labor-union international are already created the rudiments of an industrial aristocracy, exclusive as all aristocracies are, but in this instance operating in each direction. Above it rejects all consideration for any other than its own membership. Below it rejects all consideration for any other than its own membership, that it may force into its membership every man and woman in the wide world who, by any extreme of definition, can be called a wage earner, and, of course, the situation will force, as similar situations have always forced, an enormous increase of membership, not from choice but from a necessity as inexorable as fate.

Mr. President, I shall not longer detain the Senate upon this all-important subject. I do not pretend to have covered all the ground. I could not do that if I should exhaust the remainder of the week in its consideration. But I hope that I have, although imperfectly, focussed the attention of the Senate to Part XIII, so comprehensive in its character and so important in its consequences, and I am sure it will give to this part of the treaty a consideration which up to this time it has not received.

I wish I could consider Part XIII as labor's magna charta. I wish I could find something in it to justify the casting of my vote for its acceptance. My judgment is not perfect, my view of public questions by no means so; but through all my life, both public and private, I have tried to stand for the man who needs assistance. I have tried to oppose wrongdoing and improper legislation without regard to the sources or the beneficiaries of the evil. I believe that every man should be made to comply with the requirements of the laws and Constitution of his country.

I am confident that the troubles now confronting us are largely the result of privilege hitherto bestowed by Federal and State governments with a lavish hand, creating inequalities of wealth and power, generating suspicions of the integrity of the Government and of its officers. Their evil results now threaten to overtake us. We must rectify, as far as we can, the evils of class legislation and avoid such serious errors in the future.

I want genuine labor to receive all that it needs for its protection and prosperity. I want all classes and conditions of men to stand equally before the law. I trust, whatever betides America, she may safely outride every stormy sea and vindicate her right to live by her attachment to law, order, the protection of the individual, the vindication of his rights, and the performance of his obligations. No such results can flow from the provisions of Part XIII of this treaty. It is not a magna charta of labor. It is a sentence of death to free institutions, a covenant of national suicide, an abandonment of our most cherished traditions.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harrison	McLean	Smith, Ariz.
Brandegee	Henderson	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Capper	Hitchcock	Moses	Smith, Md.
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Myers	Smoot
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Spencer
Cummins	Kellogg	New	Sutherland
Curtis	Kendrick	Newberry	Thomas
Dial	Kenyon	Norris	Townsend
Dillingham	Keyes	Nugent	Trammell
Fall	King	Owen	Wadsworth
France	Kirby	Page	Walsh, Mass.
Gay	Knox	Penrose	Williams
Gerry	La Follette	Phelan	Wolcott
Gronna	Lenroot	Phipps
Hale	Lodge	Pomerene
Harris	McKellar	Sheppard

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-one Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to offer two reservations, which I ask to have read, printed, and lie on the table for future use.

There being no objection, the proposed reservations were read, ordered to lie on the table, and be printed, as follows:

The United States assumes no obligation to preserve the territorial integrity or political independence of any other country or to interfere in controversies between nations—whether members of the league or not—under the provisions of article 10, or to employ the military or naval forces of the United States under any article of the treaty for any purpose.

The United States withholds its assent to article 147 and reserves full liberty of action with respect to any matter or controversy which may arise under said article relative to the protectorate proclaimed over Egypt by Great Britain on December 18, 1914.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, there are many provisions of Part XIII of which I do not approve. I will mention one which would be a serious objection to it. It provides for the circulation of literature without limit at the expense of the Governments members of the league. The preparation and distribution of this literature will be in charge of a commission of five, and certainly not more than one, if any, from the United States will be a party to its control. I would view with a great deal of distrust the character of literature which the labor leaders of Germany would prepare for distribution throughout the United States. I am unwilling through my vote to pledge my Government to bear the expense of distributing free the character of matter which I fear they would be sending all over the United States.

I mention this simply as one objection. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has mentioned quite a number; yet I do not think we should reach it by amendment. It may be that the provision suits the other members of the league; it may be that they want it; and it will be perfectly easy for us to declare by reservation that we will not participate in the organization provided for under Part XIII. The reservation excepting us from the operations of Part XIII could be made, and acquiescence in our retirement from that part of the treaty would leave them the privilege of going on with it by themselves if they want to; and, if they want to, well and good. I do not want it unless we are guarded a good deal more from the evil effects of Part XIII than the present provisions guard us.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Georgia a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from New Hampshire desires to ask me a question, it is perfectly agreeable to me that he should do so.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, I will preface the question with the observation that I was much disappointed that the Senator from Georgia did not pursue the illuminating course which I thought his brief remarks were destined to follow, and I should like to ask him if he can give to the Senate an outline of the character of menacing literature which he fears may flood this country at Government expense in case Part XIII of the treaty goes into effective operation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, in view of the Senator's experience in newspaper work and his broad observation of literature, it is entirely unnecessary for me to make a suggestion of that kind to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MOSES rose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. One moment. If the Senator had attended any of the meetings of the Committee on Education and Labor during recent examinations it has been making, or if he had heard recent testimony given before that committee of the literature that is being distributed even now by foreigners in our own country, he would have quite an amount of information about the character of the literature which might be distributed in the United States.

Mr. MOSES. But not at Government expense.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will commend the Senator to a careful study of the record of the testimony taken in the steel-strike investigation before the Committee on Education and Labor. I do not think it necessary to undertake to review it here. The Senator can get from it at least a suggestion of what I fear might be the line of literature prepared by foreign labor organizations.

Mr. MOSES. Oh, yes; I am well aware that the Senator from Georgia has had exceptional advantages to know about this matter by reason of his membership on the Committee on Education and Labor; I am also well aware that both he and I have been especially privileged in the matter of gathering information as the result of our connection with the newspaper business in this country; but, Mr. President, the printed word does not carry the weight of the spoken word. It is the letter that killeth and the spirit that maketh alive. I am sure that those Members of the Senate who are not privileged, as the Senator from Georgia is, to be members of the Committee on Education and Labor, and also journalists, would be very much enlightened if he would from his own deductions and in his own way tell the Senate exactly what it is he fears instead of holding up a nebulous, shadowy menace which leads him to reject in spirit some of the provisions of Part XIII of the treaty, and which leads him to think that menace can be avoided by a reservation rather than by more drastic action.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we know that there are many socialists among the labor leaders of Europe. We know that there are men who go even further than socialists among the labor leaders of Europe. I should object to the circulation of views at public expense throughout the United States which these men entertain. I believe that many of the labor leaders of Europe go further along lines that I do not approve than labor leaders in the United States, and I do not desire to see that foreign thought distributed in the United States at Government expense.

Mr. MOSES. Mr. President, that movement is beginning in this city to-day. I understand that the majority of the foreign delegates to the labor conference now sitting in this city correspond to the description which the Senator from Georgia gives of those foreign labor leaders whose influence he fears. They are sitting here by invitation of the United States Government, and an appropriation has been made to bear the expenses of this conference, and I feel quite sure that Government money and the Government frank will carry the utterances of those socialistic delegates all over the country, so that the condition which the Senator fears may result from the treaty already exists.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I should like to ask the Senator a question. Does he desire such literature distributed?

Mr. MOSES. Far from it, Mr. President. I have already stated my opinion with reference to the treaty, not only as regards Part XIII but other portions of it; and I intend to take action which shall be not at all subject to any misinterpretation as to what it means. I do not believe that reservations can meet many of the defects in this treaty which we are seeking to remedy; and it is on that account that I have thus far cast every vote of mine in the Chamber, as questions relating to it have been pending, for direct textual amendment to the treaty, concerning which there can be absolutely no dispute as to their meaning.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Nebraska and the Senate generally if it is not possible to arrive at some agreement as to a final vote upon the treaty, with all pending amendments and reservations, and so forth—to fix a day now when a final vote may be taken?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think the best plan would be for the Senator to prepare his request for unanimous consent, so that we can examine it.

Mr. FALL. If we can agree upon a date, the preparation of the request can be easily enough made. Then I will ask the Senator whether it would be agreeable to him that the Senate, if it chose to do so, should agree to a final vote upon this treaty, and all matters pending, by the 10th day of November?

Mr. PENROSE. What day of the week is that?

Mr. FALL. Monday, the 10th day of November. That would give us to-day and to-morrow and all of next week for discussion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that is a matter which we had better take up next week, then. I should like to see the proposal reduced to writing, so that we can examine it.

Mr. FALL. That proposition needs no reduction to writing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes; it does.

Mr. FALL. The details of carrying it out would need reduction to writing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We do not know how many amendments may be offered, how many reservations may be offered, or how many resolutions of ratification may be offered.

Mr. FALL. That is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We are very anxious, of course, to arrive at such an agreement; but it is a request which, from the very necessity of the case, must be in some detail.

Mr. FALL. My suggestion is that we definitely dispose of all reservations and amendments now pending and to be offered and the resolution of ratification on or before the 10th day of November. If the Senator will agree in principle, I have no doubt that we can agree upon a limitation of debate, and so forth.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the idea is a good one; but I should first have to see the details which the Senator proposes.

Mr. FALL. Then I would suggest a limitation of 10 minutes to each speaker on any proposition.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean to say, we would have to have a statement setting forth how much time should be devoted to each of the various propositions that may come before the Senate and limiting the number.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, is not the Senator able to say now whether he would agree upon fixing that date, or an approximate date?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not until I see the details of the unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. FALL. I will agree with the Senator now, beforehand, that the details of any proposition that I will make will be nothing like so voluminous as the treaty details.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator realizes that we still have some amendments to consider.

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And no one can tell how long those amendments may take.

Mr. FALL. But we can tell if we will fix a limit.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No; we can not even tell then. We might spend all the time on the amendments, right up to the last day, and the reservations have no time. I want a distribution of time on the various questions.

Mr. FALL. Why, Mr. President, upon any amendment that may be offered any Senator who desires to speak upon any proposition, either pending or not pending, concerning this treaty, as the Senator well knows, can use his discretion and speak upon it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, for the present I should like to see the Senator's proposal in writing.

Mr. FALL. Then, as I understand, the Senator declines now to agree upon a date?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator asks to have the Senator from New Mexico place his proposed unanimous-consent agreement in writing, so that we may offer amendments to it.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, of course I am now asking the leader of the protreaty forces upon the other side if he will agree to a date for a vote upon the treaty and all pending reservations and amendments, including the resolution of ratification.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I only want to say that I should be extremely glad if we could agree upon a day to take the final vote. The details, I think, can be arranged without difficulty, if we can agree on the day to take the final vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am very much gratified that the Senator is willing to propose such a unanimous-consent agreement, and if he will have it in shape on Monday we will be able to give him a very prompt answer.

Mr. FALL. A portion of the time will have been expended by that time, and of course the argument can be used that the date proposed now—that is, the 10th of November—would limit the time too much.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I should like to make a suggestion.

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It does seem to me that a tentative agreement, not formally made, might be had to vote by the day named by the Senator, and that the Senator from New Mexico or the Senator from Massachusetts could confer with the Senator from Nebraska, and the details could be worked out and formally submitted to-morrow morning. I believe that all Senators desire to conclude this matter by the 10th, as suggested by the Senator from New Mexico, and I can not doubt but that the details can be agreed upon.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I think it would be well to agree on the 10th; but I should not object, and I do not suppose the Senator from New Mexico would object, if we made it Tuesday or Wednesday, say, the 11th or 12th. We are not standing on one particular day, but we want an agreement, as early as possible, to take the final vote on the treaty and all reservations and amendments that may be offered.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I can understand why the Senator from Nebraska wishes it stipulated that a certain length of time might be had upon the reservations, but I do not think there will be a bit of trouble about that. I think the amendments will be disposed of this week. I think we will be on the reservations by Monday.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the point raised by the Senator from Georgia could be reached by providing for a vote upon the legislative day of November 10. Then we could prolong that day as much as might be necessary for the consideration of the reservations. Of course, this could not be done if the date is fixed for the calendar day.

Mr. FALL. I would much prefer the calendar day, so that we would know definitely, once for all, just exactly at what moment we were going to take the vote, and everybody could be here for that purpose. The legislative day might continue indefinitely.

Of course, I have no right, in the first place, to make the suggestion and convey the impression that I am making it by agreement or making it by authority. I am simply asking for my own information. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] is the leader upon this side, and is recognized as such leader. It has been suggested to me that we should agree now to dispose of all amendments this week. That is perfectly satisfactory to me. As a matter of fact, if I consulted my own personal desires in the matter, I would agree to vote at 6 o'clock this afternoon on the ratification resolution; I would agree to vote at noon to-morrow, at 6 o'clock to-morrow, or stay over until Sunday as the legislative day, and vote on Sunday, or Monday, or Tuesday, or Wednesday, or any day; but it seems to me certainly that another week might be sufficient in which to argue the reservations, the ratification resolution, and all amendments.

We are constantly told that the country is expecting us to do something. We are constantly being urged here that we must vote by a given hour upon a certain amendment; but whenever we seek to have a date fixed for concluding this matter entirely, the other Senators are not so insistent. In other words, an amendment is pending now. They would like, I presume, to have a vote upon it at this moment; but as is apparent from my suggestion and the reception which it has met, it would not facilitate the final adoption or rejection of this treaty.

It makes no difference how many votes you might agree upon now unless you can agree upon a final vote. A unanimous-consent agreement for a vote within five minutes on the pending amendment would not facilitate final action on this treaty, and that is what I am seeking to obtain. It is impossible, apparently. I will accommodate the Senator by writing down, or dictating to some one else and having written down, a proposition, and I will not wait until Monday to present it, either, unless the Senate adjourns over. I will undertake to present it to the Senator to-morrow at the latest.

Mr. President, I have referred to Part XIII of this treaty upon two occasions in the Senate. Of course, my remarks upon those occasions were rather incidental to a discussion upon other phases. I made the statement on the floor of the Senate, Mr. President, that by the first article of the proposed treaty we are delegating to a foreign body the power or right or authority to pass upon the external relations of the United States with all countries. Whether the council and the assembly of the league of nations constitute a superior or a supine government by the adoption of the league articles we are assisting in constituting a government unknown to the Constitution of the United States.

I referred in this connection to the fact that by the adoption of Part XIII of the treaty we are now attempting to confer jurisdiction upon an extra constitutional body in all the domestic affairs of the United States. It is impossible, or practically impossible, to imagine or to conceive any phase of domestic legislation which is not affected directly or indirectly by the labor problem. Mr. President, I am sorry to interrupt the proceedings. [A pause.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore rapped for order.

Mr. FALL. I realize the fact that an attempt, even in this body, to cite the Constitution of the United States in the last few days has become entirely uninteresting. I realize that the frame of mind in which some of my colleagues find themselves is such that they have no patience with a legal or a constitutional argument. I do not assume any extraordinary ability as a constitutional lawyer; but there are some constitutional questions involved in the consideration of this treaty which should be apparent to any ordinary intellect, whether that of a layman or of one who has had some experience in the practice of law.

The article which was just introduced and printed in the RECORD at the request of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], as I understood from his statement, was one attempting to point out the effect of delay in the adoption of this proposed treaty upon the domestic affairs of this country. Certainly we have not yet lost all interest in our domestic affairs, even if we are ready to delegate to a foreign body the control over our external affairs.

Upon several occasions, Mr. President, the lawyers of this country and the Members of both branches of the legislative department of the Government have been interested in questions touching the power of this body under the Constitution to make treaties of certain kinds. The last great discussion between the two branches of the Congress of the United States followed the treaty for the purchase of Alaska. For months the House of Representatives stood upon its constitutional right, as it claimed; and only by a compromise was it finally decided that the Senate of the United States had the constitutional power to ratify the Alaskan treaty. Great lawyers, recognized authorities upon international law, fortified by their opinion the contention of the House that a treaty such as the Alaskan treaty must be submitted to both branches of the legislative department of the Government. Never yet has it been held by a reputable lawyer, within my knowledge, that the Senate, one of the branches of the legislative department, and the administrative department of the Government acting together could constitutionally deprive another coordinate branch of this Government of its constitutional prerogatives. As I said, by a drawn battle, finally a compromise, the Alaskan treaty was ratified, and the amount provided for the purchase of Alaska was voted by the Congress. But never yet, to my knowledge, has it been contended that the Congress as a whole could take from the administrative department, or from the judiciary department, coordinate branches of our Government, the constitutional authority vested in either of those branches. Never has it been claimed that either could take from this department of the Government its constitutional power and authority.

Under the articles of the league of nations provision is made for the possible creation of a world court; but under that provision it is distinctly stated that the judgment or decision of that world court should be only advisory upon the council or the assembly. In other words, as to external matters, foreign affairs, treaty interpretations, or disputes of any character between nations, the opinion of the world court may be called for by the council or the assembly, but the final decision as to such matters rests in the political body itself, the council or the assembly, as the case may be, and the decision of the great international court is only advisory.

But we find in Part XIII that the decisions of this same court upon the domestic affairs of this country shall be binding, or else, if we do not comply with the decisions, that we, by virtue of such declination, become an international outlaw, subject to the penalties provided by the articles themselves. In other words, not by indirection, not by inference, but directly, by written word, as I construe it, the judiciary department of the Government of the United States is to be abolished by one branch of the legislative department, acting in conjunction with the administrative department, represented by the President of the United States, or else we suffer the consequences. We would become an international outlaw, agreeing beforehand that the penalties provided shall be visited upon us. We will not even be entitled to the privilege of retaliation against economic or financial pressure. We will not legally be entitled to recognition as a belligerent in event it comes to armed force. But we are an international pirate, an international outlaw, by our own agreement, if we do not cast aside and refuse to acknowledge here as applicable or binding in this country the decisions of our own great Supreme Court, and adopt the decisions of this international tribunal.

Mr. President, to me the facts are sufficient to condemn as unconstitutional Part XIII of this treaty. I pointed out some time since and quoted from the official document a note from Great Britain to this country in which, in answer to the contentions set up by the President of the United States that Great Britain had no right to call in question an act of the Congress of the United States upon a matter which we claimed was peculiarly within our province, Great Britain claiming that if enforced it would interfere with her treaty rights, the doctrine was laid down by Great Britain at that time that it was not necessary for her to await injury under the act of Congress; that it was not necessary for her to await the proclamation of the President putting in force the exemption as to the Panama tolls, but that the enactment of the legislation itself was sufficient to give The Hague tribunal jurisdiction of the question, although Great Britain had not been injured and might never be injured. In other words, under a treaty provision Great Britain maintained that she had jurisdiction to inspect, investigate, and pass upon our domestic legislation, and if, in her judgment, such domestic legislation, although never enforced, might threaten some treaty right which she claimed to have, that the jurisdiction to decide the case should be taken from the United States and vested in The Hague tribunal; and at the present time, under this treaty, it would be vested in a council and in an assembly where Great Britain has six votes to one of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. NORRIS. To what tribunal is the Senator referring as having jurisdiction to make that decision?

Mr. FALL. At the present time?

Mr. NORRIS. Under the treaty.

Mr. FALL. Under the treaty, in the event Great Britain claimed that the resolution which was adopted here yesterday might tend to violate any treaty rights which she had with us, the jurisdiction to try the question would be taken from our courts, and in the event we refused, under article 12, to submit the question to arbitration, automatically the council would take jurisdiction of the case. Then upon motion of either party the matter is referred to the assembly. So the political body, not even a judicial body, but the political body in the assembly, in which Great Britain would have six votes, would have jurisdiction of the case. Of course, if Great Britain and all her colonies were parties to the question, then they would be excluded from the decision, as would we were we a party; but if Great Britain alone was a party to the dispute with the United States, then her five colonies would have five votes and we would have none.

Mr. NORRIS. The purpose I had in asking the question was to determine whether or not this particular provision, Part XIII of the treaty, would be responsible for the bringing about of such a condition.

Mr. FALL. No.

Mr. NORRIS. That exists anyway without this provision.

Mr. FALL. This particular article would not be responsible for it, more than any other article, the difference being that the league article itself—that is, article 1—deals with matters in dispute concerning external relations. Article 13 would deal with all matters in dispute concerning domestic relations, and if Great Britain claimed that, even in a matter of domestic relations, the act of Congress was in conflict with any treaty of hers or with any provision of this treaty itself, it would take the jurisdiction from our own courts or any body constituted by ourselves.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator, I think, gives that construction upon the theory that, if the recommendation be one of legislation, no affirmative acceptance of that recommendation is necessary to bind the United States.

Mr. FALL. Affirmative action, I think, should be taken to bind the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator contend that Great Britain could invoke the jurisdiction conferred by Part XIII in any case where, previous to that time, the United States had not affirmatively accepted, either through ratification of a draft convention or by legislation, the recommendations of this conference?

Mr. FALL. Not under Part XIII. I did not intend to so state.

Mr. LENROOT. No; I thought not.

Mr. FALL. But under article 1, which I was discussing in connection with Part XIII, she could do so.

When the Senator from Wisconsin was discussing one phase of this matter a few days since I called his attention at that time to the agenda which had been written and agreed upon for the consideration of the conference now in session. In subsection 4 of article 426 it is provided that this conference now should take into consideration and might make recommendation or adopt drastic conventions concerning the employment of children, the minimum age of employment, employment during the night, employment in unhealthy processes, extension and application of international conventions adopted at Berne on the prohibition of night work for women, and so forth.

The point which I attempted to make at that time, in calling attention to this agenda, was that by legislation and by a large majority the Congress of the United States has heretofore adopted child-labor laws. I voted for the acts as they came up. I resolved any constitutional doubt in favor of the legislation because I thought it was proper legislation. I thought if the States themselves would not do what I conceived to be their duty with reference to child labor, then, in the interest of the people of the United States, the Congress of the United States should intervene. There was very grave doubt as to the constitutionality of the act expressed upon the floor of this body as well as upon the floor of the House, and finally, after its passage, the Supreme Court of the United States held that it was unconstitutional.

Now, undoubtedly the Congress, by resolution or otherwise, can affirmatively approve any recommendation which may be made by the international labor union. If they do so approve it, whether they approve it by mere legislation adopting the principle, or whether they approve it by enactment of proposed legislation immediately, whatever the means of approval may be, having once done it, in my opinion the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States is ousted and the jurisdiction is vested in the labor council and the high labor court.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator means, I take it, that literally under the terms of the treaty the jurisdiction would be ousted.

Mr. FALL. That is what I mean.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not mean, nor do I believe, that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court would be ousted concerning any draft convention or recommendation that the Supreme Court might find to be in violation of our Constitution.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, if the Senator votes for the ratification of this article, I think that, in so far as it is possible for him to do so, he is voting to oust the Supreme Court of the United States from its jurisdiction. As to the legal result of such vote, I agree with him that if the Constitution of the United States remains at all, you can not by this treaty oust the Supreme Court of the United States from its jurisdiction.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator will agree with me that the Constitution does remain in full force and effect, notwithstanding any provision of any treaty?

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I thought I was one, possibly, among the Senators here to occupy that position. Listening to the arguments, I had come to the conclusion that I was possibly alone, and I wondered if I was demented; I wondered if my mind was affected to such an extent that I alone yet believed that the Constitution of the United States would remain in force after the adoption of this treaty.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to get the Senator's idea. I am deeply interested in what he is saying in reference to this provision of the treaty. In order to get his idea, I want to put a concrete question to the Senator.

Mr. FALL. Will the Senator, before he propounds the question, allow me to continue for a sentence or two as to the matter which has just been suggested before I get away from that question?

Mr. NORRIS. Certainly.

Mr. FALL. I made the remark which I just have made concerning my position with reference to the Constitution of the United States for the reason that, having discussed first the constitutionality or unconstitutionality of the proposed league covenant, I later attempted in my poor way to take up some of the arguments made by Senators here as to the power to put in effect, the authority to enforce, any of the powers or rights or jurisdictions which we were, constitutionally or unconstitutionally, attempting to vest in a super or extra constitutional body. In discussing the question from that phase, I alluded to the historical debates concerning our own Constitution. There was no provision in the Constitution of the United States by which the United States itself could use force to put in effect in any State any act of the Congress of the United States. For 30 years or more in the Senate of the United States, in various political campaigns, and in the House of Representatives, it was solemnly and earnestly asserted that under the Constitution of the United States there was no power in the Federal Government to enforce in a State any act of the Congress of the United States. This culminated in the nullification resolutions and Andrew Jackson's threat to hang John C. Calhoun. The constitutional debates between Calhoun and Hayne upon the one hand—I mention only the more illustrious of the great orators and statesmen and constitutional expounders of the day—and Daniel Webster upon the other, I submit at the present day would be most instructive in forming literature for the perusal of some of the Senators.

As I called attention at that time, the remarks of one of the Senators from Tennessee and other Senators in this body were identical, almost word for word, sentence for sentence, and with the same punctuation marks, as the remarks of John C. Calhoun and Hayne in attacking the power of the Congress of the United States to enforce its acts in a State. I then called attention to Webster's answer to the proposition, that so long as they remained in the league, as they called it, so long as they remained in the Union of States, they could not nullify; that they might revolt with all the consequences of revolution, but they could not nullify; and, looking upon the effect of those articles as I do, differently from the position taken by eminent colleagues upon this floor and for whose great ability and legal knowledge I have the utmost respect, occupying yet as I do the position which I entertained when I first read this document, I say that their arguments are answered by Webster's statement that you can not fail to carry out the recommendations of the council without revolution. Your argument is the nullification argument of John C. Calhoun and of Hayne.

To me the statement that there is no power in the council or the assembly to enforce its decrees or its orders, whatever they may be, is John C. Calhoun's and Hayne's argument with reference to the acts of Congress, even to the tariff act, precisely. The broadest latitude is given them to deal with all affairs which affect the peace of nations or the peace of the world or the welfare of the world; they can make any order they please, any recommendation they please; but you say they are most powerless, with no force with which to carry it out.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPENCER in the chair). Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Supposing force were tendered to the league to carry out its decrees without any expense to itself?

Mr. FALL. I propose to touch upon that point, Mr. President, and I thank the Senator for calling my attention to it. I will refer to it now.

Under article 8 of the proposed league covenant, among other things, it is provided that armaments shall be reduced "to the lowest point consistent with national safety and the enforcement by common action of international obligations." It is useless to say to me that "enforcement by common action" was just simply language thrown in; that it means nothing, especially in view of the wording of article 9, to which I have called attention upon more than one occasion and to a portion of the history of which I want to call attention again.

Article 9, as originally proposed, was the Bourgeois French proposition. Bourgeois is now the French member of the council, having been recently appointed. His proposal, for which article 9 was substituted, provided for an international staff and an international army with which to enforce international obligations, but in words such as he used "the big four" would not adopt his proposition. They couched it in much subtler language, but in language, according to my judgment, practically of equal strength.

> A permanent commission shall be constituted—
>
> By a majority of the council—
>
> to advise the council on the execution of the provisions of articles 1 and 8.

That language has been referred to as amounting to nothing whatever; it has been stated that that simply had reference to the question of the entrance of new States into the league, upon the one hand, in article 1, and to the question of disarmament, which is incidentally referred to in article 8, upon the other. Senators in commenting upon it have most assiduously and carefully refrained or else wisely overlooked the provisions that the permanent commission shall advise the council as to "the enforcement by common action of international obligations"—a military commission.

Article 11, as I have insisted from the opening of this debate, from the day that the treaty was placed before us, and not article 10, is the heart of this treaty in so far as it affects our domestic rights, constitutional privileges, and the future destiny of the United States of America. It is provided in article 11, among other things, that the league, acting through the assembly or the council—and in this instance it is the council—

> Shall take any action that may be deemed wise and effectual to safeguard the peace of nations.

Still I am told, with a sneer, that these words mean nothing. Why? Because definitely it is not provided that they shall have, if they can secure the means, the inferential power to enforce their orders. When it is recalled that the Supreme Court of the United States has declared that the Union has the inferential power to enforce its orders, and that only the means need be provided, the answer to the question asked by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] becomes, of course, apparent. Means only are necessary. They have the power; they have the military advisers; they have been given the authority; their military staff has been provided. That is what the permanent commission provided for in article 9 amounts to. Disguise it as you may, the league has been given military advisers to aid in determining how the orders shall be executed. They have been invested with the authority to promulgate their orders; the only failure has been to provide the means which they may use to carry them out.

It is, therefore, a very pertinent question which is asked by the Senator from Connecticut. Suppose that Great Britain tenders the use of her fleet and her Army or that she tenders the use of her fleet and another nation the use of her Army. I ask the strict constructionists on the floor, who have been illuminating this question by their great wisdom, what provision is there in the league covenant which denies the right to use such a loaned force to enforce the obligations?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. NORRIS. If it will not disconcert the Senator in what he has to say, I wish to refer back to a question which I intended to ask earlier, although it does not pertain to the matter that he is now discussing.

Mr. FALL. I am glad to have the Senator from Nebraska ask the question.

Mr. NORRIS. I am very much interested in the Senator's discussion of the constitutional question involved as it pertains to any recommendations that might be made under the labor provisions of the treaty. I desire to base a question on the facts which the Senator himself has brought out. He has referred to the child-labor law enacted by Congress which was held by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional. Now, let us assume that the conference under the labor provisions of this treaty is in session, and one of the questions of which they have jurisdiction is child labor; let us assume that they recommend to us and to the other nations a child-labor law; and for the purposes of the question let us assume that it is the same law that Congress passed and that the Supreme Court held to be unconstitutional, and that, in accordance with the provisions of the labor part of the treaty, Part XIII, it is referred to Congress and Congress approves it. Now, we are brought up to the point where, through this indirect means, we have the child-labor law back just as we passed it and just as it was in effect nullified by the Supreme Court. What is the legal condition, then, of that law?

Mr. FALL. So far as the legal condition is concerned, Mr. President, it is difficult to answer except as to my own conception. I would unhesitatingly say that it was yet unconstitutional, because I maintain that the Constitution of the United States remains in force and can not be abrogated by Part XIII or any other provision of any treaty.

But what is the position, aside from my conception of the legal proposition? It is to be assumed—and it is no violent assumption—that the Supreme Court would again declare it unconstitutional, because I say to you, sir, that the Supreme Court is never going to allow itself to be deprived by treaty or by act of its constitutional powers and prerogatives.

Therefore in what position are we? We have agreed by resolution approving the recommendation of the labor conference that we would enact legislation to put it in force; we enact the legislation and the Supreme Court declines to allow it to be enforced. The people of the United States, in my judgment, are not yet ready to overthrow the Supreme Court of the United States. If they do, then, of course, they will change their Constitution, as the people have a right to change it; we have not. But we have agreed beforehand that in such event penalties shall be inflicted upon this Nation by an embargo or economic or financial pressure, and, according to my conception of the league of nations covenant, we would finally be subject to armed compulsion, because the league of nations is compelled finally to assist the labor council in putting into effect the provisions of the articles when they are violated.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further——

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Would we not be in this position: Assuming now that we had gone on as far as suggested in my original question and the power were exercised under this treaty to compel us to obey, after Congress had agreed as before stated, and the provision in regard to the infliction of punishment were about to be enforced, then we would be faced with the proposition that we would either have to defend ourselves against the league of nations or against the Supreme Court of the United States, would we not? We would either have to violate the decree of the Supreme Court of the United States or we would have to refuse to carry out the decree of the league.

Mr. FALL. Exactly.

Mr. NORRIS. And in that case we might get into trouble by being subjected to the punishments that are provided for in the treaty.

Mr. FALL. In the one case we must refuse to obey the decision of the Supreme Court, a coordinate branch of this Government, which means revolution, the overthrow of law, or we would be in rebellion against the league of nations and an international pirate, not to be treated under our own agreement even as a belligerent entitled to be protected by the rules of civilized warfare.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. FALL. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is not only in the league of nations covenant a provision governing the procedure referred to by the Senator, but in article 414 of the treaty there is a provision that a commission of inquiry shall be created to investigate these questions and make a report.

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. That article also provides that the commission of inquiry "shall also indicate in this report the measures, if any, of an economic character against a defaulting government."

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. SHERMAN. So that an embargo could be laid upon our commerce and port regulations could be enforced to exclude our ships from the harbors of any nation seeing fit to take such action, or other economic pressure that might be very burdensome could be applied to us. In the case of Great Britain can not the Senators see what a tremendous power in connection with foreign commerce would be afforded?

Mr. FALL. Yes; and, of course, Mr. President, the Senator recognizes that Great Britain has 24 votes in this labor league to 4 of the United States, and that in the final analysis, economic pressure not being sufficient to make us comply, the league of nations stands behind to compel our compliance, and, as I have said, even with armed force if such an armed force is provided by being loaned or otherwise; and we become an international outlaw.

Mr. President, the matter of the inquiry is one of the things I had in mind when I referred to Great Britain's declarations with reference to our domestic legislation which amounted to a statement that she had a right to supervise the acts which we pass here, and at any time when she conceived that one of those acts was an interference of a treaty with her she need not wait to be injured or have the act enforced to her injury, but that at once, under the treaty and The Hague agreement, our tribunals were divested of authority and authority was conferred upon the arbitration tribunal, which now would be the council and the assembly of the league of nations. Under this provision to which the Senator has called attention not only would that be the case—that is, that our domestic legislation would be subject to investigation and supervision to ascertain whether in any respect it might be an impairment of a treaty obligation—but, under this provision, it would be subject to inquiry as to whether it in any way infringed upon any of the provisions of Part XIII or any of the orders taken in pursuance of those provisions.

Why, Mr. President, to me it is almost academic to discuss these propositions. I must admit that I am somewhat at a loss to find words in which to convey my meaning, except words of the very simplest character, because the meaning of the provisions themselves is so apparent that they should need no discussion to emphasize them. It is hard to discuss an obvious matter.

But, Mr. President, another complication with reference to this article, as well as with reference to other provisions of this treaty, which affects us as it affects neither of the other allied and associated powers, the five great powers—another complication which has not been referred to; or, if so, only in the most casual manner, here upon this floor—grows out of the diverse population of the respective countries.

Great Britain has a homogeneous population. Ninety-five per cent of her laboring class are organized. In other words, organized labor in Great Britain numbers 95 per cent of the total labor of the kingdom. In this country organized labor numbers less than 8 per cent, or approximately 8 per cent, of the total. In Great Britain the labor is British labor, whether English, Welsh, Irish, or Scotch. In France the labor is French labor. In Japan it is Japanese labor. In Italy it is Italian labor. In the United States, what is it? We are told now that more than 60 per cent of the labor engaged in the great steel strike is foreign labor. What the number of foreigners may be now engaged or proposing to engage in the great coal strike, I do not know. I have heard it placed as high as 73 per cent. In my own State of New Mexico, from the coal mines of which we supply all the great smelters and the railroads of the Southwest, I will say that at least 60 per cent of the labor is foreign. In dealing with the other great nations with whom we are proposing to form an alliance, we overlook the fact that we have conditions confronting us here that they have not to confront. They have populations born and raised under their laws, the laws existing for centuries. Out of a total of 81,000,000 of white stock populating this country in 1910, thirty-two and a fraction million were foreigners, either foreign born or of the first generation.

I have here a table prepared from the census reports, official, but compiled from various sources in the reports themselves, showing not only the foreign and first-generation population in 1910, but even, as it has been drawn for me, showing the numbers of such population by race; and after referring to it for a moment in passing I am going to ask that it may be printed at the conclusion of my remarks on this point for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. FALL. This data is taken from the census reports of 1910.

Out of a total white stock of 81,000,000 in the United States, the foreign-born population at that time numbered 13,345,545; of foreign parentage—that is, children born here, both parents born abroad—the population was 12,916,311; of the children born here at least one of whose parents was born abroad, the population numbered 5,981,526; a total of 32,243,382.

By percentages, the total foreign white stock in the United States in 1910 numbered 32,243,382, of whom 13,345,545, or 41⅓ per cent, were foreign-born whites; 12,916,311, or 40⅕ per cent, were native whites of foreign parentage; and 5,981,526, or 18.6 per cent, were native whites of mixed parentage.

Now, let us see——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. FALL. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. Before the Senator passes to another subject—my attention was attracted just when the Senator commenced, and he may have given this information—do the percentages and the figures which the Senator has been giving relate to any particular part of the population?

Mr. FALL. No; simply the foreign white stock of the population. In other words, the total white stock in the United States of all classes in 1910 was a fraction over 81,000,000. Of this white stock 32,243,382 were either foreign born or of the first generation.

Mr. NORRIS. I was wondering whether they applied to the whole population, as I see they do, or whether the Senator was attempting to apply them to the laboring people only.

Mr. FALL. No. I am going to read, as rather interesting, the numbers of the racial stocks.

England, for instance, had here of foreign-born population 876,455; of foreign parentage—that is, the first generation—592,285; of mixed parentage, 853,702. In other words, there were more Americans of white stock in America of English ancestry than there were Americans of white stock in America of any other race. Ireland had of foreign-born population, in 1910, 1,352,155; of the first generation, 2,141,577; and of the mixed parentage, first generation, 1,010,628; or a total of 4,504,360.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator means there were that many Irish in America?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. As the Senator read it—I say this because I am satisfied he will be glad to have the impression corrected—it would appear as though he were reading statistics from Ireland.

Mr. FALL. Oh, no; I was reading the statistics of the white foreign stock in the United States, of course, and I was simply reading, as a matter of interest, the racial derivation of some of this white stock, because in the other tables which have been compiled I have not seen the racial differences set up.

Germany, foreign born—of course, this is in the United States—2,501,181; of foreign parentage, 3,911,847; of mixed parentage, first generation, 1,869,590; or a total of 8,282,618.

Of Swedes, a total of 1,364,215.

Of Italians, 2,098,360.

Of Russians, 2,541,649.

Of Austrians, 2,001,559.

Of Hungarians, 700,227.

Of Roumanians—of course, many of the Roumanians are classed as Austrians or of other nationalities, where in Austria, as in the Baltic countries, the population of each of the States, of course, is mixed—87,721.

Bulgaria, Serbia, and Montenegro, small, only about 22,000.

Greece, 109,665.

Canada, total French, English, and Irish, 2,754,615.

Mexico, 382,002.

I ask that this table may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The table referred to is as follows:

Country of origin of the foreign white stock.

[Page 875, Vol. I, Census of 1910.]

Country.	Foreign born.	Foreign parentage.	Mixed parentage.	Total.
England	876,455	592,285	853,702	2,322,442
Scotland	261,034	175,391	223,238	659,663
Wales	82,479	84,934	81,534	248,947
Ireland	1,352,155	2,141,577	1,010,628	4,504,360
Germany	2,501,181	3,911,847	1,869,590	8,282,618
Norway	403,858	410,951	164,290	979,099
Sweden	665,183	546,788	152,244	1,364,215
Denmark	181,621	147,648	70,795	400,064
Netherlands	120,053	116,331	57,190	293,574
Belgium	49,397	26,448	13,419	89,264
Luxemburg	3,068	2,381	1,496	6,945
France	117,236	78,937	96,216	292,389
Switzerland	124,834	90,669	86,147	301,650
Portugal	57,623	41,680	11,819	111,122
Spain	21,977	4,387	6,770	33,134
Italy	1,343,070	695,187	60,103	2,098,360
Russia	1,602,752	873,055	65,842	2,541,649
Finland	129,669	76,261	5,096	211,026
Austria	1,174,924	709,070	117,565	2,001,559
Hungary	495,600	191,059	13,568	700,227
Roumania	65,920	20,707	1,094	87,721
Bulgaria, Serbia, and Montenegro	21,451	948	286	22,685
Greece	101,264	5,524	2,877	109,665
Turkey in Europe	32,221	2,560	533	35,314
Europe—not specified	2,853	2,926	1,797	7,576
Turkey in Asia	59,702	17,480	1,449	78,631
All other countries	4,612	517	2,135	7,264
Canada—French	385,083	330,976	216,179	932,238
Canada—other	810,987	307,291	704,099	1,822,377
Newfoundland	5,076	1,836	1,723	8,635
Cuba and other West Indies	23,169	8,681	9,992	41,842
Mexico	219,802	107,866	54,334	382,002
Central and South America	9,069	807	3,634	13,510
All other	40,167	14,214	20,142	74,523
Of mixed foreign parentage		1,177,092		1,177,092
Total	13,345,545	12,916,311	5,981,526	32,243,382

SUMMARY FOR 1910.

The total foreign white stock in the United States in 1910 numbered 32,243,382, of whom 13,345,545, or 41.5 per cent, were foreign-born whites, 12,916,311, or 40.1 per cent, were native whites of foreign parentage, and 5,981,526, or 18.6 per cent, were native whites of mixed parentage.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator about the last figures he gave—the Mexicans. Does that total include the mixed parentage?

Mr. FALL. It does; but the mixed parentage is 54,334, and, of course, the Senator understands that that does not apply to the treaty citizenship. In other words, the population figures here do not apply to New Mexico, my State, and to other States such as Arizona, California, and Texas, where these Mexicans came in by treaty as citizens. It applies only to the foreign immigration.

Mr. NORRIS. I only asked the question because I wanted further to illuminate the subject that the Senator is discussing. I think it is an exceedingly interesting proposition in connection with this labor provision of the treaty, particularly after the Senator has coupled it, as he has, with the fact that this is the only country in the league, or, at least, it is the only one of the principal countries in the league, where that condition exists.

Mr. FALL. The only one of the five principal allied and associated powers.

Mr. NORRIS. I confess that the idea had never before occurred to me, and I can see its importance. In none of the other nations—England, France, Germany, Italy, or Japan—is that question involved. They do not have to give it consideration, as we ought to do.

Mr. FALL. That is true, Mr. President; and the fact that it should be very seriously considered here in this country is confirmed by the fact, well known, that in the Balkan countries and in the remaining portion of the remnants of the Austrian Empire the question of mixed nationalities is a burning question to-day, with which the Senate must be confronted and must deal in a short time.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, it is a burning question and always will be a burning question here. If we get into any difficulty in which the races in Europe are our antagonists, we will have a line-up immediately, as was the case in this war. We can not avoid it on account of our mixed population.

Mr. FALL. Undoubtedly, Mr. President. The fact is that we, of the five allied and associated powers which are to-day undertaking to govern the world, are the only power in which, of the total white population, more than one-third, approximately 40 per cent, are of foreign birth or of foreign parentage, and which, coming from all of the nationalities of the earth, enters into every phase of our everyday life. But the matter I have reference to particularly in saying this is that the questions now agitating the storm center of the world, the Balkans, would be presented to us and must be met by us, is we have saddled upon ourselves by this treaty the disposition and settlement of those questions, and have left our own domestic questions of the same character entirely unsettled or to be settled by foreigners.

We have provided that Roumania, Poland, Czechoslovakia, the Czecho-Slovene State, Hungary, and the other Balkan States of mixed blood, must enter into a treaty with us by which we will see that they are guaranteed the rights of racial minorities and linguistic minorities. We have assumed that burden, and to-day we are, because of our cowardice in the front of labor, or for some other reason, afraid to deal with the foreign question within our own boundaries; or at least we fail to do it.

We go out in the world and hunt up propositions to saddle upon the people of this country, for unknown generations, burdens to be borne by the taxpayers of this country in dealing with the Roumanian or Ruthenian populations in Hungary or Poland, when we have here at home our own burning racial questions and linguistic questions. We passed an act, in force now, that no foreign-language paper shall be sent through the mails until a translation of what is contained in it shall be filed with the Postmaster General; and then we propose to say to Roumania, "You must never pass such an act, no matter what the circumstances, with reference to any Serb or Croat or Slovene within your boundaries; and we, the United States of America, will see that you do not pass such an act."

We deal with it in labor, we deal with it in all foreign questions, and then, Mr. President, this phase of it may possibly appeal to some statesman who must seek reelection at the hands of his people next year. We will deal with it in every political campaign from the election of an alderman in New York City to an election of a President of the United States. So long as you inject yourself into foreign questions concerning the disposition of Fiume and into trouble between the Serbs, Croats, and Slovenes on the one hand and Italy on the other the Italian colony in Albuquerque, N. Mex., will want to know where the candidate for Congress, upon the Republican or upon the Democratic ticket, stands with reference to the disposition of Fiume. In the coal mines the Serbs, the Croats, and the Slovenes, the Roumanians, the Italians, and the Sicilians will all be aroused, and every candidate must make a pledge or lose the vote of one or the other, and if he makes his pledge and gains the vote of one he loses the vote of the other. The United States, with sufficient troubles of her own, with her labor troubles, with her great economic questions to settle, is now proposing that into politics, where those questions belong—because there the people speak—into our political campaigns, shall be injected every row, every foreign question, with reference to the ultimate disposition of the free city of Danzig. The Poles will be arrayed on the one hand and the Germans upon the other, fronting every election booth at the next election.

And still some of our friends flatter themselves that this league will not be a political question in the next campaign. I say to you now—and mark whether I am a political prophet—that it will be a burning political question in every campaign in the United States until the people have elected a Congress which will obey their wishes and restore the constitutional Government of the United States and throw this treaty into the sea, because that can be done finally. The Congress of the United States, elected by the people of the United States, can denounce a treaty, as they denounced the treaty of alliance with France and as they denounced the treaty of amity and commerce and immigration with Russia. The people of the United States will force you back into Americanism, or else, if they do not, they themselves are not worthy of the American Government formed by our fathers.

Mr. President, I have spoken at greater length than I had anticipated. The argument of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] upon the different phases of this particular question now pending covered the subject so fully and so thoroughly, and was so lucid in its explanation and exposition of the different provisions, that it would be a matter of supererogation to undertake to discuss the different provisions in detail; therefore I have confined myself entirely to the legal, constitutional, and governmental questions involved. Again, while not a prophet nor the son of a prophet, I venture to say to you that you may abrogate your powers, you may surrender your constitutional authority, the President of the United States may abdicate in favor of Lloyd-George, but the Supreme Court of the United States will yet remain as the rock of this Government, the ark of this covenant, and will maintain an American Government until the American people themselves can be heard.

Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Senate. After having spoken for some time,

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. I offer a unanimous-consent agreement, which I ask to have printed and lie on the table. It may go over until Monday, when I shall call it up. I ask for this interval of delay because the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], who, as everyone knows, has a very deep interest in this question, is ill and confined to his house; and I should like him to have an opportunity to see this proposed agreement before it comes up for consideration. So I merely introduce it now and ask that it be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let it be read, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on the calendar day of Wednesday, November 12, 1919, the Senate will vote finally upon the resolution of ratification of the peace treaty with Germany; that on and after the calendar day of Monday, November 3, 1919, up to the calendar day of Monday, November 10, 1919, no Senator shall speak more than once nor for a longer period than one hour upon any amendment to the text of the treaty, or upon any amendment proposed or that may be proposed to the resolution of ratification, or to any reservation pending or offered thereto; that on and after the calendar day of Monday, November 10, 1919, no Senator shall speak more than once nor for a longer period than 10 minutes upon any amendment pending or offered to the text of the treaty, or upon any amendment pending or proposed to the resolution of ratification, or to any reservation proposed to be incorporated therein; that at the hour of 5 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Wednesday, November 12, 1919, debate shall end and voting shall begin, and shall be proceeded with until all amendments and reservations and the perfected resolution of ratification have been finally disposed of: Provided, That nothing in this agreement shall prevent the Senate from voting upon any amendment or reservation as the same is reached.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I offer the following unanimous-consent agreement, which I also ask to have printed and lie on the table in accordance with the request already made by the Senator from Massachusetts:

That beginning with the adoption of this unanimous-consent agreement the Senate shall proceed with the consideration of the pending German treaty, including proposed amendments, reservations, interpretations, and resolutions of ratification, at sessions which shall begin at 11 o'clock a. m. each day. No Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes on any pending question during the further consideration of this treaty and relating to action upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the proposed unanimous-consent agreement of the Senator from Nebraska will be printed and lie on the table.

Mr. BORAH. I understand that both these unanimous-consent agreements are simply to be printed and lie on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both proposals are to be printed and lie on the table until Monday.

[Mr. SHERMAN resumed his speech. After having spoken in all about one hour, he yielded the floor for the day.]

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it is now 5 o'clock, and I understand that it is agreeable to both sides that the Senate shall adjourn until Monday. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 5 o'clock p. m.), as in open legislative session, adjourned until Monday, November 3, 1919, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, October 31, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father Almighty, impart unto our authorities in State and Nation wisdom, courage, fortitude, tempered with charity, that they may meet the great calamity which threatens the Nation, that law and order may obtain for the good of all.

Bring in Thine own good time together capital and labor, without hate and rancor, that justice and equity may be the fruits of their labors; and Thy name be hallowed, in the spirit of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3202. An act granting leave of absence to officers of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution:

Senate concurrent resolution 15.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency, and in vindicating the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3319. An act to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3319. An act to provide for the reimbursement of the United States for motive power, cars, and other equipment ordered for railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 3202. An act granting leave of absence to officers of the Coast Guard, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9205. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9697. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across Pearl River, between Pearl River County, Miss., and Washington Parish, La.

THREATENED STRIKE OF COAL MINERS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take Senate concurrent resolution 15 from the Speaker's table and consider the same.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate concurrent resolution 15 and consider the same. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution 15.

Whereas the enforcement of the law and the maintenance of order for the security of life and property and the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government and must be at all times vigorously and effectively safeguarded by the use of every means essential to that end: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency and in vindicating the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the resolution?

There was no objection.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. What about debate?

Mr. MONDELL. I would like to know what time the gentleman from Missouri would like to have. It had not been my thought that any extended debate was necessary, but I would be very glad to yield whatever time the gentleman desires. I expect to make a very brief statement.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Why not divide the hour half and half?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think we will occupy half an hour on this side.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. If you do not, you can quit.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this resolution shall not exceed one hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and one-half by myself.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that debate on this resolution be limited to one hour, one half to be controlled by himself and the other half by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK].

Mr. MONDELL. And at the expiration of that time the previous question shall be ordered.

The SPEAKER. And at the expiration of that time the previous question shall be ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday morning the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] called my attention to certain resolutions that had been presented in the House, the purport and effect of which was an indorsement of the acts of the Chief Executive, and particularly of the statement he issued relative to the threatened coal strike and the situation thus created. I said in connection with the discussion as to whether these resolutions should be taken up that in my opinion, while it was the duty of the Members of Congress on their personal responsibility and individually to express their views in regard to these matters, as I had already done, I did not think it was wise for the Congress to embark upon the practice or enter upon the policy of indorsing—which would, of course, involve the possibility of criticizing—the acts of the Chief Executive in the form of resolutions. I still adhere to that view.

But, Mr. Speaker, the situation presented this morning is quite different from that of yesterday morning. Since that time the Senate of the United States has considered, debated, and adopted a resolution very different in form from the resolution to which the gentleman from North Carolina referred on yesterday—a resolution covering all phases of the present industrial emergency, and giving the national administration assurance of the constant and unqualified support of the Congress in the use of constitutional and lawful means to meet the present industrial emergency, vindicating the majesty and power of the Government, enforcing obedience to the Constitution and the laws, and in protecting all citizens in the maintenance and exercise of their rights and in the observance of their lawful obligations.

That resolution being now before us, it seems to me highly proper that it should be adopted by the House, and I hope that it will be adopted unanimously and without a dissenting voice.

A nation-wide strike is threatened for which the miners have not voted, and for the avowed purpose of enforcing demands which the miners have not individually made, and which have not been officially sanctioned by even the representatives of the miners of some sections. Certain leaders have arrogated to themselves the authority, at least have assumed the responsibility, of calling out miners, many of whom are satisfied with present conditions, and of paralyzing the industries of the Nation and bringing want and misery into millions of homes without any real effort to adjust differences that may exist, and this at a time when miners are well paid, even considering the high cost of living, and when the approach of cold weather guarantees abundant work. I can not believe that the miners will generally allow themselves to be misled by any such arrogant and misguided leadership. If they should, they must remember while men have the right to strike men also have the right to work, and that public sentiment and the instrumentalities of Government will insist that those who may desire to continue to produce coal shall be protected in their right to do so. The country will not allow its industries to be paralyzed and its people, including women and children, to suffer, even though certain misguided men insist upon their right to quit work through a false sense of loyalty to leaders who seem to be utterly reckless of the consequences of their acts.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU].

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has seen fit to change his position with respect to this resolution. The situation is just this: A resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] which in all essentials is the same as Senate concurrent resolution No. 15. The only difference is that the gentleman from Texas in his resolution proposed to indorse the utterances of the President of the United States while Senate resolution No. 15 indorses the proposed action of the administration. If any living man can detect any essential difference between the two resolutions, he can do what I can not do. The Connally resolution ought to have been passed by this House yesterday. [Applause.] But objection was made on that side of the Chamber to even the consideration of it, accompanied by criticism as to precedent which the action of the House would establish.

Perhaps the next thing we will hear about this resolution will be the boast of the gentleman from Wyoming about the patriotism of the Republican side of the Chamber in adopting and passing this particular resolution.

We might as well talk plain. The truth is this was simply a case of "had to come across." The Rules Committee was called together this morning upon request of two minority members, and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] presented a rule providing for the consideration of the Connally resolution. A resolution providing for consideration of Senate resolution No. 15 was unanimously adopted, and at the very moment the gentleman from Wyoming arose to ask that unanimous consent be given that rule was ready to meet any objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. POU. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that when I appeared before the Committee on Rules this morning I stated that we were only asking a rule in case unanimous consent was refused; that I intended to ask unanimous consent. The gentleman does not want to convey the impression that any different action has been taken than was proposed?

Mr. POU. No; I am not suggesting anything of that kind. I am simply suggesting that for some reason yesterday the gentleman from Wyoming interposed two objections to the consideration of practically the same resolution he is asking to be considered by the House by unanimous consent to-day, and I submit that the explanation of the gentleman from Wyoming does not explain.

So it is another of those instances where the President of the United States is doing the bold, courageous thing, and we ought to have upheld him yesterday by unanimous vote. True, it is a little bit late to do it now, but, for God's sake, let us do it without a single objection on this floor.

We had several instances of this kind during the war. The meanest sort of criticism would be leveled against the President, but certain gentlemen, not daring to oppose him here, would accompany their support with all manner of complaint and criticism and afterwards brag about the wonderful display of patriotism.

The course of the President from the day he took the oath of office down to this good hour has commanded the admiration of the entire world. The position he has taken respecting this strike is just the position every patriotic American expected him to take. It is the position of a great American statesman, and yet during this debate you will hear him criticized. If you do not hear this, it will be because certain gentlemen remain silent, and this is too much to hope for.

Mr. Speaker, let us show the lawbreakers how unanimous we are in supporting the man in the White House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Missouri desire to use any more of his time?

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I most heartily favor the request for unanimous consent to immediately consider the Senate concurrent resolution No. 15 made by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL]. I have no pride in the fact that I happen to be the author of the resolution which the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] defines as practically identical with the resolution now before the House. I want to call the attention of the House, however, to a few pertinent facts with reference to the matter.

On Monday last the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] introduced by unanimous consent into the RECORD the President's statement on the impending coal strike. In reply to an interrogatory propounded to him on the floor at that time he stated that he most heartily indorses the statement made by the President of the United States on the subject, and prior to the introduction of my resolution I stated on the floor of this House that if the gentleman from Wyoming would take the resolution—not necessarily in identical language—and introduce it later in the day and ask unanimous consent for its consideration, I would not introduce such a resolution. The gentleman from Wyoming declined to take that action. I sought to get unanimous consent for its consideration on Monday last and was met with the proposition that it was contrary to the rules of the majority on the floor of this House to consider resolutions of this kind prior to their consideration by a committee. I then went before the Committee on the Judiciary on last Tuesday morning and presented my resolution and asked for its consideration, and no action was had on the resolution by the Committee on the Judiciary until this morning.

I call the attention of the House to the fact that the present resolution, the concurrent resolution from the Senate, has not yet been referred to a committee, and if that fact were ground for objection against the consideration of my resolution on Monday last, it would be equally grounds for objection against consideration of the resolution which is now before the House.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. REAVIS. For the gentleman's information I will state that the Committee on the Judiciary this morning amended the gentleman's resolution and reported out the Senate resolution in its stead.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the gentleman followed my statement, he would have noted that I said there had been no action on my resolution until this morning.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman said there had been no action on his resolution, and that this resolution had not yet been before the Committee on the Judiciary, while this resolution had been reported out by that committee.

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the gentleman that the Clerk of the Senate, just a few moments ago, after the Committee on the Judiciary had adjourned, reported this resolution officially to the House. [Applause on Democratic side.] The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. REAVIS] can not successfully employ any sort of legislative shell game here. If the Judiciary Committee of the House took action on the Thomas resolution, it took it upon its own initiative and before that resolution had officially reached the House of Representatives.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. In a moment. I will say that doubtless the same influences which forced the gentleman from Wyoming to ask for the consideration of this resolution forced a very tardy and unwilling action by the Committee on the Judiciary of this House.

Mr. REAVIS. I merely wanted to put the gentleman right, because I am sure he does not want to make any mistake.

Mr. CONNALLY. Not at all.

Mr. REAVIS. The gentleman's resolution was acted upon in the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CONNALLY. When?

Mr. REAVIS. This morning.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is what I stated.

Mr. REAVIS. And that portion of the resolution following the resolving clause was stricken out.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is all right.

Mr. REAVIS. And the resolution that is now being considered was reported out of the Committee on the Judiciary this morning.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct. I do not dispute the gentleman's statement, but I call his attention to the fact that my resolution reposed in the Judiciary Committee from last Tuesday morning until this morning without any action upon it at all, and this morning the Judiciary Committee substituted the Senate resolution for my resolution before the Senate resolution had reached the House or the committee.

Mr. CARAWAY. Does the gentleman mean to charge all of the members of the Judiciary Committee with neglect in that respect?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no; just the majority of that committee. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Arkansas, that I found the Democratic members of the committee, with whom I conferred, including the gentleman from Arkansas, willing and anxious to have the committee take action on the resolution which was pending before it.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. BEE. So that this report of the Committee on the Judiciary affirmatively reported out the gentleman's resolution, but substituted for it the Senate resolution?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes. That is true.

In order to arrive at a proper conception of the proceedings which have led up to the present situation it is necessary to review briefly some recent events. The Washington Post gives the following résumé of conditions:

MAIN POINTS IN THE CONTROVERSY THAT LED UP TO GREAT COAL STRIKE AND GOVERNMENT'S INTERVENTION.

These are the outstanding facts concerning the coal strike and what led up to it:

United Mine Workers of America, meeting at Cleveland on September 23, sounded the first strike alarm by declaring the war-time wage agreement ended on November 1.

Executive officers charged with the duty of negotiating a new agreement were ordered to stand out for three demands, and, if not granted, to issue a strike call for more than 400,000 soft-coal miners in 28 States. These demands were:

A five-day working week, a six-hour day, and a wage increase of 60 per cent.

SCALE MEETING A FAILURE.

At scale committee meetings at Buffalo and Philadelphia miners and operators thrashed over their differences without peaceful settlement. Representatives of the miners contended that the demands were not arbitrary, that the 60 per cent wage increase was set as a basis for negotiations, and that a six-hour day meant actual time the miners were to work underground.

The miners insisted on a five-day week, they said, because there were not four days' work a week the year round for each miner. They contended by limiting each miner to five days there would be a more equitable distribution of the work. The leaders denied that it was the beginning of a nation-wide campaign for a shorter working schedule.

After a failure of the two sides to get together the strike order was issued, and Secretary of Labor Wilson, acting by direction of the President's Cabinet, immediately called into conference the heads of the mining and operating associations. Subsequently the full scale committee of each were called in and various proposals were offered and rejected.

The final proposal was made by President Wilson. It suggested for negotiation without reservation, submission of questions still in dispute with the failure of negotiations to arbitration, and continued operation of the mines pending final settlement.

OPERATORS ACCEPT OFFER.

The operators, as set forth in a statement by Secretary Wilson, accepted the offer in its entirety; the miners accepted the offer of negotiation "and held the other two for consideration later." This, as explained by Secretary Wilson, abruptly ended the conference.

At my request the Secretary of Labor has furnished me with the following statement of the negotiations conducted at a conference of operators and officials of the miners called by the Secretary:

The following is a list of the propositions, in the order in which they were presented, which were submitted for consideration at the conference of operators and miners with the Secretary of Labor, held in the city of Washington, D. C., October 21 to 24, 1919, inclusive. No record was made of the discussions or explanations, and only the propositions and the substance of the responses are given:

TENTATIVE PROPOSITION MADE BY SECRETARY WILSON.

That the wages of the miners be increased at the expiration of the present contract an amount equal to the difference between the increase in wages received by the mine workers since July, 1914, and the increase in the cost of living since that date.

That the increase be effective from the termination of the present agreement until March 31, 1920.

That on these conditions the strike order be withdrawn and the miners continue at work on these terms.

That negotiations be entered into at the usual time for the making of a new scale to be effective after March 31, 1920.

Response of the miners, in substance: The miners reject the proposition, because it is indefinite and inadequate.

Response of the operators, in substance: The operators have also found the proposition indefinite and had intended to make some inquiries to get a better understanding of it, but the action of the miners in rejecting it makes it unnecessary either to accept or reject.

TENTATIVE PROPOSITION OF SECRETARY WILSON.

That the pick-mining price be advanced 15 cents per ton.

That machine-mining yardage, dead work, and day wages be advanced in the same ratio.

That the daywork shall be eight hours from bank to bank.

That there shall be a Saturday half holiday.

That with these changes the existing agreement continue in effect until March 31, 1922.

That while the legal termination of the war will not take place until some unknown time in the future, the increase in the cost of living is an existing fact; therefore these changes will go into effect as of November 1, 1919.

Response of the operators, in substance: We will not enter into any negotiations for a new wage scale unless the strike order is withdrawn and it is understood that the present agreement should continue to its legal termination.

Response of the miners, in substance: The proposition is not satisfactory to the miners. We are willing to accept it as the basis of negotiations, but we are not willing to withdraw the strike order pending negotiations.

PROPOSITION OF THE OPERATORS, IN SUBSTANCE.

That if the strike order is withdrawn and it is understood that the existing agreement will continue until its legal termination, we will agree to submit the question of an increase in wages to a board of arbitration and abide by its decision.

Proposition rejected by the miners.

PROPOSITION MADE BY THE SECRETARY OF LABOR.

That all of the questions in dispute be submitted to arbitration and that work be continued pending the decision of the arbitrators.

Proposition rejected by operators and miners.

TENTATIVE PROPOSITION MADE BY SECRETARY WILSON.

That the wage-scale committees of the operators and miners go into conference without reservation for the purpose of negotiating an agreement, as though no demands had been made or rejected, having due regard to the interests of their respective groups.

Response of the miners, in substance: We will go into conference with the wage-scale committee of the operators without reservation for the purpose of negotiating an agreement, having in mind the interests of the mine workers.

Response of the operators, in substance: We will go into conference with the wage-scale committee of the mine workers without reservation for the purpose of negotiating an agreement, having in mind the interests of the operators, if the strike order is withdrawn.

LETTER FROM THE PRESIDENT.

"I have been watching with deep and sincere interest your efforts to bring about a just settlement of the differences between the operators and the coal miners in the bituminous coal fields of the country. It is to be hoped that the good judgment that has been exercised by both operators and miners in years gone by in the adjustment of their differences will again prevail in the present crisis. All organized society is dependent upon the maintenance of its fuel supply for the continuance of its existence. The Government has appealed with success to other classes of workers to postpone similar questions until a reasonable adjustment could be arrived at. With the parties to this controversy rests the responsibility of seeing that the fuel supply of the Nation is maintained. At this time, when the whole world is in need of more supplies, it would be a cruel neglect of our high duty to humanity to fail them.

"I have read with interest the suggestion made by you that the wage-scale committees of the operators and miners go into conference without reservation for the purpose of negotiating an agreement as though no demands had been made or rejected, having due regard to the interests of their respective groups. I am in accord with that suggestion. No body of men knows better the details, intricacies, and technicalities of mining than do the miners and operators. No body of men can work out the details of a wage scale on a more equitable basis. Their judgment would undoubtedly be based upon the sum total of knowledge of the industry. Whatever their differences may be, no matter how widely divergent their viewpoints may be from each other, it is a duty that they owe to society to make an earnest effort to negotiate those differences and to keep the mines of our country in operation. After all, the public interest in this vital matter is the paramount consideration of the Government and admits of no other action than that of consideration of a peaceful settlement of the matter as suggested by you. If for any reason the miners and operators fail to come to a mutual understanding, the interests of the public are of such vital importance in connection with the production of coal that it is incumbent upon them to refer the matters in dispute to a board of arbitration for determination, and to continue the operation of the mines, pending the decision of the board."

Response of the operators, in substance: We take the communication from the President as a command and accept his proposition in its entirety.

Response of the miners, in substance: We look upon the communication from the President as containing two distinct propositions and methods of adjustment: First, to negotiate; second, to arbitrate. We accept the first and hold ourselves ready to negotiate.

The Secretary of Labor was asked for an interpretation of the President's letter.

SECRETARY OF LABOR'S INTERPRETATION, IN SUBSTANCE.

It is apparent that the President desires the continued operation of the mines on a basis that will be just to all persons concerned. He has therefore proposed a method with three distinct parts, each essential to secure the accomplishment of the purpose: First, that negotiations be resumed. Second, that if the negotiations fail to bring about an adjustment, the matters in dispute should be submitted to arbitration. Third, that the mines should be continued in operation.

The operators at that point said:

"We agree with your interpretation, and hold ourselves in readiness to meet at your call or the call of the miners' wage committee to fulfill the requirements of the President's letter," and immediately withdrew.

The Secretary of Labor, who is himself a miner and a member of the United Mine Workers' Union, has energetically sought to avert the pending coal strike, and, after the conference adjourned, as a final appeal sent to John L. Lewis, acting president United Mine Workers of America, the following telegram:

In view of the impending coal strike and the disastrous effect sure to follow, I deem it my duty to urge upon you the advisability, under all the circumstances, of another effort to avert the threatened stoppage of work in the bituminous coal fields set for November 1.

OFFERS EVERY POSSIBLE HELP.

We are all agreed, I think, that nothing should be left undone to avert this calamity, and it is therefore incumbent upon the coal operators, the miners, and the Government to cooperate by every feasible method of joint action to this end.

Having this in mind, I urgently request your international executive board to reconvene at the earliest possible moment the delegate convention of the United Mine Workers of America for a further consideration of the whole question and that, pending the assembling of the convention and its consideration of the matters presented, the miners be notified by your board to continue at work.

In which event, as Secretary of Labor, I will assume the responsibility of calling the operators of not only the central competitive fields but of the entire bituminous coal fields of the country to meet in the same city and at the same time set by your executive board for a reconvening of the delegate convention of the United Mine Workers of America.

WOULD HAVE CALLED OPERATORS.

If you will give this request favorable consideration I feel that the convention called in accordance therewith with coal operators meeting in the same city, a way will be worked out that will be satisfactory to your membership, to the operators, and to the Government of the United States.

I earnestly urge you to do this, feeling that if you do your course will be commended by the people of the United States, and the dire consequences that would follow a nation-wide coal strike will be prevented. If you concur with my request and call a convention, any place selected by your board will be satisfactory. If you desire to meet in the city of Washington, I will gladly make the arrangements for a meeting place and do everything I can to cooperate with you. I am sending you by mail an official copy of the President's statement issued Saturday, October 25.

The statement of the President issued on October 25 and referred to by the Secretary of Labor is as follows:

On September 23, 1919, the convention of the United Mine Workers of America at Cleveland, Ohio, adopted a proposal declaring that all contracts in the bituminous field shall be declared as having automatically expired November 1, 1919, and making various demands, including a 60 per cent increase in wages and the adoption of a six-hour workday and a five-day week; and providing that in the event a satisfactory wage agreement should not be secured for the central competitive field before November 1, 1919, the national officials should be authorized and instructed to call a general strike of all bituminous miners and mine workers throughout the United States, effective November 1, 1919.

RECALLS THE WAR AGREEMENT.

Pursuant to these instructions, the officers of the organization have issued a call to make the strike effective November 1. This is one of the gravest steps ever proposed in this country, affecting the economic welfare and the domestic comfort and health of the people.

It is proposed to abrogate an agreement as to wages which was made with the sanction of the United States Fuel Administration, and which was to run during the continuance of the war, but not beyond April 1, 1920. This strike is proposed at a time when the Government is making the most earnest effort to reduce the cost of living and has appealed with success to other classes of workers to postpone similar disputes until a reasonable opportunity has been afforded for dealing with the cost of living.

It is recognized that the strike would practically shut off the country's supply of its principal fuel at a time when interference with that supply is calculated to create a disastrous fuel famine. All interests would be affected alike by a strike of this character, and its victims would be not the rich only but the poor and the needy as well—those least able to provide in advance a fuel supply for domestic use.

It would involve the shutting down of countless industries and the throwing out of employment of a large number of the workers of the country. It would involve stopping the operation of railroads, electric-light and gas plants, street railway lines, and other public utilities, and the shipping to and from this country, thus preventing our giving aid to the allied countries with supplies which they so seriously need.

The country is confronted with this prospect at a time when the war itself is still a fact, when the world is still in suspense as to negotiations for peace, when our troops are still being transported and when their means of transport is in urgent need of fuel.

WITHOUT APPROVAL OF WORKERS.

From whatever angle the subject may be viewed, it is apparent that such a strike in such circumstances would be the most far-reaching plan ever presented in this country to limit the facilities of production and distribution of a necessity of life and thus indirectly to restrict the production and distribution of all the necessaries of life. A strike under these circumstances is not only unjustifiable, it is unlawful.

The action proposed has apparently been taken without any vote upon the specific proposition by the individual members of the United Mine Workers of America throughout the United States, an almost unprecedented proceeding. I can not believe that any right of any American worker needs for its protection the taking of this extraordinary step, and I am convinced that when the time and money are considered it constitutes a fundamental attack, which is wrong, both morally and legally, upon the rights of society and upon the welfare of our country.

I feel convinced that individual members of the United Mine Workers would not vote, upon full consideration, in favor of such a strike under these conditions.

INTEREST OF PUBLIC PARAMOUNT.

When a movement reaches a point where it appears to involve practically the entire productive capacity of the country with respect to one of the most vital necessities of daily domestic and industrial life, and when the movement is asserted in the circumstances I have stated, and at a time and in a manner calculated to involve the maximum of dangers in the public welfare in this critical hour of our country's life, the public interest becomes the paramount consideration.

In these circumstances I solemnly request both the national and the local officers and also the individual members of the United Mine Workers of America to recall all orders looking to a strike on November 1 and to take whatever steps may be necessary to prevent any stoppage of work.

It is time for plain speaking. These matters with which we now deal touch not only the welfare of a class, but vitally concern the well-being, the comfort, and the very life of all the people.

I feel it is my duty in the public interest to declare that any attempt to carry out the purpose of this strike, and thus to paralyze the industry of the country with the consequent suffering and distress of all our people, must be considered a grave moral and legal wrong against the Government and the people of the United States.

LAWS ARE TO BE ENFORCED.

I can do nothing else than to say that the law will be enforced and the means will be found to protect the interests of the Nation in any emergency that may arise out of this unhappy business.

I express no opinion on the merits of the controversy. I have already suggested a plan by which a settlement may be reached, and I hold myself in readiness at the request of either or both sides to appoint at once a tribunal to investigate all the facts, with a view to aiding in the earliest possible orderly settlement of the questions at issue between the coal operators and the coal miners, to the end that the just rights, not only of those interests, but also of the general public, may be fully protected.

The resolution introduced by me on October 27 is as follows:

Whereas the President of the United States has made a public statement regarding his proposed course of action with reference to the threatened strike in the coal fields of the United States and his intended efforts to enforce the law and maintain the integrity of the Government of the United States: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives of the United States of America (the Senate concurring), That the utterances of the President of the United States contained in said statement are approved by the Congress of the United States; and that the Congress hereby pledges to the President of the United States its support in all constitutional measures which the President may take in order to enforce and maintain the laws of the United States in their full integrity.

The Senate resolution now pending before the House is as follows:

Whereas the enforcement of the law and the maintenance of order for the security of life and property and the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government and must be at all times vigorously and effectively safeguarded by the use of every means essential to that end: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency and in vindicating the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a strike which was voted by the miners—by the miners who dig the coal. It was called by the leaders, who acted without referring the matter to the miners themselves, who alone ought to have the right to say when they shall stop work.

Mr. Speaker, any man who works has the right to quit work whenever he sees fit to do so; any man has the right to continue to work whenever he may see fit to do so. The right to work when he wants to is just as sacred as the right to quit work. The Constitution guarantees the right to work as well as the right to quit work, and the Government owes to every man who desires to continue work the duty to protect him in that right and privilege. To those miners who desire to continue to dig coal to earn livelihood for themselves and their families the Government should give every protection. The operators must also obey the law; they should not be allowed to charge excessive prices, and the authorities state that they shall not be allowed to do so. The country is facing a great crisis; calamity may befall the consuming public at any moment. The Government will fix maximum prices of coal so that the owners and operators can not take advantage of this situation to raise prices; the law will force operators and miners alike to respect the rights of the great consuming public—the public whose patronage pays for both the wages of the miners and the coal of the operators. Neither of these special interests must be allowed, in violation of law, to starve or freeze the public into submission.

I am glad to know that such Members of this House as the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. RICKETTS, himself a union coal miner; the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. CARSS, a member of one of the railroad brotherhoods; and the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. COOPER, also a member of a railroad brotherhood, will support and vote for the Senate resolution now pending. It is a question of the supremacy of the law.

It is immaterial to me whether you pass the resolution which I introduced or the Thomas Senate resolution. All I want is that this House shall go on record for the enforcement of the law and the guarantee of the constitutional rights of American citizens in this great crisis. [Applause.] I am glad that the Republican Party in this House—although it has done it tardily, although it seems to have done it unwillingly, although it seems to have done it under the spur of absolute necessity—has at last come to the point where it is willing to indorse the administration in the enforcement of the law. However, I want to say furthermore for some gentlemen on the Republican side of the House that a great many of them came to me on Monday last and expressed their hearty approval of my resolution and their willingness to have it considered by this House. This side of the House has been willing all along. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, to see a disposition here rather to quibble about politics than to declare what the Congress and the administration ought to do. This is not a party question; it is an American question. [Applause.] We have a clear duty devolving upon us, and that duty is to protect every American in his rights, to protect life and property, to preserve peace and good order, to prevent the usurpation of the power of the Government by any man or combination of men. The people have reached the conclusion that the time is here when a few men in any walk of life shall no longer dictate the policy of the Government. [Applause.] The people will not submit quietly to a determination on the part of any organization, no matter what it is, to declare against the interests of the whole American people. I am glad the President has had the courage for once [applause on the Republican side] to speak out. It is the first time the President has displayed such courage in behalf of all the American people. [Applause on the Republican side.] I am glad to be here to help sustain him in the enforcement of the law.

There is no party politics in that statement; no. I do not make it for any party purpose. We are here to represent the whole American people; we are here to see that no part of the American people are discriminated against by any section of the American people; we are here to see that everybody has a chance to live. If the declaration of the coal miners should be put into force at the opening of the winter season, millions of our people would suffer want and distress, and starvation and death would follow the lack of fuel. This is a question far beyond the rights of any organization; it is a question of whether the Government of the United States shall be supreme [applause], whether it shall have power to enforce the law; and for one I am ready to meet any issue that may arise and help in every way within my power to see that the Government of the United States maintains control of the situation, whatever it may turn out to be. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER]. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, it is certainly refreshing and reassuring to know that there is no division among the membership of the House upon the fundamental proposition of the enforcement of law and the maintenance of order. To the national administration and to all others in authority the House will unanimously give assurance of its "constant, continuous, and unqualified support" to meet the present industrial emergency. [Applause.] Just now, when it is charged that there exists an organized movement to overthrow the Government and to substitute the rule of a class of reckless and lawless conspirators, who have no interest in the laboring men except to exploit them and who take advantage of every occasion of unrest to stimulate disorder, which they hope will lead to the revolution they plan, the Congress of the United States will be found supporting the President to the utmost of its power in his demand that the law be enforced and that the lives and vital interests of the people be protected. [Applause.]

I regret that gentlemen of the minority see fit to criticize the leader of the majority because he was unwilling upon the spur of the moment to take up the resolution that was introduced by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. The resolution of the gentleman from Texas was more in praise of the President than it was for the supremacy of the law and the support of the Constitution.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. In just a moment I will yield. The gentleman's resolution begins, "Whereas the President of the United States has made a public statement regarding his proposed course of action," "and his intended efforts," "his utterances are approved," and so forth. Nothing about the present emergency, nothing about our duty, except as we learn them through the utterances of the President. It occurs to me that as between such a declaration and the statements of the present concurrent resolution, which declares, "That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency," there should be no question. The one is applicable to conditions. The other is principally praise of an individual. The differences are quite vital.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will yield first to the gentleman from Texas, who first interrogated me, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CONNALLY. In view of the fact that the majority leader absolutely approves the statement of the President, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa whether or not he approves of the statement of the President.

Mr. TOWNER. I certainly do; but there is——

Mr. CONNALLY. Approve of what?

Mr. TOWNER. I approve of the statement made by the President.

Mr. CONNALLY. All right.

Mr. TOWNER. Certainly, I do. [Applause.] Certainly does every man here; but it is not incumbent on Congress every time the President makes a statement which it approves to pass a resolution of approval. Neither is it wise in time of a great crisis, regarding which we desire to give an expression of our belief and purpose, to approve only what the President has said about it. [Applause on the Republican side.] I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is it not true also that the resolution by the gentleman from Texas simply approved the President's course with regard to one particular event, and not generally in support of the Government?

Mr. TOWNER. This is true: The coal strike is not the only threatened disturbance. There are many other strikes now in existence, and still others which are threatened. There is, as the pending resolution declares, a "present industrial emergency," general and widespread. However, I do not criticize the resolution of the gentleman from Texas. I am only endeavoring to show there are good reasons for preferring the pending resolution.

Mr. Speaker, in any controversy existing between the employers and employees in the steel industry, the coal industry, or any other industry, Congress does not take the part of either side. It stands impartial between them. But it does say that there must be a peaceful settlement of such controversies, and not a settlement brought about by force and violence. It does say that if either side shall try to force a favorable determination by terrorism and violence they must be restrained and punished.

It certainly can not be charged that Congress has been indifferent or unsympathetic toward labor. Congress has passed within the last few years more legislation in the interest of labor than has ever before been enacted. Congress has not and does not condemn or criticize laboring men for making legitimate efforts to better their condition. But it is a fact that seems to be fully established that those who are violent enemies of the Government and who are plotting to overthrow it are seeking to stimulate discontent and unrest among the workingmen, and in some instances have secured recognition as labor leaders. These are the men, many of them aliens, who counsel resistance of the law, and who out of these conditions of disorder hope to organize a revolution to overthrow the Government. To these efforts, which are in reality as much assaults against the Government as if their promoters were in arms and under a foreign flag, the Government can not be indifferent.

The Government of the United States is not weak. It is by far the strongest Government on earth to-day. It is strong not only in material resources but it is also strong in the affections of the people. Any effort either by intimidation to coerce it or by revolution to overthrow it is doomed to disastrous failure. Such attempt would only bring misery and suffering to thousands who have no sympathy with its purpose. The miners of the country are in the main patriotic and loyal. Their service in the late war demonstrated that fact. The foreigners who have come here for the most part appreciate the Government under which they have so happily bettered their condition. It is inconceivable that they should desire to follow the leadership of men seeking to overthrow the Government. Nothing they could do would so impair their position and jeopardize the advancement of their interests as to yield to the influence and leadership of such men. The people of America are long-suffering and patient, but when they are vitally affected they will find a way swiftly and surely to protect their interests.

It is therefore important that all should be made to understand that in the present emergency there will be no division, no hesitancy, no paltering, no subservience to the forces of disorder or revolution. The administration has spoken, and by the passage of this resolution the Congress will have spoken to the effect that, as stated in the resolution, they will use all the powers and resources of the Government in "enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws, and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations." [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT]. [Applause.]

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity, as a public official charged in some degree at least with responsibility in public affairs, to express my approval both by voice and vote of this Senate resolution. [Applause.]

There is no disposition upon my part to inject partisanism into this matter, and it is regrettable that in the discussion of it gentlemen can not refrain from criticizing the President of the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] who just preceded me criticized the resolution of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] because it approved the statement of the President of the United States, which the gentleman from Iowa says he himself approves, but he objected to the form of the resolution. As a matter of fact, the President of the United States is the supreme executive authority charged with the enforcement of the law, and, to my mind, it would be highly proper that it be expressed in the wording of the Connally resolution. I am glad to have the opportunity now—I wish I could have had it when efforts to bring this proposition before the House were blocked by Republican objection—to approve it. Criticism has been made of the form of the resolution presented by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and yet I call the attention of the House to the fact that the cunning genius of the Republican side in now declaring its approval of the substance did not set itself to working out a form of expression of approval. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Not yet has there been introduced in either the House or the Senate by any Republican a resolution of indorsement. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Feeling so strongly upon the question of asserting approval of law enforcement, I on yesterday afternoon, after repeated efforts had been made on the Democratic side of the House to secure unanimous consent for consideration of the Connally resolution, introduced a resolution to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from its further consideration and place it upon its passage. This morning when the Committee on Rules convened to consider my resolution the distinguished majority leader appeared before it with a proposition to bring about consideration of the Senate resolution, and the Senate resolution having in the meantime passed the Senate, it was quite agreeable to substitute the Senate resolution for the Connally resolution and his rule for mine.

After all, the question here, my fellow Members, is the law, the supremacy of the law [applause] over threatened disaster, over threatened anarchy, over threatened riot, over threatened conditions which, if the threat be made good, will bring distress such as this country has never witnessed. And it is a happy thing that we are able here to agree to pledge to the executive authority of this country our enthusiastic, our unanimous, our untiring support, in the efforts he will make in behalf of law, because under law alone can liberty prevail. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of the time allotted me.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. [Applause.]

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to talk of the past. Both great political parties, from time to time, have exhibited a great desire to command the vote of people who, in my judgment, are not loyal. That applies to some of the leaders who called this strike; it does not apply to the great mass of the people who labor, whether they labor in mines or on railways. When you get down to the Australian ballot, and when you get down to the facts, the largest portion of the people who live by their labor are just as loyal as any other of our citizens. We have gone to the limit on both sides heretofore, gone to the limit and skimming out to the very edge, and sometimes crossing the edge, because there has been propaganda, because people sat in the galleries and did this and that and the other. While you Democrats have been six we Republicans have been half a dozen on this side. [Applause.]

That is behind us. The majority leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], voiced his approval of the stand of the President. I approve it, and I rejoice in it. [Applause.] I believe, and at least hope, that every Member on each side of the House at last, all of us, stand as a unit for the enforcement of the law. [Applause.] We stand for the enforcement of the law with all of the machinery of the Government if necessary to be called into action, judicial and military, to enforce the law which, like the grace of God, covers every man, employer or employee, rich or poor, great or small. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, one of the great, distinguishing characteristics of the American people is fair and square play to all classes. I am rejoiced to be able to vote for this resolution after it has been made to apply to all classes of the people of this country and promises protection to all classes, and is not directed against any one class to the exclusion of any other class. Believing, as I do, in fair play for all classes, I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point a telegram, dated October 30, 1919, to the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, from John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America.

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KING. I expected the gentleman would object. The gentleman has said that he would hang them as high as Haman. I would recommend to the gentleman to read the history of Robespierre, of France, and his ending. The gentleman would hang all the laboring people!

Mr. BLANTON. No. Only the autocratic, anarchistic leaders who preach revolution against our Government.

Mr. KING. I refuse to yield to a gentleman at the present time who would hang men as high as Haman.

The SPEAKER. A gentleman must not take the floor without consent.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I yield back whatever time I have remaining.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. LINTHICUM].

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the passage of the Thomas resolution giving the national administration the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial situation. I can not see why we should not have passed the Connally resolution on Wednesday last, which, while differently worded, meant the same indorsement and support of the administration. The truth is that what this country expects is for Congress to back up the Constitution and law of the land and to openly support the President whenever he speaks as the Executive of this great country in support of law and order. The people of my State feel that Congress has been playing too much politics. [Applause.] As I said here the other day, what the people want us to do, and what Congress needs for its reputation, is to eschew politics and look to the welfare of the country. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

There are more than 300 strikes in this country at the present time, and while they are continuing Congress, instead of devising a system for the settlement of labor and capital disputes and thereby again establishing peace and prosperity in the land, excites itself politically and tries to make campaign material, of which there is a plenty, and buttress its respective parties for the great battle of next year. The party which eschews politics and best serves the people will best serve its future destiny and success. Let us whole-heartedly, nonpolitically, and with the welfare of the people ever at heart give to the national administration that constant, continuous, and unqualified support in spirit as well as in law, to the end that peace, prosperity, and happiness may again prevail. We Democrats must look to you Republicans for this support, as you are now in full control of both branches of Congress. It is to you that the country will look for congressional action and activity, and to you will be largely due any credit or discredit for what is done.

No body of men could give a stronger indorsement than we give in that resolution. We went no further when we declared war and said that all our men and our money should be at the disposal of the national administration for the carrying on of the war. Here we say that we will give them "our constant, continuous, and unqualified support" in carrying out the law in this matter. If Congress lives up to that indorsement, I do not believe we will have any protracted strike. I believe these men will consider some agreement. It seems strange and deplorable to me that in a great, civilized country of 100,000,000 people and more, that 500,000 miners can not agree with their employers without having a strike and the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of property. Certainly there ought to be some solution for such a situation. I believe with the indorsement given by this resolution, and the President speaking out boldly for the people of this country, that some solution will be reached and that we will avert this strike or a protraction of it, which would strike terror into the hearts of the people of this country, and which would mean to the women and children through this coming winter distress, sickness, and desolation, for want of fuel for heat and cooking.

I recognize the fact that labor has the full right to organize and conduct its business through labor organizations. There are more than 4,000,000 labor organization members in this country, and I have invariably given them my support in all matters appertaining to their welfare and prosperity. I shall continue to do this so long as it is in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the land.

I likewise realize the fact that capital also has its rights and is entitled to an adequate return upon its investments. It is patent to all of us that neither labor nor capital can prosper except by working in unison for production and profit. We must also remember that the consumers of the country have their rights; they are unorganized; nevertheless their wants and needs are the very essence of existence. All classes are consumers, and thereby all people are interested in the settlement of labor and capital disputes, to the end that production may be enlarged, that labor may be well paid, and that capital may receive its return upon its investments, and yet at the same time that the consumer, by virtue of the production and prosperity, may be able to reduce his cost of living, now so extremely high. Why, Mr. Speaker, if we could once rid ourselves of labor and capital disputes that in itself would reduce the cost of living by increased production.

With the vast number of strikes now existing and with the coal strike imminent and practically certain, one can not calculate the injury they mean to the country in nonproduction, destruction, and discomforts of life. There certainly ought to be some system by which such catastrophes could be avoided and the loss discontinued. I feel that out of this emergency should grow some legislative action or agreement, through the combined efforts of the Government and capital and labor, which will bring about a solution of the present deplorable situation and method.

When we realize what it would mean to this country, what it would mean to the defenseless women and children as well as the aged of the land, not to be adequately provided with heat, we can but realize what a strike of this kind means to the discomfort of our people. It is highly essential that the national administration, while recognizing the rights and liberties of the strikers and their inalienable rights under the Constitution, should by all means at its disposal not alone uphold the Constitution and laws of the land but by such additional action provide the necessary fuel for the conduct of our industries, the transportation of our food and clothing supplies, and the warming and cooking for the people of our land.

The crisis which confronts the country, which if allowed to prevail, would be a calamity and strike to the hearts of the people almost as badly as did the Great War, from which we have so successfully emerged. That Congress has guaranteed its support of the national administration is a great credit to the two bodies composing the legislative branch of the Government; that the President has acted with such firmness and promptness endears him to the hearts of the people and to every law-abiding citizen of the land. To him the people look for their protection and rights, to him who brought us through the Great War with success and glory do the people look with trust and confidence. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. MCARTHUR] such time as he desires.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon is recognized.

Mr. MCARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an editorial from the Portland Morning Oregonian of last Friday, entitled "The public and the labor union."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of the editorial referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, this resolution should receive the vote of every Member of the Congress. In the midst of a great crisis half a century ago a man later to become President said, when Lincoln was assassinated, "The Government at Washington still survives." In the crisis now upon our Nation the Congress by this resolution says to the American people, employer and employee, all alike, that the Government at Washington still survives, and that the interests of 110,000,000 people are greater than any selfish interests of any group or class of citizens. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUCKER].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection.

There was no objection.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, obviously nobody can discuss this resolution adequately in two minutes; therefore I will not attempt it, except to say that I give it my most hearty and cordial approval, and I want to congratulate the House upon the unanimity of action which I think will be taken here this morning.

A few moments ago a colloquy occurred across the aisle with reference to printing in the RECORD a certain telegram. It is not always that I indorse the action of everybody on the Democratic side, but I do indorse the action of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] in reference to the request to print in the RECORD that vile calumny upon the President of the United States. [Applause.] Such men as that man Lewis are responsible for the condition that confronts us to-day, and I hope that the legal department of this Nation will be able to hale him into a court of justice where he will be dealt with as his crime, in my judgment, requires that he be dealt with. I would have objected myself to the insertion in the RECORD of that arrogant, impudent, audacious tirade against the President of the United States if the gentleman from Texas had not objected.

Now, Mr. Speaker, gentlemen on both sides say there is no politics in this resolution. There is none. I am glad to know that there is no politics in it. I am glad to know, notwithstanding the telegram which was sought to be put into the RECORD here to-day, denouncing the President for what he has done, that every man on both sides of the aisle stands ready here and now to indorse and to approve what the President has done and what he is going to do. [Applause.] And I hope within the next few days the clouds which to-day hover over us will disappear, and that what threatened to be a national disaster will be averted through the activity of the one man whose matchless courage, great patriotism, and Americanism will bring order out of impending chaos, and that the law of this Nation will prevail, and the lawless, like Lewis, Foster, and others, will be placed where they will have time for reflection and repentance. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TILSON). The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of expressing my great happiness in seeing such unanimity of opinion on both sides of the Chamber with respect to the passage of this resolution. I was in favor of the Connally resolution; I am in favor of the Senate resolution. I favor either, and I favor both. Each has the same object, and I rejoice now that to-day, even if it is a little late, this House is going to show its courage and wisdom and patriotism in the passage of this Senate resolution.

It would have been much better to have passed some such resolution as the Connally or the Senate resolution earlier. We could not consider now the Connally resolution with appropriateness, for the reason that the strike begins to-night at 12 o'clock. The pending resolution which the Senate passed yesterday is substantially similar and has the same object in view, and if we were to consider and pass the Connally resolution to-day it would have to go back to the Senate, and the Senate would have to stop its proceedings and its discussion of the league of nations and then consider the resolution. It would then be too late. The strike would be on. I think the Committee on the Judiciary did the proper thing this morning in substituting this Senate resolution for the Connally resolution, and I think the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] did the proper thing this morning in asking the unanimous consent of the House for the immediate consideration of the Senate resolution.

However, I do not want the House to understand that I approve the course of the gentleman from Wyoming or any gentleman in this House, Republican or Democrat, in not trying long before to-day to get consideration by the House of some kind of a resolution to let the "walking delegates" and red, radical labor agitators and leaders of this country know that this House is behind the President in his wise and courageous stand [applause], and is behind any other constituted authority in the United States in its efforts to frustrate the conspiracy upon the part of the Lewises and the Fosters and the Fitzpatricks of this country against the very life of the Nation and its institutions. [Applause.]

This House has made a very serious mistake in not speaking its mind long before this. Earlier action might have had some effect in preventing the strike. But passage of this resolution now gives notice and warning to the patriotic people, in and out of labor organizations, that the time has come when they must take their stand with their Government and with its Constitution and its laws or with these Bolshevik leaders and their wild teachings and counsels. [Applause.] The choice must be made.

The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] was mistaken in saying that we asked the House to pass the Connally resolution. No such request was made. On last Tuesday and yesterday there was a request made for unanimous consent for this House to consider it, and that was objected to by the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming, the majority leader—not to pass it, but to give the House, to give all Republicans and all Democrats here a right to express their opinion on that resolution by their vote; and if that resolution was not worded properly, if it went too far or did not go far enough, the House could amend it. What I asked for, what we asked for, was an opportunity to consider it in the House, with the privilege of amendment if the House desired, so that we could send forth to the country the judgment and the intentions of this House upon the situation now confronting us. But we were denied that by the majority leader.

In conclusion let it be understood that neither the President's statement nor the statement of the Attorney General nor the Connally resolution nor the pending resolution affects or proposes to affect the right of labor, the right of the employees, individually or collectively, to quit work. This is not the issue involved in the present contest. The issue is, Will the Government and the constituted authorities throughout the country permit the Lewises, the Fosters, the Fitzpatricks, and other red, radical labor agitators and leaders to bring distress and disaster to the 110,000,000 American people? [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire how the time stands.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri has 5 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Wyoming has 10 minutes remaining.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I heartily approve the passage of this resolution as giving decided and desirable emphasis to the fact that Congress unanimously stands with the President and pledges its full support for the enforcement of law in the emergency growing out of the threatened coal strike or any similar conspiracy against government or the welfare of the people, but I do not think it can be said that there was ever any question about how the membership of this House stood, or that there is any occasion for any display of partisanship in the matter. The majority leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], asked unanimous consent on Monday at the earliest moment for the insertion of the President's proclamation in the RECORD, with the statement that he fully and heartily approved it. And a little later, when the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] was speaking in favor of the introduction of a resolution somewhat similar to this, my colleague from New York [Mr. SNYDER] asked if there was a single Member of this House who was opposed to the sentiments expressed in the President's proclamation. The answer was that no such Member was known.

For my own part on Sunday, as soon as I had read the proclamation, I wrote a letter to the Secretary of the Treasury, then presiding at Cabinet meetings, expressing my satisfaction and approval of the stand of the President and of the Cabinet, and at the same time I wrote and mailed for publication in the newspaper of which I am the editor, the Poughkeepsie (N. Y.) Eagle-News, the following editorial:

COAL STRIKE UNLAWFUL.

Once more the country is behind President Wilson. Certain great labor unions, in control of radical leaders who have absolutely no regard for the welfare of the country or even of their own members, whom they exploit, are seeking to hold up the country and the Government, and the President has met them as they deserve to be met. Nine people out of ten are with him. The demands of these leaders are absolutely preposterous. To grant them would curtail greatly the output of coal at a time when every consideration, not only of patriotism but of common humanity and of the rights of other workers of the country, demands that the output shall be kept up and increased. Nearly every industry in the country depends upon coal, and if coal should go as high as these radical leaders want it to a considerable number of industries would be forced to close.

The arrogance of these labor leaders, who have refused all offers of negotiation or arbitration, is unprecedented, and the President points out that they have called this great strike or entered into this great conspiracy apparently "without taking any vote upon the specific proposition by the individual members of the United Mine Workers of America throughout the United States."

The President points out that this great conspiracy has been entered into at a time when "the war itself is still a fact, when the world is still in suspense as to negotiations for peace, when our troops are still being transported, and when their means for transport is still in urgent need for fuel." He does not directly say that the very fact that the treaty of peace is not yet ratified is what gives him the authority to declare the strike unlawful, but that is, of course, the truth. The fuel and food laws are still in force, and any conspiracy to prevent the production or distribution of a necessity is unlawful and the leaders can be arrested. No new laws are needed to give the President full power to handle the situation.

The threatened strike is not primarily a strike, but a part of the revolutionary program of the radical socialists, and it might as well be met now. Once entered upon there should be no further offers of compromise. Order should be rigidly maintained, and the right to work of those who want to work should be fully safeguarded. It may be safely said that the great majority of miners, who are making from $5 to $15 a day, are not entering upon the strike willingly, and will gladly resume work if they can be given protection.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNALLY. I make the same request.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen have three legislative days in which to extend remarks on the subject of this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that all gentlemen have three legislative days in which to extend remarks on this resolution. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, will the gentleman have it understood that the privilege shall be extended to their own remarks?

Mr. MONDELL. To their own remarks and directly on the subject matter of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has nine minutes remaining.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD].

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, this is no time for petty politics or attempts to get party advantage. This body was practically unanimous in standing behind the President during the trying days of the war. There is just as much, if not more, reason for our standing behind him now in this crisis, because the problem that we have confronting us is fraught with more danger to the American people, unless properly solved, than were those that confronted us during the war. [Applause.] I have had occasion to criticize the President of the United States in times past, sometimes pretty severely, but upon this occasion I commend him from the bottom of my heart that he had the courage to speak in behalf of the American people in language that all can understand. [Applause.]

It strikes me that if there ever was a time when the representatives of the people of the United States should stand in solid phalanx in behalf of constituted government and good order and in behalf of the best interests of all the people whom they represent it is now. [Applause.] It seems almost unthinkable that a few men in this country should attempt to destroy the fabric of the Government that means so much to all who live within its embrace, and that is the real purpose of those who are responsible for this situation. In the district from which I come there is a seething mass of economic and social unrest—enemies of our Government preaching its overthrow. There are in that district the greatest steel mills in the world, and I know that a very large, yea, the larger, per cent of the men who are affected by the steel strike now on are out against their will. I have letters coming to me every day from men who say that they had no complaint to make either with reference to wages or working conditions, but that they have been forced out against their will at the behest of some men who are seeking to destroy the land of opportunity for the laboring men and the best interests of the true laboring men, by those who are bent on destruction and who care nothing for the result except the destruction they may bring about. [Applause.] I hope that the representatives of the American people will stand fast in the discharge of their duty; that they will not only provide a way for solving this question that is immediately confronting us in this crisis, but that they will find a way to prevent its recurrence in the future. During the war there were more than 6,000 strikes in the United States. There are more than 300 strikes pending in this country to-day. The President and all constituted authority is appealing to all men and all women to produce and produce more. Yet, in the face of these facts, these agencies are not only interfering with production but are absolutely destroying that which has been produced. It strikes me that there must be some way whereby the American people, who have been equal to every emergency in the past, can solve these difficulties between the people who are interested, without the interference of those who have no interest save their own personal sinister interests, without resorting to the strike as a mediator. Waste, indescribable waste! It is impossible to calculate the great waste that has occurred by reason of the 6,000 strikes that we had during the war and by reason of the strikes that are now in existence. If this proposed coal strike should be carried into effect, and on top of it should come the firemen's strike that is also threatened, tying up all the railroads in the country, the misery that would result is beyond calculation. It can not be and it must not be. Some way must be found to avert it that will do exact justice to all concerned. The representatives of the American people, by sounding their voices at this time in support of the patriotic and humane position taken by the President of the United States, can say not only to the men who are asked to go out and destroy their own best interests, and the best interests of the people of the United States, but they can say to all the American people that we are standing here in unalterable opposition to this attempt against our institutions, and that neither the autocracy of labor nor the autocracy of capital shall stand in the way of the proper conduct of our Government, the very purpose of which is to provide protection for all the people without distinction as to class. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I rejoice that we are united here to-day, every man of us, in our purpose to give solemn assurance to the country that we are standing back of the President of the United States in this crisis. [Applause.] There is no politics in this matter. Our only differences here are as to the best way in which we can effectively state our support. Some gentlemen think that the Connally resolution most effectively states it. Others, among whom I am one, think that this resolution most effectively states it. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WOOD] has just said that there are now 300 strikes prevailing in this country, but the Connally resolution refers to only one. In all of these strikes there may be menace to life, to liberty, and to property. Why not adopt the resolution which gives assurance to the country and to the world that this Congress will support in every case the President of the United States and this Government in their every effort to enforce law and order for the protection of life, liberty, and property in the United States of America? [Applause.]

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the Thomas resolution which just came over from the Senate and which we are now considering is in these words:

Whereas the enforcement of the law and the maintenance of order for the security of life and property and the protection of the individual citizen in the exercise of his constitutional rights is the first and paramount duty of the Government and must be at all times vigorously and effectively safeguarded by the use of every means essential to that end: Therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That we hereby give the national administration and all others in authority the assurance of our constant, continuous, and unqualified support in the use of such constitutional and lawful means as may be necessary to meet the present industrial emergency and in vindicating the majesty and power of the Government in enforcing obedience to and respect for the Constitution and the laws and in fully protecting every citizen in the maintenance and exercise of his lawful rights and the observance of his lawful obligations.

Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, ever since I have been here I have observed that when it comes to a question of upholding the law and keeping the peace in this country there is very little difference, if any at all, between Democrats and Republicans. [Applause.] We are simply Americans and glory in the fact. The American people love liberty. No people were ever more jealous of it, but it is liberty founded on and regulated by law. [Applause.] The President of the United States is simply the greatest Executive in the land, and therefore this Congress indorses what he has done, in this particular, at any rate. [Applause.] There ought to have been no politics lugged in here. King Solomon says, "There is a season for every purpose under the sun," and when it comes time for politics I am in it as much as anybody else. [Laughter.] But this is not the time for political flouts and jeers.

Politics ought not to have been mentioned here. I have a theory of my own that when a man is inaugurated President of the United States he becomes instanter the President of all of us. [Applause.] It does not make a bit of difference whether he is a Democrat or a Republican.

I was utterly amazed to hear the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] say that this is the only time the President of the United States ever mustered up courage enough to take a position on a great measure. The truth is that you Republicans and some Democrats have been lambasting the President for over six years because he exhibited too much courage in taking his positions. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I, like the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] and some others, think that if the resolution is going to be passed at all it should have been passed earlier, but nevertheless there is no doubt about what the people of the United States think, and we simply represent them. They have voiced their sentiments heretofore. It is a very poor time to be criticizing the President when he is sick in bed.

There are three parties to all these controversies, the capitalists, the labor unions, and the consumers. I will tell you something that some people do not seem to think about. There are about 4,000,000 labor-union men, as I understand it. I have helped them since I have been here in every reasonable and legitimate thing that they asked for, and I am going to continue it to the end. The laborer is worthy of his hire. Capital is entitled to a fair return on its investment. The consumers are entitled to be justly treated, not to be gouged or imposed upon or abused by anybody. [Applause.]

How many capitalists there are I do not know, and when a man begins to become a capitalist I do not know. I think if he has one dollar more than he has any need for he is, to that extent, a capitalist. There are, as I say, 4,000,000 labor-union men, but there are 110,000,000 consumers in this country. [Applause.] All three classes are interdependent. Without capital labor would be futile; without labor capital would be as useless as a painted ship on a painted sea; and without the consumers both of them would be in as sad case as was Othello, for their "occupation would be gone."

The capitalists are organized—I do not know whether by title or not. The laboring men are organized, but the consumers are not organized. But, my friends and fellow citizens, they can be organized. [Applause.] Then they will exercise supreme power in this land. They are beginning to be afraid that they are going to be ground between the upper and the nether millstones. I am in favor of this resolution because the President has done his duty, and he has done it fearlessly and well. [Applause.]

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has three minutes remaining.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday evening last, from a sick bed, the President of the United States made a very important and emphatic statement relative to the impending coal strike. I took occasion on Monday morning, at the very first opportunity that was afforded, to ask unanimous consent to place that statement in the RECORD, and it was placed in the RECORD, with the strongest personal indorsement that I could give it. I think that indorsement reflected the sentiment of practically all the Members of the House on both sides.

I regret that in the discussion this morning some gentlemen on the Democratic side have seen fit to use their time not to indorse the action about to be taken but to complain that at some time in the past we had not taken such action as they desired. Curiously enough none of these gentlemen have up to this time taken any great pains to express their approval of the stand of the President.

I am glad that such expressions of complaint relating to our attitude did not come from the leaders on the other side. I am gratified beyond words that we stand united to-day in the support of the constitutional authorities of the land and behind them in the support of the Constitution and the laws. We shall as a Congress at all times give the President and all others in authority unqualified support in any proper constitutional action they may take in upholding the might and majesty of the law. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired, and the question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 267, nays 0, not voting 165, as follows:

YEAS—267.

Alexander	Elston	Larsen	Rowe
Almon	Esch	Layton	Rubey
Anderson	Evans, Mont.	Lazaro	Rucker
Andrews, Nebr.	Evans, Nebr.	Lee, Ga.	Sabath
Anthony	Evans, Nev.	Linthicum	Sanders, Ind.
Aswell	Ferris	Lonergan	Sanders, La.
Ayres	Flood	Longworth	Sanford
Baer	Focht	McAndrews	Schall
Barbour	Foster	McArthur	Scott
Barkley	Freeman	McDuffie	Siegel
Bee	French	McFadden	Sinnott
Begg	Fuller, Ill.	McGlennon	Smith, Idaho
Benham	Gallagher	McLaughlin, Mich.	Smith, Mich.
Black	Garland	McPherson	Smithwick
Bland, Ind.	Garrett	MacCrate	Snyder
Bland, Mo.	Glynn	MacGregor	Steagall
Blanton	Godwin, N. C.	Madden	Stedman
Box	Goodwin, Ark.	Major	Steenerson
Brand	Graham, Ill.	Mann, S. C.	Stephens, Ohio
Briggs	Green, Iowa	Mansfield	Stevenson
Brinson	Greene, Mass.	Mapes	Stiness
Brooks, Ill.	Greene, Vt.	Martin	Stoll
Brooks, Pa.	Griffin	Mays	Strong, Kans.
Browne	Hadley	Merritt	Strong, Pa.
Brumbaugh	Hamilton	Michener	Summers, Wash.
Buchanan	Hardy, Colo.	Miller	Sumners, Tex.
Burdick	Harrison	Monahan, Wis.	Sweet
Burroughs	Hastings	Mondell	Tague
Butler	Haugen	Montague	Taylor, Colo.
Byrnes, S. C.	Hawley	Moore, Ohio	Taylor, Tenn.
Byrns, Tenn.	Hayden	Moore, Va.	Temple
Campbell, Pa.	Hays	Morgan	Thompson
Candler	Hernandez	Mott	Tillman
Cannon	Hersey	Neely	Tilson
Caraway	Hersman	Nelson, Me.	Timberlake
Carss	Hickey	Nelson, Wis.	Towner
Carter	Hoch	Newton, Minn.	Upshaw
Chindblom	Holland	Nichols, Mich.	Vaile
Christopherson	Houghton	Nolan	Vestal
Clark, Fla.	Hudspeth	O'Connor	Vinson
Clark, Mo.	Hull, Iowa	Olmsted	Volstead
Classon	Hull, Tenn.	Oliver	Ward
Cleary	Humphreys	Olney	Wason
Coady	Husted	Osborne	Watkins
Connally	Igoe	Overstreet	Watson, Va.
Cooper	Jacoway	Padgett	Weaver
Crago	James	Parker	Webb
Cramton	Jefferis	Parrish	Webster
Crisp	Johnson, Miss.	Platt	Welling
Currie, Mich.	Johnson, Wash.	Porter	Welty
Curry, Calif.	Jones, Tex.	Pou	Whaley
Dale	Juul	Purnell	Wheeler
Davis, Tenn.	Kahn	Quin	White, Kans.
Denison	Kearns	Rainey, Ala.	White, Me
Dent	Keller	Raker	Williams
Dickinson, Mo.	Kelly, Pa.	Ramseyer	Wilson, Ill.
Dickinson, Iowa	Kettner	Randall, Calif.	Wilson, La.
Dominick	King	Randall, Wis.	Wingo
Dowell	Kinkaid	Rayburn	Winslow
Dunbar	Kitchin	Reavis	Wood, Ind.
Dunn	Kleczka	Reed, W. Va.	Woods, Va.
Dupré	Knutson	Rhodes	Wright
Eagan	Kraus	Ricketts	Yates
Echols	Kreider	Riddick	Young, N. Dak.
Edmonds	Lampert	Robinson, N. C.	Young, Tex.
Elliott	Lanham	Romjue	Zihlman
Ellsworth	Lankford	Rose

NAYS—0.

NOT VOTING—165.

Ackerman	Davis, Minn.	Hamill	McClintic
Andrews, Md.	Dempsey	Hardy, Tex.	McCulloch
Ashbrook	Dewalt	Haskell	McKenzie
Babka	Donovan	Heflin	McKeown
Bacharach	Dooling	Hicks	McKinley
Bankhead	Doremus	Hill	McKinley
Bell	Doughton	Howard	McLane
Benson	Drane	Huddleston	McLaughlin, Nebr.
Blackmon	Dyer	Hulings	Magee
Bland, Va.	Eagle	Hutchinson	Maher
Boies	Emerson	Ireland	Mann, Ill.
Booher	Fairfield	Johnson, Ky.	Mason
Bowers	Fess	Johnson, S. Dak.	Mead
Britten	Fields	Johnston, N. Y.	Minahan, N. J.
Browning	Fisher	Jones, Pa.	Moon
Burke	Fordney	Kelley, Mich.	Mooney
Caldwell	Frear	Kendall	Moore, Pa.
Campbell, Kans.	Fuller, Mass.	Kennedy, Iowa	Moores, Ind.
Cantrill	Gallivan	Kennedy, R. I.	Morin
Carew	Gandy	Kiess	Mudd
Casey	Ganly	Kincheloe	Murphy
Cole	Gard	LaGuardia	Newton, Mo.
Collier	Garner	Langley	Nicholls, S. C.
Copley	Goldfogle	Lea, Calif.	O'Connell
Costello	Good	Lehlbach	Ogden
Crowther	Goodall	Lesher	Paige
Cullen	Goodykoontz	Little	Park
Dallinger	Gould	Luce	Pell
Darrow	Graham, Pa.	Lufkin	Peters
Davey	Griest	Luhring	Phelan

Radcliffe	Sanders, N. Y.	Smith, Ill.	Vare
Rainey, H. T.	Saunders, Va.	Smith, N. Y.	Venable
Rainey, J. W.	Scully	Snell	Voigt
Ramsey	Sears	Steele	Walsh
Reber	Sells	Stephens, Miss.	Walters
Reed, N. Y.	Sherwood	Sullivan	Watson, Pa.
Riordan	Shreve	Swope	Wilson, Pa.
Robsion, Ky.	Sims	Taylor, Ark.	Wise
Rodenberg	Sinclair	Thomas	Woodyard
Rogers	Sisson	Tincher
Rouse	Slemp	Tinkham
Rowan	Small	Treadway

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. TREADWAY with Mr. BOOHER.

Mr. VOIGT with Mr. HARDY of Texas.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. CARTER.

Mr. GRIEST with Mr. MEAD.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania with Mr. BLACKMON.

Mr. LUCE with Mr. VENABLE.

Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. FIELDS.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

Mr. MAGEE with Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. TINCHER with Mr. DOUGHTON.

Mr. BOIES with Mr. SEARS.

Mr. GOOD with Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY.

Mr. GOODYKOONTZ with Mr. PHELAN.

Mr. ACKERMAN with Mr. WISE.

Mr. LAGUARDIA with Mr. MCCLINTIC.

Mr. ANDREWS of Maryland with Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania.

Mr. BACHARACH with Mr. LESHER.

Mr. BOWERS with Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas.

Mr. LEHLBACH with Mr. LEA of California.

Mr. LITTLE with Mr. JOHNSTON of New York.

Mr. BRITTEN with Mr. SULLIVAN.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. PELL.

Mr. HICKS with Mr. PARK.

Mr. HULINGS with Mr. O'CONNELL.

Mr. LUHRING with Mr. HUDDLESTON.

Mr. SHREVE with Mr. CASEY.

Mr. MCCULLOCH with Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. BROWNING with Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. HUTCHINSON with Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina.

Mr. IRELAND with Mr. MOONEY.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota with Mr. MOON.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania with Mr. MINAHAN of New Jersey.

Mr. MCKENZIE with Mr. HEFLIN.

Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. COSTELLO with Mr. SMITH of New York.

Mr. SLEMP with Mr. CAREW.

Mr. CANTRILL with Mr. SMITH of Illinois.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Nebraska with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. CROWTHER with Mr. SMALL.

Mr. DARROW with Mr. SISSON.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota with Mr. SIMS.

Mr. SNELL with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. DEMPSEY with Mr. SHERWOOD.

Mr. MANN of Illinois with Mr. GARNER.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania with Mr. GARD.

Mr. MORIN with Mr. GANLY.

Mr. MUDD with Mr. GANDY.

Mr. MURPHY with Mr. GALLIVAN.

Mr. SWOPE with Mr. BLAND of Virginia.

Mr. TINKHAM with Mr. BENSON.

Mr. VARE with Mr. BELL.

Mr. WALSH with Mr. BANKHEAD.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri with Mr. FISHER.

Mr. OGDEN with Mr. EAGLE.

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. DRANE.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. MAHER.

Mr. PETERS with Mr. DOREMUS.

Mr. EMERSON with Mr. SCULLY.

Mr. FAIRFIELD with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia.

Mr. FESS with Mr. ROWAN.

Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa with Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. ROUSE.

Mr. FREAR with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts with Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY.

Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island with Mr. MCKINIRY.

Mr. KIESS with Mr. MCKEOWN.

Mr. RADCLIFFE with Mr. DOOLING.

Mr. RAMSEY with Mr. DONOVAN.

Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. DEWALT.

Mr. WALTERS with Mr. BABKA.

Mr. WOODYARD with Mr. ASHBROOK.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. SANDERS of New York with Mr. CULLEN.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. CARTER, to be effective beginning to-morrow. I desire to be recorded "yea," and have so voted; and I am quite sure that the gentleman from Oklahoma desires also to be recorded "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

ARRESTS ON DEPORTATION WARRANTS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I call up House resolution 365, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington calls up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 365.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, requested to report to the House of Representatives the number of arrests on deportation warrants—

(a) Under authority of that provision of section 19 of the act of February 5, 1917, which provides for deportation of aliens who shall be found advocating or teaching anarchy, the unlawful destruction of property, or the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States; and

(b) Under authority of the provisions of the act of October 16, 1918.

Such report by the Secretary of Labor to include a statement showing the number of arrests made and the causes therefor; the number of deportations effected and the causes therefor; the number of cases in which deportation was defeated, and the causes or grounds upon which deportation proceedings were undertaken.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is in the form necessary to make it a privileged resolution. It is not unfriendly to the Department of Labor. It must not be presumed that the Labor Department is withholding the information which is requested for the information of the Members of the House for the information of the committee which reports the resolution, the Committee on Naturalization and Immigration. It will be noticed that the resolution called for the numbers of persons arrested under certain clauses of the immigration act of February 5, 1917, and under the provisions of the act of October 16, 1918, which was a broadening of the clauses of the first-named immigration act. Many Members of the House have been asked by their constituents as to why numerous arrests have been made of aliens under these provisions of the law, and why, after these aliens have been started toward actual deportation, they have not been deported. Now, it has become the belief of your committee that there is some difficulty, not in the fault of this particular department, but perhaps through the failure of certain laws to apply, or perhaps the laws not permitting sufficient coordination between the Department of Justice and this department. What is the difficulty? Are the clauses of the immigration acts mentioned in the resolution not strong enough? Are we in the law asking the Department of Labor to do more than it has the machinery to do or to do that it has not the funds with which to do? We are not asking in this resolution for answers to these questions which I have propounded, but we are asking for certain facts to assist the committee in coming to conclusions.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. With pleasure.

Mr. SABATH. Could not the committee secure this information from the Secretary? Does not the gentleman believe that the committee could get this information without the passage of this resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will say to the gentleman I have not made a direct written request for the information in this particular form. The committee has made requests, has received replies, has heard witnesses—although the Secretary has not been asked to appear—but has been unable to secure the exact facts, and that is what we want. I feel that we can save the time of the Secretary and of the committee by requesting a direct, concise, official report.

Mr. SABATH. The fact is this, that I do not wish to place the Secretary of Labor in the position that he has refused the committee——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, no.

Mr. SABATH. Or any Member this information.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think the Secretary will be glad to give the information. I think he will be glad to elaborate the details to the committee soon after we have had a basic statement. Remember, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization is not an appropriating committee, and, for the information of the House, let me say that if it is disclosed that the Department of Labor, which has the authority to enforce the carrying out of the laws concerning immigration and to make deportations, is without sufficient machinery actually to do the work, or without sufficient appropriation to do a greatly increasing work, we will be able to show that fact by this inquiry. Or if court convictions are necessary to secure certain deportations, we may desire to recommend amendment of the law.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will.

Mr. RAKER. The resolution requires that the number of arrests on deportation warrants under both of those acts named be furnished. Now, there were a number of arrests and deportations started, but the gentleman's resolution will not get the number which were actually deported, if any. Does not the gentleman believe that he ought to amend, in line 3, after the word "warrants," by adding "and the number deported"? The gntleman will see we will not get the deportations—only the number of arrests.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman will find that resolution calls in another place for the number of cases in which deportation was defeated and the causes therefor and the grounds upon which deportation proceedings were undertaken. Now, by the process of elimination we will discover——

Mr. RAKER. Well, I do not believe there will be an objection if the gentleman will insert at the end of line 3 "the number deported," and then you will get the number arrested and the number deported and the number now remaining upon which there is a contest.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The only question of putting that in is that there is no desire to add to the labor of the department. We do not care for all deportation cases, but only certain kinds of cases which are specifically mentioned.

Mr. RAKER. Under these particular acts for these offenses named?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Does not the language in line 14, "the number of deportations affected," cover it?

Mr. RAKER. That is another subdivision, another law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think the words quoted cover it. If the gentleman will read the bill carefully, he will see that "a" and "b" are mentioned, and that then "a" and "b" are included in the paragraph, beginning with line 12. That covers all. If there are no further questions, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER BETWEEN YANKTON COUNTY, S. DAK., AND CEDAR COUNTY, NEBR.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a request for unanimous consent to take up at this time the bill S. 2883, which is a bridge bill authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Yankton County, S. Dak., and Cedar County, Nebr. The reason for asking this action at this time is that the parties there have assurance that the Meridian Highway will be laid out through there if this bridge is constructed. They have made all arrangements for the construction of the bridge, and now there should be final action on the bill in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how long will this take?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. It will take two minutes, not over that.

Mr. EDMONDS. If it will not take any longer, I shall not object, but we have been waiting all day to get in on the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the resolution have the approval of the War Department?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes; and the report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2883) authorizing the Meridian Highway Bridge Co., a corporation, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto across the Missouri River between Yankton County, S. Dak., and Cedar County, Nebr.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Meridian Highway Bridge Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of South Dakota, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point or points suitable to the interest of navigation, in section 18, township 93, range 55 west, or section 13, township 93, range 56 west, Yankton County, S. Dak., to the shore opposite thereto at a point in sections 11 or 12, township 33 north, range 1 west, Cedar County, Nebr., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bills be considered in the committee in the regular order on the calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] asks unanimous consent that the bills may be taken up in the regular order as they appear on the calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CELVELAND TRINIDAD PAVING CO.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5238) for the relief of the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co.

This bill has been up twice, but owing to the absence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON], whom I do not see here now, I would suggest that it be passed over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CHANGE OF NAME OF STEAMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6857) authorizing the change of the name of the steamer Charlotte Graveraet Breitung to T. K. Maher.

Mr. EDMONDS. I ask that the bill be read, Mr. Chairman.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon the application of the owner, the Morrow Steamship Co., of Mentor, Lake County, Ohio, to change the name of the steamer Charlotte Graveraet Breitung, official No. 27665, to the T. K. Maher.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, it is just the ordinary procedure to change the name of a steamer before the bill that passed a week ago becomes a law. I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does this not also involve the changing of the sex of the steamer?

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman well knows that a steamer is always a "she."

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. How much debate is allowed on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] is entitled to an hour.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. And is all the debate confined to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The debate is confined to the bill under the rules.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Does the Chair state that the debate is confined to the bill under the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that as to bills on the Private Calendar debate is confined to the bill. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

FAXON, HORTON & GALLAGHER, AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6377) for the relief of Faxon, Horton & Gallagher; Long Bros. Grocery Co.; A. Rieger; Rothenberg & Schloss; Ryley, Wilson & Co.; and Van Noy News Co.

The bill was read as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Faxon, Horton & Gallagher the sum of $888; to Long Bros. Grocery Co. the sum of $197; to A. Rieger the sum of $327; to Rothenberg & Schloss the sum of $441; to Ryley, Wilson & Co. the sum of $466; and to Van Noy News Co. the sum of $866; said sums being in full payment of the value of United States internal-revenue stamps destroyed by flood, as shown by the findings of the Court of Claims, reported in Senate Document No. 642,

Radcliffe	Sanders, N. Y.	Smith, Ill.	Vare
Rainey, H. T.	Saunders, Va.	Smith, N. Y.	Venable
Rainey, J. W.	Scully	Snell	Voigt
Ramsey	Sears	Steele	Walsh
Reber	Sells	Stephens, Miss.	Walters
Reed, N. Y.	Sherwood	Sullivan	Watson, Pa.
Riordan	Shreve	Swope	Wilson, Pa.
Robsion, Ky.	Sims	Taylor, Ark.	Wise
Rodenberg	Sinclair	Thomas	Woodyard
Rogers	Sisson	Tincher
Rouse	Slemp	Tinkham
Rowan	Small	Treadway

So the resolution was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. TREADWAY with Mr. BOOHER.
Mr. VOIGT with Mr. HARDY of Texas.
Mr. SNYDER with Mr. CARTER.
Mr. GRIEST with Mr. MEAD.
Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania with Mr. BLACKMON.
Mr. LUCE with Mr. VENABLE.
Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. FIELDS.
Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.
Mr. MAGEE with Mr. THOMAS.
Mr. TINCHER with Mr. DOUGHTON.
Mr. BOIES with Mr. SEARS.
Mr. GOOD with Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY.
Mr. GOODYKOONTZ with Mr. PHELAN.
Mr. ACKERMAN with Mr. WISE.
Mr. LAGUARDIA with Mr. MCCLINTIC.
Mr. ANDREWS of Maryland with Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania.
Mr. BACHARACH with Mr. LESHER.
Mr. BOWERS with Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas.
Mr. LEHLBACH with Mr. LEA of California.
Mr. LITTLE with Mr. JOHNSTON of New York.
Mr. BRITTEN with Mr. SULLIVAN.
Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. PELL.
Mr. HICKS with Mr. PARK.
Mr. HULINGS with Mr. O'CONNELL.
Mr. LUHRING with Mr. HUDDLESTON.
Mr. SHREVE with Mr. CASEY.
Mr. MCCULLOCH with Mr. HOWARD.
Mr. BROWNING with Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi.
Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas with Mr. STEELE.
Mr. HUTCHINSON with Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina.
Mr. IRELAND with Mr. MOONEY.
Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota with Mr. MOON.
Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania with Mr. MINAHAN of New Jersey.
Mr. MCKENZIE with Mr. HEFLIN.
Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. HAMILL.
Mr. COSTELLO with Mr. SMITH of New York.
Mr. SLEMP with Mr. CAREW.
Mr. CANTRILL with Mr. SMITH of Illinois.
Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Nebraska with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.
Mr. CROWTHER with Mr. SMALL.
Mr. DARROW with Mr. SISSON.
Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota with Mr. SIMS.
Mr. SNELL with Mr. CALDWELL.
Mr. DEMPSEY with Mr. SHERWOOD.
Mr. MANN of Illinois with Mr. GARNER.
Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania with Mr. GARD.
Mr. MORIN with Mr. GANLY.
Mr. MUDD with Mr. GANDY.
Mr. MURPHY with Mr. GALLIVAN.
Mr. SWOPE with Mr. BLAND of Virginia.
Mr. TINKHAM with Mr. BENSON.
Mr. VARE with Mr. BELL.
Mr. WALSH with Mr. BANKHEAD.
Mr. NEWTON of Missouri with Mr. FISHER.
Mr. OGDEN with Mr. EAGLE.
Mr. PAIGE with Mr. DRANE.
Mr. KELLEY of Michigan with Mr. MAHER.
Mr. PETERS with Mr. DOREMUS.
Mr. EMERSON with Mr. SCULLY.
Mr. FAIRFIELD with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia.
Mr. FESS with Mr. ROWAN.
Mr. KENNEDY of Iowa with Mr. MCLANE.
Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. ROUSE.
Mr. FREAR with Mr. RIORDAN.
Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts with Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY.
Mr. KENNEDY of Rhode Island with Mr. MCKINRY.
Mr. KIESS with Mr. MCKEOWN.
Mr. RADCLIFFE with Mr. DOOLING.
Mr. RAMSEY with Mr. DONOVAN.
Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. DEWALT.
Mr. WALTERS with Mr. BABKA.
Mr. WOODYARD with Mr. ASHBROOK.
Mr. ROGERS with Mr. DAVEY.
Mr. SANDERS of New York with Mr. CULLEN.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I have a pair with the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. CARTER, to be effective beginning to-morrow. I desire to be recorded "yea," and have so voted; and I am quite sure that the gentleman from Oklahoma desires also to be recorded "yea."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

ARRESTS ON DEPORTATION WARRANTS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, I call up House resolution 365, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Washington calls up a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 365.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Labor be, and he is hereby, requested to report to the House of Representatives the number of arrests on deportation warrants—

(a) Under authority of that provision of section 19 of the act of February 5, 1917, which provides for deportation of aliens who shall be found advocating or teaching anarchy, the unlawful destruction of property, or the overthrow by force or violence of the Government of the United States; and

(b) Under authority of the provisions of the act of October 16, 1918.

Such report by the Secretary of Labor to include a statement showing the number of arrests made and the causes therefor; the number of deportations effected and the causes therefor; the number of cases in which deportation was defeated, and the causes or grounds upon which deportation proceedings were undertaken.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this resolution is in the form necessary to make it a privileged resolution. It is not unfriendly to the Department of Labor. It must not be presumed that the Labor Department is withholding the information which is requested for the information of the Members of the House for the information of the committee which reports the resolution, the Committee on Naturalization and Immigration. It will be noticed that the resolution called for the numbers of persons arrested under certain clauses of the immigration act of February 5, 1917, and under the provisions of the act of October 16, 1918, which was a broadening of the clauses of the first-named immigration act. Many Members of the House have been asked by their constituents as to why numerous arrests have been made of aliens under these provisions of the law, and why, after these aliens have been started toward actual deportation, they have not been deported. Now, it has become the belief of your committee that there is some difficulty, not in the fault of this particular department, but perhaps through the failure of certain laws to apply, or perhaps the laws not permitting sufficient coordination between the Department of Justice and this department. What is the difficulty? Are the clauses of the immigration acts mentioned in the resolution not strong enough? Are we in the law asking the Department of Labor to do more than it has the machinery to do or to do that it has not the funds with which to do? We are not asking in this resolution for answers to these questions which I have propounded, but we are asking for certain facts to assist the committee in coming to conclusions.

Mr. SABATH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. With pleasure.

Mr. SABATH. Could not the committee secure this information from the Secretary? Does not the gentleman believe that the committee could get this information without the passage of this resolution?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will say to the gentleman I have not made a direct written request for the information in this particular form. The committee has made requests, has received replies, has heard witnesses—although the Secretary has not been asked to appear—but has been unable to secure the exact facts, and that is what we want. I feel that we can save the time of the Secretary and of the committee by requesting a direct, concise, official report.

Mr. SABATH. The fact is this, that I do not wish to place the Secretary of Labor in the position that he has refused the committee——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Oh, no.

Mr. SABATH. Or any Member this information.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think the Secretary will be glad to give the information. I think he will be glad to elaborate the details to the committee soon after we have had a basic statement. Remember, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization is not an appropriating committee, and, for the information of the House, let me say that if it is disclosed that the Department of Labor, which has the authority to enforce the carrying out of the laws concerning immigration and to make deportations, is without sufficient machinery actually to do the work, or without sufficient appropriation to do a greatly increasing work, we will be able to show that fact by this inquiry. Or if court convictions are necessary to secure certain deportations, we may desire to recommend amendment of the law.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will.

Mr. RAKER. The resolution requires that the number of arrests on deportation warrants under both of those acts named be furnished. Now, there were a number of arrests and deportations started, but the gentleman's resolution will not get the number which were actually deported, if any. Does not the gentleman believe that he ought to amend, in line 3, after the word "warrants," by adding "and the number deported"? The gntleman will see we will not get the deportations—only the number of arrests.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman will find that resolution calls in another place for the number of cases in which deportation was defeated and the causes therefor and the grounds upon which deportation proceedings were undertaken. Now, by the process of elimination we will discover——

Mr. RAKER. Well, I do not believe there will be an objection if the gentleman will insert at the end of line 3 "the number deported," and then you will get the number arrested and the number deported and the number now remaining upon which there is a contest.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The only question of putting that in is that there is no desire to add to the labor of the department. We do not care for all deportation cases, but only certain kinds of cases which are specifically mentioned.

Mr. RAKER. Under these particular acts for these offenses named?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will.

Mr. GALLAGHER. Does not the language in line 14, "the number of deportations affected," cover it?

Mr. RAKER. That is another subdivision, another law.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I think the words quoted cover it. If the gentleman will read the bill carefully, he will see that "a" and "b" are mentioned, and that then "a" and "b" are included in the paragraph, beginning with line 12. That covers all. If there are no further questions, I ask for a vote on the resolution.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER BETWEEN YANKTON COUNTY, S. DAK., AND CEDAR COUNTY, NEBR.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a request for unanimous consent to take up at this time the bill S. 2883, which is a bridge bill authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Yankton County, S. Dak., and Cedar County, Nebr. The reason for asking this action at this time is that the parties there have assurance that the Meridian Highway will be laid out through there if this bridge is constructed. They have made all arrangements for the construction of the bridge, and now there should be final action on the bill in the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how long will this take?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. It will take two minutes, not over that.

Mr. EDMONDS. If it will not take any longer, I shall not object, but we have been waiting all day to get in on the floor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the resolution have the approval of the War Department?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes; and the report of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2883) authorizing the Meridian Highway Bridge Co., a corporation, to construct and maintain a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto across the Missouri River between Yankton County, S. Dak., and Cedar County, Nebr.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Meridian Highway Bridge Co., a corporation organized under the laws of the State of South Dakota, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge or bridges and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at a point or points suitable to the interest of navigation, in section 18, township 93, range 55 west, or section 13, township 93, range 56 west, Yankton County, S. Dak., to the shore opposite thereto at a point in sections 11 or 12, township 33 north, range 1 west, Cedar County, Nebr., in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bills be considered in the committee in the regular order on the calendar.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] asks unanimous consent that the bills may be taken up in the regular order as they appear on the calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CELVELAND TRINIDAD PAVING CO.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 5238) for the relief of the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Co.

This bill has been up twice, but owing to the absence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. EMERSON], whom I do not see here now, I would suggest that it be passed over without prejudice.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

CHANGE OF NAME OF STEAMER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6857) authorizing the change of the name of the steamer Charlotte Gravcruet Breitung to T. K. Maher.

Mr. EDMONDS. I ask that the bill be read, Mr. Chairman.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed, upon the application of the owner, the Morrow Steamship Co., of Mentor, Lake County, Ohio, to change the name of the steamer Charlotte Gravcruet Breitung, official No. 27665, to the T. K. Maher.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, it is just the ordinary procedure to change the name of a steamer before the bill that passed a week ago becomes a law. I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, does this not also involve the changing of the sex of the steamer?

Mr. EDMONDS. The gentleman well knows that a steamer is always a "she."

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. How much debate is allowed on this bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] is entitled to an hour.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. And is all the debate confined to the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. The debate is confined to the bill under the rules.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana. Does the Chair state that the debate is confined to the bill under the rule?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that as to bills on the Private Calendar debate is confined to the bill. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

FAXON, HORTON & GALLAGHER, AND OTHERS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6377) for the relief of Faxon, Horton & Gallagher; Long Bros. Grocery Co.; A. Rieger; Rothenberg & Schloss; Ryley, Wilson & Co.; and Van Noy News Co.

The bill was read as follows.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Faxon, Horton & Gallagher the sum of $888; to Long Bros. Grocery Co. the sum of $197; to A. Rieger the sum of $327; to Rothenberg & Schloss the sum of $441; to Ryley, Wilson & Co. the sum of $466; and to Van Noy News Co. the sum of $866; said sums being in full payment of the value of United States internal-revenue stamps destroyed by flood, as shown by the findings of the Court of Claims, reported in Senate Document No. 642,

Sixty-fourth Congress, second session; and a sum sufficient for said purposes is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I am going to let the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] explain this bill, as he has examined it thoroughly. I will yield to him such time as he may need for that explanation.

Mr. BLANTON. In that connection, will the gentleman yield to me to ask some questions?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would like to make a statement on the bill first.

Mr. BLANTON. I think, probably, with the suggestion I will make, the opposition heretofore had on the part of the minority will be withdrawn.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I will make a brief statement, and then the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will be glad to give a further explanation.

This bill has been before the Committee on Claims a number of times and favorably reported, but never has been acted upon in the House. It provides for the payment of certain sums to various firms located in Kansas City, Mo. The matter was referred some years ago to the Court of Claims, and a finding of fact was made, and upon that finding the committee has based its action.

Now, these different firms—Faxon, Horton & Gallagher; Long Bros. Grocery Co.; A. Rieger; Rothenberg & Schloss; Ryley, Wilson & Co.; and the Van Noy News Co.—were all in business and operating in 1903 in Kansas City at the time of a great flood which lasted some three days and caused a great deal of destruction. During that flood their warehouses and stores were flooded and their property destroyed. Amongst this property there was a number of caddies and boxes of cigars, tobacco, cigarettes, and so forth, each one bearing internal revenue stamps, and upon the loss of the stamps, properly vouched for and identified, these different firms made claim for compensation on the ground that the stamps had been destroyed and that no value had been received from them. The Court of Claims in their finding of fact stated that the firms were in business at the time, and the following statement was made:

II. On May 31, 1903, and for several days thereafter a great flood occurred in the Missouri River at Kansas City, Mo., which overflowed and destroyed a large quantity of cigars, cigarettes, tobacco, and snuff belonging to all of the above-named claimants and destroyed the United States internal-revenue stamps attached to the boxes and packages of cigars, cigarettes, tobacco, and snuff. The value of the internal-revenue stamps so destroyed on the boxes and packages aforesaid which belonged to Faxon, Horton & Gallagher was $888. The value of the said stamps on boxes and packages belonging to Long Bros. Grocery Co. was $197. The value of said stamps on boxes and packages belonging to A. Rieger was $327. The value of said stamps on boxes and packages belonging to Rothenberg & Schloss was $441. The value of said stamps on boxes and packages belonging to Ryley, Wilson & Co. was $466. The value of said stamps on boxes and packages belonging to the Van Noy News Co. was $866. The value of all of said stamps so destroyed has not been paid to any of these claimants. These internal-revenue stamps had been attached to the boxes and packages of cigars, cigarettes, tobacco, and snuff by the manufacturers thereof and not by the claimants.

III. Claims for pay for the value of said stamps were made by all of the aforesaid claimants to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Treasury Department, directly after said loss, but were disallowed for want of authority of law to pay the same. Said loss was entirely without fault or neglect of all of the said claimants.

CONCLUSION.

Upon the foregoing findings of fact the court concludes that these claimants named in the first finding have neither legal nor equitable claims against the United States and any payment thereof rests in the bounty of Congress.

Mr. Chairman, the committee went thoroughly into the case and into this finding of fact, and considered that compensation was due these claimants, and that the statement of the court, where it says that "neither legal nor equitable claims against the United States" are found, simply refers to the legal technicality of a claim resting against the United States Government for the loss of these internal-revenue stamps. The Claims Committee has wider authority than strict law and strict legal interpretation, and is empowered to bring in what it considers fair, reasonable, and just findings on these bills. In this case these internal-revenue stamps were sold for a certain purpose, which was that the manufacturer thereby secured the right to sell these goods, and the dealers thereby secured the right to sell them. Now, having never served that purpose, and their loss being established with proper identification, it is just and fair to recompense these dealers for the amount.

Mr. BLACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman, of course, recognizes that in the payment of taxes on tobacco, cigars, and snuff the tax is an accrued, settled liability when the stamp is attached to the package. Now, the gentleman does not contend, does he, that these merchants who had bought from the manufacturers had ever paid any sort of tax on these particular commodities? And, therefore, I am at a loss to understand how the gentleman thinks the Federal Government can entertain either a legal or an equitable claim to repay taxes which it has collected, to some one who in no way paid the tax.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I want to answer the question, Mr. Chairman, and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] will give further information later. We do contend that the purpose for which these stamps were sold was well known and specific; that that purpose was to give to the manufacturer and the retailer or the wholesaler the right to vend those products; that it was the intent of Congress to impose an internal-revenue tax upon dealers only where the goods are actually used in trade. We contend that those stamps have not served that purpose, and that there was never any opportunity for them to serve that purpose. These stamps have no great intrinsic value. They are only paper evidence that a tax on commercial transactions has been paid.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

If your premise is correct, does it not follow that in every fire that we might have in this country where tobacco and snuff and cigars are not insured and the commodities are destroyed with the stamps on them, the Government of the United States would just as legally and just as equitably and just as morally be bound to refund that tax as it would be if the commodities were destroyed by flood, and we would be confronted with an interminable amount of such claims if we once recognized a factor of that kind?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The gentleman understands that when bank notes, for instance, issued under the authority of the United States, are destroyed by fire or in any way mutilated beyond all use, all that it is necessary to do is to send back the fragments of those bills or bank notes and the amount will be refunded in new bills. Why is that? Simply because the money did not serve the purpose for which it was issued. Its destruction meant that it was out of circulation. The Government desires to go on record as being willing to pay that obligation.

Now, the same thing is true in this case. These stamps are issued for the purpose of permitting the sale of tobacco, cigars, cigarettes, and so forth. They were not so used, and therefore we contend that it is equitable and just and reasonable to return the amount of money that was paid for those stamps.

Mr. BLACK. If they are issued for a purpose, do they not serve that purpose when they are attached to the original package and the tax thereby is paid?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Absolutely not. The purpose is to permit the sale of these goods, and until they are sold there has been no advantage whatever derived. The Government is therefore in the position of taking money from certain citizens without rendering any service therefor.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Who bought these revenue stamps and affixed them to the packages?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. The finding of fact shows that they were bought by the manufacturers and affixed to the packages.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. They were not bought by these claimants?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. They were bought by these claimants in effect, though affixed by the manufacturer, because the claimants paid for them.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Yes.

Mr. BAER. Take an instance like this: In our country we have a hailstorm once in a while. If the hail comes down and wipes the stamps off a cigar box could the owner bring in a claim and say that it did not subserve its purpose?

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. That is a far-fetched case.

Mr. BAER. If you would take into account losses of this kind on account of rain or fire or hail, as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] suggests, we would have thousands of claims.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. If it can be proved that these revenue stamps have been destroyed without having served their purpose, and are properly identified, I think the money should be returned. The committee has acted upon that principle several times.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri rose.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, before I enter into the merits of this case, I want to call attention to the decision——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. With regard to this claim——

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I believe I have charge of the time. I understood the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] wanted to ask a question. But I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask a question or two of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. EDMONDS. Then I will yield to the gentleman from Missouri such time as he needs to explain the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state that during the Sixty-fifth Congress, when a member of the Committee on Claims, I filed a minority report against this claim—being the document read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] objecting—upon the ground that if we allowed this claim, as suggested by my colleague from Texas [Mr. BLACK], every time a person had his house burned, if perhaps he had in it Liberty bonds which he could not identify by number, or prove the existence of by evidence extraneous of his own testimony; every time a person had postage stamps destroyed in his store or in his private home; or every time a person had this or that thing connected with the Government, documentary stamps of all kinds destroyed, he could come to Congress and ask to be reimbursed, and we would have to rely wholly upon his own testimony, and that would open up such an avenue for fraud and a great flood of cases that it ought not to be the policy of Congress to recognize a claim of that kind. I went into a lengthy discussion of that question in the minority report. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], after learning of that minority report, assures me that he has evidence of the fact and that he is able to furnish both the committee and the House with proof of the fact that these particular stamps were identified, were seen and identified in their damaged condition after loss, by Government agents who passed upon this matter; that they were identified to the extent of ascertaining the amount found to be due by the Court of Claims. If that is the case, it meets with one objection raised in the minority report.

But I want to say this, that there ought not to be a policy established by Congress whereby every time a person loses stamps or bonds or war-saving certificates, unless they can be absolutely identified by number or by evidence submitted to a Government official, so that the Government side of the case can be heard and determined—it ought not to be the policy of Congress to allow them. But where they can identify them by number, for instance, as might be the case where you would lose by fire or water a thousand-dollar Liberty bond, if you can establish the number and ownership of that bond and identify it beyond a question of doubt, then the Secretary of the Treasury should allow the claim and issue a duplicate bond in lieu thereof.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BLANTON. And it would not require any act on the part of Congress.

Mr. BAER. Suppose a man found this bond with a certain number?

Mr. BLANTON. I mean where the bond is destroyed by fire or water, not when it is merely lost; because when it is lost, and comes into the possession of the finder, it ipso facto comes into his hands in such a way that he can go to any bank and cash it, or sell it to any private individual. Therefore I say that ought to be the policy of the House, and we ought not to establish any other policy, as it would be a dangerous one.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, before discussing the merits of this bill, I wish to direct the attention of the House to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the United States v. American Tobacco Co. (166 U. S., 468). If I am incorrect in my understanding of the proposition of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK], I hope that he will correct me. My understanding of his proposition is that the moment the stamps were affixed to the boxes they had served their purpose, and that if they were subsequently destroyed there can be no recovery against the Government.

Mr. BLACK. And this other proposition, that when they go into the hands of a third party that third party is not the taxpayer, and he has no right to be subrogated to whatever other right the manufacturer may have had.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. In answer to that, the purpose is to tax the transaction until it passes into the hands of the consumer and the stamps have been finally used. After that there could be no recovery. Or if these stamps were stolen they might go into use and serve the purpose for which issued, in which case there could be no recovery. But here the stamps were purchased by the manufacturer, attached to the boxes, and the sale made to the wholesaler. When the goods were sold to the wholesaler he paid the price of the stamps, because necessarily they were carried into the price of the goods. I do not think there can be any denial of the proposition that wherever a stamp tax is imposed the manufacturer carries the price of the stamps into the price of the goods that the wholesaler pays him.

Now, I come back to this case of the United States against the American Tobacco Co. The syllabus is:

> The tobacco company purchased from an internal-revenue officer of the United States revenue stamps to the amount of $4,100.10, to be put upon its tobacco as manufactured. April 2, 1893, its factory in New York and all the contents were destroyed by fire. Among the contents were the stamps so purchased. Of these, stamps to the value of $1,356.63 had not been used and stamps to the value of $2,743.47 had been put upon packages of tobacco which were still in the factory, unsold.

So that the stamps were attached to the packages of tobacco, that is, some of them, and some of them had not been attached.

Under section 3426 of the Revised States it is declared that—

> The Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, upon receipt of satisfactory evidence of the facts, make allowance for or redeem such of the stamps issued under the provisions of this title, or of any internal-revenue act, as may have been spoiled, destroyed, or rendered useless or unfit for the purpose intended.

Let me call attention to the language of the Supreme Court in discussing the principle involved in that case. The Supreme Court declared:

> The purpose of the statute was to have the Government reimburse the person who had bought and paid for internal-revenue stamps which had been destroyed under the circumstances mentioned in the statute before they had been used. To make such reimbursement would be no loss to the Government, while to retain the amount paid would be highly inequitable. The Government recognized this fact by the passage of the statute in question. * * * The tax was laid upon sales of tobacco, and the stamps were resorted to as a convenient means of collecting the tax on such sales. Of course, if no sales of packages or tobacco took place upon which the stamps might be affixed, no tax had become due to the Government, and therefore if after the purchase of the stamps they were destroyed by fire the purpose of their purchase was frustrated and the Government was not entitled, upon any equitable ground, to retain the money paid for the stamps.

Further, the Supreme Court says—

> Where the stamps have been destroyed under the circumstances detailed in this case, and those who paid for them apply to the Government to be reimbursed for their value, what materiality is there in the fact that the applicant has been paid the value of such stamps by an insurance company under and by virtue of a separate contract made with that company on the part of the claimant upon good consideration? * * * The Government loses nothing by payment in such case. It simply repays money which it has no equitable right to retain.

So, I say, the Government loses nothing by payment in this case. The amount simply represents money which it has no equitable right to retain.

Let me announce my theory in this case. The purpose was to tax a transaction from which a profit will be derived on reaching the ultimate consumer of the article taxed. The manufacturer pays the tax, the stamps are attached to the box. It has not reached the consumer. It has not reached the use intended for the article itself. It is transferred only to the wholesaler, who pays the tax. He in turn sells to the retailer; but when the article is sold and passed into consumption and is used, then the tax really attaches. The profit comes into the transaction and the stamp should be destroyed.

These gentlemen paid the tax upon this tobacco because it was charged up by the manufacturer, and if the manufacturer can secure a refund after he has attached the stamps to the box is it not equally equitable and just that the wholesaler who paid that tax should likewise secure the refund from the Government? The Government pays him nothing and loses nothing.

Mr. BLACK. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I will.

Mr. BLACK. The decision that the gentleman has read holds this, that where stamps are sold by the Government for the purpose of the payment of a tax and are destroyed before that tax accrues, then the Government should reimburse the loss; but does the gentleman contend that if the American Tobacco Co., for instance, was the manufacturer of this tobacco and snuff, and that it affixed the stamps and then sold them to Faxon, Horton & Gallagher, and to Long Bros. Grocery Co., and others, the tax accrued while in the possession of those gentlemen, and that they would have any legal, equitable right to come back on the Government?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I say that the letter of the statute covered the exact case of the American Tobacco Co. I say that the spirit of the statute and of this decision reaches out and covers this transaction, because it was the intention of the Government to collect the tax only upon a transaction where a profit would be derived and where the article was placed in the hands of the ultimate consumer. That is the purpose of it. The Government loses nothing by this refund. Subsequent to the destruction of the tobacco, reports were made by the deputy collectors, as they were called immediately after the destruction of the stamps by water occurred. Understand that the cigars were not floated away. A flood unprecedented in history came up, a flood that probably will never be equaled. It can hardly be conceived that it will ever again be equaled in volume. It entered the warehouses and destroyed the goods in many instances. The deputy collector saw the stamps, took the exact value and number of the stamps, and made a report thereof. The Court of Claims finds that the claimants in this case were absolutely without any negligence on their part, and that they had paid the tax over 16 years ago upon cigars which they never sold and from the sale of which they never derived a profit. My opinion is that this Government intends to tax the tobacco when it is placed in the hands of the consumers, when it reaches the ultimate consumer.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I will.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Suppose the cigars in question had been sold to the consumer, and he had never opened them or used them when the stamps were washed away, would the Government in that case be liable?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. If it was an unbroken package. That, however, is not this case, but if I were the Government and attempted to act equitably I would refund the money. I think it would only be just and equitable that it be done. The purpose of Congress in passing the statute—section 3246 of the Revised Statutes—was not to tax transactions on which no profit was derived.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Was not there a profit derived in the transaction from the manufacturer to the wholesaler, or, to put it differently, if the manufacturer had sold to the wholesaler without the stamps, would not they have been committing a crime?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. There was not a profit derived by the party who paid the tax to the Government, and that is the wholesaler. The manufacturer did not, in fact, pay the tax to the Government because it was refunded to the manufacturer by the wholesaler. The wholesaler is the party who paid the tax and never derived any benefit from the stamps.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I will.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If the Government should establish a precedent of refunding money in a case like this, would not the Government be flooded with claims arising in the case of fire and floods and all the way down from the manufacturer to the retailer?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I think not, because it would be impossible to establish the identity; but here is a case where there was no question about the identity, where the inspector or the deputy collector examined and stated the exact value. If it be the purpose of the Government to impose a tax where a profit is derived from the transaction, where they pass into consumption, then it is within the spirit of this decision and within the spirit of the law to refund the money—this particular tax which has been exacted and that has never served its purpose, as in this particular case. If you hold a Treasury note, as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and you can identify it, carry it to the Treasury of the United States, a refund is made, though it is only a part of the note. In this particular case the Government does not lose a cent. The Government has received this tax imposed upon this tobacco, and these gentlemen who have sustained this loss have never received any benefit from it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Would the gentleman advocate the refund of tax money in all instances where the goods were not consumed and where the stamps could be identified?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. What does the gentleman mean? His question is too general.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Would the gentleman advocate the Government refunding taxes in all instances where the goods have not been consumed and where the stamps destroyed could be identified?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Where the goods are actually or partially consumed, as applied to what? If you apply it to tobacco, I answered that a moment ago. If the Government exacts a tax upon the article where the article does not pass into consumption and that is the purpose for which the tax is imposed, I think it equitable, and I think if the proof is sufficient and satisfactory the Government should make a refund. Is there any greater reason for making a refund to the manufacturer in any case where he has attached the stamps to the boxes?

Mr. JONES of Texas. In that case it has never got into the trade. In the instance at bar they have.

life.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. What is the difference in principle?

Mr. JONES of Texas. Until it gets into commerce the question of refund applies.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. What is the difference in principle between the equity of the manufacturer's claim and the equity and justice of the claims of the wholesalers?

Mr. JONES of Texas. The practical side of identifying it and taking care of it.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. In this case the identity is complete. There is absolutely no difference between the equity of this case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States or the justice of it as applied to the American Tobacco Co. in the One hundred and sixty-sixth United States and the wholesalers in this case who paid the tax on this tobacco which they never sold.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Do I understand that if this case had been the manufacturers instead of the wholesalers there would have been no question about it?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Absolutely, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. CANDLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. The practice is that whenever there is a loss of postage stamps, or money, or bonds, or any obligations of the Government that have been issued, where they are destroyed and you can identify them beyond question, the Government has paid for them in every instance?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. And where the Government in fact suffers no loss.

Mr. CANDLER. No loss; but the gentleman's case differentiates in this respect from the suggestions made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] and other Members, because the cases to which they refer are cases where the loss occurred and the identity can not be established. In this case, you proved the identical amount, number, and value of all of the stamps, and it is fixed in the decision by the Court of Claims. The Court of Claims said that you had no legal right to recover, because there was no law authorizing it, and if there was a law authorizing it, you would not be here asking Congress to pay it. That is the difference in the cases. In your case you have established it, and it ought to be paid.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. That is true. There is no difference in spirit between the status in the case of the manufacturer, in the American Tobacco Co.'s case, and the wholesalers in this case. There is no difference in sound principle. The only difference is that one is within the letter of the law enacted by Congress, and within the letter of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, and the other is within the spirit and intent of the meaning and justice of that law and that decision.

Mr. BLACK. Using the postage-stamp illustration that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] used, suppose you affixed a postage stamp to a letter and sent it through the mail and the postmaster forgot to cancel the stamp. The service has been rendered. Does the gentleman think that he could go to the Post Office Department with an admission that the letter had received governmental service and redeem the postage stamp?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Oh, no.

Mr. BLACK. In a tobacco-stamp tax the stamp has been paid by the manufacturer, the service has been rendered, and the identical same situation would prevail.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. But in the case the gentleman mentions the postage stamp has been actually used.

Mr. CANDLER. And it has answered the purpose for which it was intended. In this case these stamps had not been used and they have not answered the purpose for which they were issued and for which the man paid the Government.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Absolutely not. There is no difference between the status of the American Tobacco Co. and this case to which I have directed attention and the facts in the case now under consideration.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Is it not true that postage stamps that have been mutilated and never can be duplicated can be recovered?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. And United States bonds also?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. When does it become the duty of the manufacturer to place the revenue stamp on the cigars; as soon as he has manufactured the goods or when he tries to float them in the market?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I think it is upon the completion of the manufacture of the goods. That is my recollection.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. So that it is a tax on the manufacture and not upon the sale?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. It is a tax upon the transaction itself, from which the individual derives a profit ultimately, and it is intended to go upon that article until it passes into consumption and use. The wholesaler does not consume it.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it a sort of license for doing the business of manufacturing tobacco or is it a license to sell the goods?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. It is not a license for doing business as a manufacturer.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I mean in effect a license?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. It is a tax imposed on this particular article which is entitled to pass into consumption.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. An internal-revenue stamp is put upon the box of cigars as an evidence of the right and authority of the manufacturer to sell them. He had to do that in order to sell them.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. That is right.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Did the wholesaler buy the stamps, or the cigar man?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. The latter buys both the cigars and the stamps. He buys the cigars and pays the tax as well. The manufacturer does not really pay the tax.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Does the gentleman think that his invoice would show so much for cigars and so much for stamps?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. No. It shows the total price that is charged, and into that price is carried the cost of the revenue stamps.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. When the stamp was used in that sale, and it had to be used in order to authorize the manufacturer to make the sale, the authority of the Government has been granted, and the stamp in all probability was canceled, was it not?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. The stamp was canceled when it was attached to the box originally.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. But when it went into the sale?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. No; it was canceled when it went onto the box originally.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. After it has been canceled and has gone into trade, is it not a great risk as a matter of precedent to expect the Government to redeem the stamp?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Has it not gone into trade the moment the manufacturer purchases the stamp and makes the cigars and attaches the stamp to the box and cancels it? It has then gone into trade; it has gone into the manufacturer's trade.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. It has not gone into commerce until it is transferred in sale from the manufacturer to the wholesaler.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. It is in commerce that moment.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. True, but it has not passed from hand to hand.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I yielded only for a question; but I will answer the last question of the gentleman. The only reason that the manufacturer can recover is because Congress in its wisdom has passed this law, and the Supreme Court has enunciated the spirit and intention of that law, and for the very reason upon which this law is founded. I am not talking of the technical right to recover, else we would not be here with this claim.

And for the very reason upon which this decision was based and upon which the law itself is based it applies to the wholesaler with equal force of equity and justice as it does to the manufacturer.

Mr. PARRISH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I will yield for a question.

Mr. PARRISH. Had not the stamps when they were put on the tobacco by the manufacturer served in part the purpose for which they were intended to serve?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I think not. Where the manufacturer puts them on the goods he has to cancel them. They are then in a sense used stamps. When he transfers the goods to the wholesaler the wholesaler pays this tax. The manufacturer does not pay it; the wholesaler pays it.

Mr. PARRISH. That enters into the cost of the tobacco as the thing that goes to make up the full cost of production of the goods?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. The wholesaler pays for the article. These stamps have a certain ascertained definite value. There is no trouble in making a separation from the goods. There is no trouble about that, there is no uncertainty or indefiniteness about it, and here is our great Government imposing a tax on a transaction which has never occurred. The Government pays nothing to these men, the Government simply refunds to them the money which the Government has had for over 16 years. The interest, as the old negro in the South said, has eaten up the principal a long time ago.

Mr. HERSMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I will.

Mr. HERSMAN. I am asking this for information. It seems to me that these stamps were not canceled until the box is finally opened and disposed of.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Yes; the stamps must be destroyed when the box is finally opened.

Mr. HERSMAN. But not until then.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Not until then.

Mr. HERSMAN. That will go into the retail trade before it is finally destroyed?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Yes.

Mr. HERSMAN. And they have a definite money value until they are in retail; in other words, they are like postage stamps, they are worth their face value until they are finally canceled.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. And the Government has lost absolutely nothing on the stamps if refund is made.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLACK. When can I be recognized in my own right to oppose the bill? I do not want to interfere——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can be recognized now.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifteen minutes.

Mr. EDMONDS. May I yield the gentleman some time? How much time would the gentleman desire—10 minutes?

Mr. BLACK. Ten or fifteen minutes, depending upon how many questions are asked me.

Mr. EDMONDS. I will yield the gentleman from Texas 14 minutes of that time.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. Chairman, I regret to oppose a private bill introduced by a Member whom I like so well as the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND]. I have always believed that when we come to the Private Calendar we should take up bills wherever they are meritorious and pass them as expeditiously as possible, so that a claimant who does have a just claim against the Government can collect it. Many claimants have had to wait entirely too long to collect claims to which they were justly entitled. But in respect to this claim, I see that it has been brought in the Court of Claims, and that court, after careful examination, says it has neither a legal nor an equitable status.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes; certainly.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. The gentleman understands that the Court of Claims simply means by that that it is not a claim that can be enforced in a court of equity or a court of law?

Mr. BLACK. Well, I will state to the gentleman that I interpret the language to mean what it says.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. But the gentleman understands what it means.

Mr. BLACK. I do not understand it in the same sense as the gentleman. The Court of Claims, after hearing this case, simply came to this decision—that tobacco and snuff and cigars were destroyed to which there had been affixed an aggregate number of stamps to the amount of $3,185, and that those stamps were destroyed in a flood, and then arriving at these facts stated its legal conclusions, and said, "That we conclude that there is neither a legal nor an equitable claim against the United States." And I think the court was eminently correct in the conclusion, because let us look to the Revised Statutes and see what the law says. Now, I read from section 3364 of the Revised Statutes:

SEC. 3364. Every manufacturer of tobacco or snuff shall, in addition to all other requirements of this title relating to tobacco, print on each package, or securely affix, by pasting, on each package containing tobacco or snuff manufactured by or for him, a label, on which shall be printed the proprietor's or manufacturer's name, the number of the manufactory, the district and State in which it is situated, and these words:

"Notice. The manufacturer of this tobacco has complied with all requirements of law. Every person is cautioned, under the penalties of law, not to use this package for tobacco again."

How has he complied with all the requirements of the law? He has paid the tax that the law requires, and the Government requires him to caution every man into whose hands the package goes that the tax has been paid and that he must not use the package again.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Of course, the tax would not have been required to be paid unless the tobacco had been manufactured?

Mr. BLACK. Certainly not.

Mr. MADDEN. And when the tobacco was manufactured and sought to be put into trade the tax was required. If the tobacco was lost or if any of that would be lost, it ought not to be any claim against the Government.

Mr. BLACK. There should not be any claim. That is what I am trying to bring out. Now, I will give an illustration with reference to the decision of the court. Suppose that in this flood that the tobacco had been destroyed and not the package with the revenue stamps and these claimants had undertaken to fill up the packages again. What does the law say? Why, it says, "you have got to pay a new tax, Mr. Dealer; you can not use that package any more, because the manufacturer who did use it paid the tax, and if you use it again you must put a new stamp upon it."

Now, here is the decision in that respect.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLACK. In just a moment.

Where cigars are repacked in new boxes they become liable to the same tax that was imposed when they were first taxed.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. In this case it says that some of the goods were salvaged and stamps destroyed, and the wholesaler in that instance purchased new revenue stamps. So there was a double tax on the same article that goes into trade. The Government never intended that. It only intended to tax that particular package once. But in that case there was a double tax imposed, and it should be refunded.

Mr. BLACK. The Government has said to every manufacturer of tobacco that "whenever you manufacture it and put it into a package you must then and there affix and cancel a stamp." And I undertake to say that the decision the gentleman read simply says this, "That if you hold in your possession some revenue stamps that have not been affixed, and they are destroyed, the Government will reimburse you." There is nothing new about that. That is upon the same basis as if postage stamps were destroyed by a fire before they had been affixed to letters.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BLACK. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. The gentleman has just made a statement that shows a misapprehension of the decision of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court has said that, and as a matter of fact, the Supreme Court in that particular case permitted recovery for $1,300 worth of stamps that had never been used and permitted recovery for some $2,700 worth of stamps that had been used, attached to the boxes and canceled. Now, the gentleman is mistaken in his statement. The gentleman bases his opinion upon that.

Mr. BLACK. The gentleman from Missouri, of course, has read this case from the Supreme Court more carefully than I have, because I did not have it called to my attention until the gentleman read it. But in that decision the court quotes from the opinion in Jones v. Van Benthuysen (103 U. S., 87, 88), in which Mr. Justice Miller said, speaking for the court:

On the other hand, we are of opinion that when they are once attached to the tobacco and canceled, and can never be lawfully used again, they cease to have any separate and independent value, and that which they had previously has become merged into that of the tobacco. All subsequent sales are made upon the basis of the increased value the tobacco has acquired by the payment of the stamp duty and can never be estimated apart from this.

If that does not announce an opinion against the gentleman, I have not read the case close enough.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Did the gentleman read the syllabus?

Mr. BLACK. I have read from the case itself.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I understand; but the syllabus is the law.

Mr. BLACK. I think the case is the law.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. BLACK. I yield.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Suppose that these packages of tobacco, cigars, and cigarettes had been consumed in the fire and destroyed; would not the owners have been able to recover the value of the tobacco, together with the value of the revenue stamps, from an insurance company?

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the gentleman——

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Because, as the court says in this case, the revenue stamps and their value have been merged into the packages themselves.

Mr. BLACK. I think the gentleman has stated the case correctly. Let me in a moment—because my time, I think, is about to expire—show you how unreasonable a claim of this kind would be if we allowed it. Now, let us suppose that Rothenberg & Schloss, a firm mentioned in this bill, were handling that old familiar brand of tobacco known as "Brown Mule," and on which, of course, the tax had been paid by the manufacturer, and that on the day previous to the flood the firm had sold a caddy of this "Brown Mule" to a country merchant down at the crossroad store, and it was also destroyed by the raging waters; then that gentleman also would have a right to come here and ask Congress to reimburse him for his loss of tax on the caddy of "Brown Mule" and would have just as legal and just as equitable a claim as the ones we have before us. Now, the point I am making, gentlemen, is that you can not afford to set the precedent of passing a bill of this kind, because, as the Supreme Court says in that decision, when the stamp is once affixed to the box and canceled, it loses its independent value and becomes a part of the value of the tobacco; and whenever the consumer, be he wholesaler, retailer, or country merchant, buys it, the only way he has to protect himself is by insurance. And if he is unfortunate enough not to have insurance, then he loses the amount of the tax as well as the value of the tobacco.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. I would like to ask the gentleman what he conceives to be the purpose of affixing these internal-revenue stamps on caddies of tobacco and boxes of cigars?

Mr. BLACK. The purpose is this: The law says every manufacturer who manufactures snuff, or cigars, or cigarettes for sale shall, at the time that he puts them into the packages, affix a stamp, and the purpose of the stamp is to evidence the payment of the tax. And when he has paid the tax it is then, I say, an accrued liability, and there can be no liability on the part of the Government to refund the amount of the tax to some third party who has bought the article. Now, if the stamp, of course, is destroyed before it is affixed and you can establish that fact by clear and unmistakable evidence, undoubtedly the Government would be both legally and morally bound to refund the money. But after the tax has accrued and has been paid, even in the hands of the manufacturer, it can not be collected, and certainly not in the hands of the wholesaler or retailer, who had no direct connection with the payment of the tax.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. In that declaration the gentleman overrules the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BLACK. No. I state frankly that I have not read the decision as closely as the gentleman from Missouri has read it, because I have just had it called to my attention; but even granting the construction that the gentleman puts upon the decision, even saying that the gentleman is correct in his interpretation of it, I contend that it would have no application whatever to a wholesaler into whose hands the tobacco has gone and where there was no tax payment whatever between him and the Government.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill for amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Faxon, Horton & Gallagher the sum of $888; to Long Bros. Grocery Co. the sum of $197; to A. Rieger the sum of $327; to Rothenberg & Schloss the sum of $441; to Ryley, Wilson & Co. the sum of $466; and to Van Noy News Co. the sum of $866, said sums being in full payment of the value of United States internal-revenue stamps destroyed by flood, as shown by the findings of the Court of Claims, reported in Senate Document No. 642, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session; and a sum sufficient for said purposes is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think this bill ought not to be paid. Of course, that means that the pending bill ought not to be passed.

To begin with, these stamps would never have been used if the tobacco was not manufactured, and immediately upon the manufacture of the tobacco the law requires the use of stamps. Now, then, as my colleague [Mr. CHINDBLOM] a few moments ago said, if this tobacco with the stamps on it had been burned in a fire it is altogether likely that the owner of the tobacco, including the stamps, would have had insurance on it for that purpose and would have recovered the loss. In this case the loss was in a flood, and the chances are that the owners of the tobacco had no insurance against loss by flood. So the owners come to the United States Government with a claim for a return of the money paid for the stamps.

Now, the stamps were a part of the tobacco value after they had been placed on the packages, and whoever bought the tobacco bought the stamps, because he could not buy the tobacco without at the same time paying for the full value of the stamps.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. In the particular case I cited the Supreme Court of the United States held that $1,300 worth of the stamps were not attached to the tobacco, and the balance of the $4,000 worth, or $2,700 worth, were attached to the packages of tobacco and canceled. Now, then, did they become a part of the value of the tobacco when attached to the packages and canceled?

Mr. MADDEN. I am not paying much attention to what the Supreme Court has decided in that case. These claims embraced in the pending bill are brought here because payment for them could not be secured elsewhere. These claims have been pending for 16 years, and I have no doubt many efforts have been made to collect the money, and without success, before the claimants came to Congress, and for that reason we have the pending bill before us.

Mr. BAER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BAER. I am in favor of paying for the stamps that were not used. That is the way the Post Office Department does. If a postmaster turns in damaged or mutilated stamps and they are identified they are paid for. The gentleman from Illinois is contending against the payment for the stamps that are actually on the boxes and in use?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BAER. But you would allow them for the stamps that were not used and which were identified by the department?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. If anybody has a lot of stamps that were not used, and these stamps were destroyed, the department would refund the money. But in this case the claimants are seeking to recover for stamps that were used.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Surely.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. If I understand it correctly, these stamps had authorized and secured the transfer in trade of the tobacco from the manufacturer to the wholesaler?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes. That was the only way the tobacco could get into the trade.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Otherwise the manufacturer would have been liable for penalties under the law?

Mr. MADDEN. Certainly. Let us take a case.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. MADDEN. Not now. Suppose an owner of a house has taxes levied against it by the local assessor. Suppose the owner pays the tax, and the next day his house is burned down, with no insurance on it. Nobody would say that he could go to the local authorities and get back the tax that he has paid. Could he? Certainly not. That is this case exactly.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to this case again. Evidently the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] has misapprehended the decision I have cited, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] declares he does not care what the decision of the Supreme Court may be in that particular case. Now, I do. Ought the manufacturer to occupy any more favored position than the legitimate wholesaler in a transaction of this kind? The Congress passes a law that would reimburse that loss to the manufacturer, and there is no question about his right to recover in that case. If that be true, why should not the Congress exercise its sense of equity and of justice, as it can and should, and refund the particular value of this tax to the wholesaler?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I can not. I have not the time. I want to present this case; otherwise I would gladly yield.

Now, in this case the syllabus declares that a part of these stamps were attached to the boxes and part were not attached. There is no question about that. I hope no gentleman will question that fact. I do not think the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] will question that fact since reading the decision. In the finding of facts by the Supreme Court it was stated that some of the stamps had never been used, aggregating a face value of $1,300. The other stamps, aggregating in value $2,700, had been attached to the packages of tobacco. If these things be true, why could not every word of the argument that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLACK] has made, and every word of the argument that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] has made, apply with equal force against the refund of those stamps that have been attached to the packages of tobacco by the manufacturer just as strongly, I say, just as persuasively, as the arguments which they now make against the refund of the money to these wholesalers, who, in fact, paid the tax?

I want to say, gentlemen of the committee, that in this particular case the manufacturer did not pay the tax. The wholesaler paid the tax. The manufacturers charged for the stamps by adding their value to the price of the cigars and passed it on to the wholesaler, and under the same circumstances under which the manufacturer had been permitted to recover the wholesaler should recover. These gentlemen say the wholesaler shall be denied the right of recovery. If I were sitting as a court of equity, with adequate powers, I would not hesitate to render a decree. It would probably not be within my power, unless I had express authority of statute to do that, but Congress has that authority, because Congress passed the very statute under which compensation is given to the manufacturer.

The United States Government is not out one single cent in this transaction. These men paid this tax over 16 years ago, and because of the delay existing in hearing private claims their case has been pending in the Court of Claims and been pending here in the Sixty-fourth and Sixty-fifth, and now in the Sixty-sixth Congress; and if this claim is disallowed here, you declare that the manufacturers of this country belong to a favored few, and the wholesalers of this country shall be denied equal justice.

I say advisedly that if this claim is disallowed, then you will declare that the manufacturers of this country belong to the favored few, and that the wholesalers and others of this country shall be denied equal justice.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to lay the bill on the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that motion is in order now. The proper motion by those favoring the bill would be to lay the bill aside with a favorable recommendation, and a negative vote would accomplish the gentleman's purpose.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. With reference to this bill, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who has just concluded his statement, seems to rest his case upon the action of the Supreme Court of the United States. He submitted this claim, through the proper channels, to the Court of Claims, and the Court of Claims found against him, and if he believed that the Supreme Court of the United States was in his favor his remedy was clear. It was an appeal to the Supreme Court. Because the Court of Claims held in express terms—it is a part of the report—that there is neither equitable nor legal basis for the claim, that settles the law of this case. It is the law of every tribunal to which it could be presented, so long as the decision of the Court of Claims is not appealed from and reversed.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. The Court of Claims held that it was a claim which could not be enforced in a court of law or equity, but that the claimant's only remedy was by an act of Congress, and therefore it is presented to Congress.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to lay this bill aside with a recommendation that it do lie upon the table.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that this bill be laid aside with the recommendation that it do lie upon the table.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLAND of Missouri) there were—ayes 27, noes 18.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks for tellers. Those in favor of ordering tellers will please rise and stand until counted. [After counting.] Eleven Members, not a sufficient number.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that when the point of no quorum is made in the committee the roll call is not on the motion, but simply to ascertain the presence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has the right to make the point of no quorum.

Mr. BLANTON. But the roll call is not on the vote, but simply for the purpose of ascertaining the presence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. Only for the purpose of ascertaining the presence of a quorum.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will that bring another vote on the bill?

The CHAIRMAN. If the absence of a quorum is determined and a roll call is had, then when a quorum appears the vote will be taken.

Mr. BLAND of Missouri. In view of the fact that there are many other private claim bills on the calendar, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum is withdrawn. The motion is agreed to, and the bill is ordered to be laid aside with the recommendation that it do lie upon the table. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MARTIN GOLDSMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7030) for the relief of Martin Goldsmith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Martin Goldsmith, late hospital steward, United States Navy, who served as assistant surgeon from June 2, 1862, until October 31, 1862, the sum of $583.33, the difference between the pay of hospital steward, which he actually received, and the pay of an assistant surgeon, to which he was entitled for the period named.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS] desire recognition?

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, this is a war-claim bill, and I think the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. EVANS] would like to explain it.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat embarrassed at the position in which I find myself. The chairman of the committee having in charge this claim has been called away suddenly and I am not very familiar with the facts, but will endeavor to give them to the committee as best I can.

This is a bill for the relief of Martin Goldsmith, who during the Civil War was a druggist, and who entered the service as a hospital steward, and was placed upon one of the vessels of the Federal Navy in that position. The commanding officer finding himself without a surgeon, and Martin Goldsmith having taken a portion of the course necessary to a degree in medicine, was assigned to the position of surgeon on the vessel and performed the surgeon's duties from the 2d day of June to the 31st day of October, in the year 1862. He was paid only the wages of a steward, and this bill is to give him the difference between the salary of a hospital steward and that of an assistant surgeon.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Who presents the claim now?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. The claim is presented by the gentleman himself, who is now 80 years of age, feeble, and receiving a pension of something like $22 a month. I have in my hand his personal affidavit, which I will read, which will give the committee the information that is in the hands of the Committee on War Claims.

The part of the affidavit that is material reads as follows, referring to the time he was on the vessel:

It was soon apparent to all on board that the surgeon had neither the ability nor experience, and from the very first day all the medical and surgical duties devolved on me. Late in May, 1862, a sailor fell from the yardarm and fractured his skull, and as the surgeon did not perform the necessary operation and ordered me under arrest for undertaking it, I placed myself under the protection of the captain, and the surgeon was ordered to report at Washington, June 2, 1862. Capt. Armstrong then sent for me and read from a letter he had received from the Secretary of the Navy these words: "The surgeon steward whom you so highly recommend will act as surgeon until another is appointed in his place." This being an official document must have been copied and should be among the annals of the Navy Department. That I satisfactorily performed all the duties of the position from June 2 to October 31, 1862, is evidenced in the accompanying letter from Capt. Armstrong, and the fact that no other person was appointed or sent in my place is prima facie evidence that the department was fully convinced of my ability and the performance of the duties of the position.

I am now nearly 80 years of age and have had two strokes of paralysis, consequently am unable to do anything to add to my income; my pension is only $22.50 per month.

The salary of assistant surgeon in the Navy was $1,700 per year. That of surgeon steward was $25 per month, and I most respectfully present my claim for the difference in salary for the five months that I had the position of surgeon and fulfilled all the duties satisfactorily.

MARTIN GOLDSMITH,
Egg Harbor City, N. J.

Sworn and subscribed to.

Attached to the report is the letter referred to, which is in the following language——

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is that the original letter?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. No. The affidavit which I read is the original, but the letter is in the report. I have not the original letter here.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. The original letter was submitted to the committee.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I am presenting this matter, having never seen it until just now, except as it was presented in the report. I do not have the original letter. This copy which I now propose to read is one that has been presented in a number of reports by previous committees, all of whom, so far as I have any knowledge, have reported favorably upon this claim. The letter is as follows:

NOVEMBER 20, 1862.

SIR: It gives me pleasure to state that during the time you were serving on board this ship as hospital steward your conduct merited my approbation.

A portion of the cruise, owing to the sickness of the surgeon, and afterwards to his detachment, you were placed in a very responsible position, which I am glad to say you filled with credit to yourself and to the satisfaction of all on board.

I wish you success.

Very respectfully,
JAS. T. ARMSTRONG,
Commanding.

Mr. MARTIN GOLDSMITH, Philadelphia.
(With J. G. Baker, jr., druggists.)

The facts of the case are presented in the affidavit and statement. Personally, from investigation I know nothing more than I have stated here, but the policy of Congress in many cases, and where it has been permitted under the law, the practice of the department has been to pay men the salary of the position which they filled, although not holding the particular rank.

Mr. WASON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. I will.

Mr. WASON. What is the date of the affidavit that the gentleman read? When was it executed and sworn to?

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. On the 13th day of September, 1917.

Mr. VAILE. Then the claimant is now two years older than he was at that time.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And still living.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Yes; so far as I know. The bill is for him as an individual and not for his heirs. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 30 ayes and no noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

JULIUS JONAS.

The next bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3258) for the relief of Julius Jonas.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Julius Jonas, a resident of Walden, N. Y., the sum of $500, and interest, at the rate of 3 per cent per annum, from November 1, 1901, to August 1, 1918, in redemption of United States coupon bond No. 446, for $500, of the 3 per cent loan of 1908 to 1918, with interest coupons attached dated February 1, 1902, to maturity, inclusive, the said bond and coupons alleged to have been destroyed by fire: Provided, That the said Julius Jonas shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and the unpaid interest coupons of the said bond, in such form and with such sureties as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the alleged destroyed bond, hereinbefore described or the coupons belonging thereto.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to reimburse the owner for the loss of a bond which had been destroyed. No coupons have been presented since 1901. The Government is secured, because under the terms of the bill before reimbursement is made a bond must be given in double the amount of the principal of the bond lost or destroyed. The Government loses nothing.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLYNN. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I noticed as the bill was read it provides for payment of the principal of the bond and interest up to some time in 1918. I presume that was the time the claim was filed here. If it should be determined that the claim was a proper one and should be paid, why should not the interest be paid to this date?

Mr. GLYNN. I think perhaps that is true, but I am not in favor of paying people more than they ask for.

Mr. STEENERSON. That would depend upon whether any more coupons were due.

Mr. GLYNN. The bond has matured, as I understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking some questions. Under the stipulations in this bill, on the day that this bond is alleged to have been lost—18 years ago exactly to-day—in all of this time, so far as I know, this is the first time that Congress has been asked on the floor of the House to reimburse the owner for a lost bond, not only the principal but the interest at 3 per cent for 18 years. It does seem to me that when people sleep on their rights for 18 years, which is nearly one generation for mankind, that the practice which is sometimes asked for and obtained in court, that when they sleep on their rights they suffer the consequences, should prevail here.

I do not know what the real circumstances were surrounding this particular bond. I wish the gentleman from Nebraska, who has much knowledge on such matters, having been an auditor for years, were on the floor for he could throw some light on it. I do not think people ought to wait until witnesses die, until the department officials change, and the evidence against them is perhaps destroyed or forgotten, or put where it can not be found, before they come in and ask the Government for relief. I would like to ask why these people have waited 18 years to come here and ask for reimbursement on this $500 bond.

Mr. GLYNN. I will say that the bond did not mature until August, 1918.

Mr. BLANTON. There were interest coupons and interest payments due every year on that bond. In other words, in 1902 there was an interest payment due from the Government. Parties are usually not derelict in collecting interest. If the bond was lost and they failed to collect the interest—they knew that the bond was not in existence—why should not they have come in during the second, fourth, tenth, or even fifteenth year and ask for reimbursement at the hands of Congress?

Mr. GLYNN. I have a communication showing that the loss was reported in 1902.

Mr. BLANTON. To whom?

Mr. GLYNN. To the Treasury Department.

Mr. BLANTON. Why have they waited 18 years? I dare say that the owner of the bond lost 18 years ago is not living.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, yes; he is.

Mr. BLANTON. I dare say that if we had the facts and circumstances, that the claimant who is now asking Congress for reimbursement is a descendant of the original owner of the bond.

Mr. PLATT. That is not true.

Mr. BLANTON. The claimant is the one who owned the bond 18 years ago?

Mr. PLATT. The same man.

Mr. BLANTON. Then he ought to be in the insane asylum if he has waited 18 years to establish his claim.

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman want me to answer his question?

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to hear from the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PLATT. I will say to the gentleman——

Mr. BLANTON. We have to go to New York usually for help on all financial matters.

Mr. PLATT. These people have made claim to this money from the time the bond was lost, but it was a close question whether the Treasury could return the money without an act of Congress. The testimony is almost complete as to people having actually seen the bond destroyed.

Mr. BLANTON. But it has taken them 18 years to find out that it takes an act of Congress to grant relief?

Mr. PLATT. The Treasury Department will not approve an act of Congress until every other resource has gone by.

Mr. BLANTON. I think that unreasonable laches are present here and a very careless sleeping on rights, to say the least of it.

Mr. PLATT. These people used every means possible to get the department to refund the bond.

Mr. BLANTON. I am going to vote against this bill. It is too old.

Mr. PLATT. The bond was burned. It could not be definitely proven that anybody actually saw it burn, but it was swept off a desk into a waste-paper basket and burned. The owner's son burned the stuff in the waste-paper basket.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. I might suggest to the gentleman that it is a common practice of banks, when they get a bond for double the amount of a certificate of deposit which has been lost, to pay the certificate.

Mr. BLANTON. But you do not find any banks in this land under supervision of either State or Federal inspection that would pay interest on an evidence of indebtedness for 18 years when it is shown to be lost for that length of time.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Oh, I think they do.

Mr. BLANTON. They do not do business in that way on Wall Street, in the gentleman's State of New York.

Mr. PLATT. I do not live on Wall Street, I will say to the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman could not live on a better street when it comes to money matters.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 46, noes 0.

Mr. BLANTON. There is such a big attendance here to-day, Mr. Chairman, that I shall not make any further point. There is an unusual attendance here for claim day.

So the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JOHN ZIMMERMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1024) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to John Zimmerman for certain lands in the Colorado National Forest upon the surrender of other lands of equal acreage, also located in the Colorado National Forest, Colo.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue a patent to John Zimmerman for the following-described lands: The north half of the southwest quarter of the southeast quarter of section 32; the south half of the southeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 33, township 9 north, range 74 west of the sixth principal meridian; and the north half of the north half of the northeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 4, township 8 north, range 74 west of the sixth principal meridian, upon the transfer by the said John Zimmerman to the United States of the following-described lands: The northeast quarter of the northeast quarter and the north half of the north half of the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 31, township 9 north, range 74 west of the sixth principal meridian: Provided, That upon the reconveyance of the surrendered lands they will become part of the Colorado National Forest, Colo.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, this is merely an exchange of 50 acres of land for 50 acres of other land, both located on the exterior limits of the Colorado National Forest. The exchange is of lands of equal value and of equal extent. It has been approved by the Secretary of Agriculture, whose letter accompanies the report. If no one desires to ask any question, I ask that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will there be any question of right of way by reason of this exchange?

Mr. VAILE. None at all. The lands that Mr. Zimmerman asks for are three separate small pieces, which he desires in order to give access to his own lands. The land which he conveys to the Government, and the conveyance of which is approved by the Secretary, is a contiguous tract; and in each piece of land there is the same stream.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 45, noes 2.

So the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ARTHUR WENDLE ENGLERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 795) for the relief of Arthur Wendle Englert.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Arthur Wendle Englert, late of Albion, Mendocino County, Calif., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $500, being the value of work done and improvements made by him in good faith during the year 1911 on lands then shown by records of the San Francisco land office to be unpatented, and for which lands patent was issued to said Englert in accordance with law, but which patent was a nullity, said lands having a long time previously been patented by the United States to other persons.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HERSMAN].

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, this bill asks that $500 be appropriated to cover the value of work done and improvements put on certain lands that were patented by Arthur Wendle Englert in 1914, it afterwards developing that the lands had been patented by other parties.

Arthur Wendle Englert was an ex-soldier of the war of 1848. On learning 40 acres of land near Albion, Mendocino County, Calif., was unpatented on the 1st of August, 1911, he filed in the United States land office of San Francisco a declaratory statement, paid the fees, and took the ordinary steps for procuring a homestead title thereto. He took possession of the land, built fences, built a home, grubbed up a certain number of acres, planted a certain number of acres in trees each year, and proceeded to make his home there. He thought he would have a piece of land on which he could successfully make a living. On August 7, 1914, patent issued to the land. In February, 1916, Englert procured an abstract of title to the land and found for the first time that a patent had issued to another person in June, 1880. Englert's patent, therefore, was a nullity. This ex-soldier spent years of effort and all his available funds to improve this 40-acre tract; through the fault of the Government which he had served he found himself without a home and without money. The records of the San Francisco land office showed that the land at the time Englert took possession of it was open to patent, and he proceeded on the records of the land office, which were the only records he had available.

This case has been heard by the committee, and the committee unanimously reports that it should pass. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior reports that it should pass. I will read an extract from that letter. It says that the facts have been duly verified and that this ex-soldier, after finding that it was patented away back in 1880, made a relinquishment of his entry.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSMAN. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman want the Congress to assume the rights of an entryman to whom patent was granted to take over all improvements made by this man and have the Government pay for those improvements?

Mr. HERSMAN. When it is clearly shown that it is the fault of the Government.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, I do not see that that has got anything to do with the case. The question here is, here is a man who entered a piece of land supposed to be open to entry. He began to comply with the provisions of the public-land laws. He cultivated the land and built improvements. It turned out afterwards the land was patented by somebody else. Now, if the Government was honest in the matter, or those charged with the enforcement of the land laws, they would require the man to whom patent was issued to pay for the improvements. But what did they do? They turned the patent over to the other man, let him take possession of the other man's improvement, and then ask us to pay out of the Treasury of the United States seven hundred and some odd dollars for their delinquency. Is that right or decent? It ought not to be done.

Mr. HERSMAN. I do not get that at all from the testimony that is presented here.

Mr. MADDEN. What became of the improvements? Who got them?

Mr. HERSMAN. These improvements—there were no improvements on this property when patent was issued to Englert.

Mr. MADDEN. Then what is this money for?

Mr. HERSMAN. There were no improvements on this property when this land was entered by this ex-soldier. It was absolutely without improvement.

Mr. MADDEN. I understand he put improvements on it?

Mr. HERSMAN. He put improvements on it.

Mr. MADDEN. And somebody else got the improvements, did they not?

Mr. HERSMAN. No. The gentleman will find that he cultivated the soil and put an orchard out and made certain improvements; then it developed that this land had been patented 30 years before, and the records of the San Francisco land office showed that it was open to homestead entry at the time he filed on it.

Mr. MADDEN. Who gets the benefit of improvements?

Mr. HERSMAN. The man who patented the land in 1880.

Mr. MADDEN. And the Government of the United States, through the Secretary of the Interior, comes to Congress and asks that $700 be paid out of the Treasury of the United States when they could just as well force the man to whom patent was granted to pay for those improvements.

Mr. HERSMAN. If the gentleman from Illinois could get the point; it is impossible to force this man to pay for it. This man owned the land in 1880 by patent from the United States Government. Now, the records of the San Francisco land office were erroneous. The Government was at fault in keeping its records. This soldier entered the land, made application, and filed on it, and finally four years afterwards secures patent to the land. Then it develops that the Government had not kept its books correctly, they probably having been destroyed in the San Francisco fire. In restoring the books some Government employee made an error of which this ex-soldier is the victim.

Mr. MADDEN. Let us see what the minority of the committee says about this.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I have not the floor. I am speaking in the time of this gentleman who yielded to me. Here is what the minority of the Committee on Claims says:

Mr. HERSMAN. Where is that?

Mr. MADDEN. I am just reading. I have it right here in hand:

The record shows that the claimant filed upon the 40 acres of land in question on August 7, 1911, and, after complying with formalities, on October 3, 1911, went upon the land and remained thereon in actual peaceable possession thereof, using, occupying, cultivating, and enjoying the same, in open, notorious, and undisturbed possession thereof until March 27, 1916. So far as the record discloses, no adverse claimant ever set up any claim to the land or made any demand for possession, but in February, 1916, claimant had an abstract title made to the land, same then disclosing for the first time that the land had been patented to another on June 1, 1880, and that the claimant, without any demand being made upon him, on March 27, 1916, filed a relinquishment of his claim to the land with the Government and requested the return of the $62 he had paid out in fees.

This is what part of the Committee on Claims considering this bill said. Then the minority report goes on to say:

I understand that under the laws of California, if an attempt had been made by the prior patentee to eject him, claimant could have recovered from the patentee the value of all the improvements.

Mr. HERSMAN. Read that again; I did not catch it.

Mr. MADDEN. The minority report says:

If an attempt had been made by the prior patentee to eject him claimant could have recovered from the patentee the value of all the improvements which in good faith he had placed upon said land, and in justice and good conscience said prior patentee should have paid for such improvements made in good faith, for in six more months the title of claimant to said land would have been perfected by the five-year statute of limitations existing in California.

But without any demand—now, listen—without any demand being made upon him by anybody, the claimant voluntarily relinquished the land and relinquished his title back to the Government and abandoned the land which he had occupied for four and a half years and left all of his improvements, which he claims had not been valuable and made in good faith, as a present and a gift to an unknown prior patentee named Dallas, who, so far as the record shows, had never asserted any claim to the land after 1880.

Mr. GLYNN. I would like to ask the date of that report.

Mr. MADDEN. There is not any date connected with it.

Mr. GLYNN. By whom was it signed?

Mr. MADDEN. By Mr. BLANTON, a member of the committee. It was in the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Now, if the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr BLANTON] as a member of this committee in a minority report states the facts, and I assume it does state the facts, there was no claim made by the man to whom the patent was granted or for the ejectment of the man who had settled upon the land; and if his statement of the California law be true, to the effect that if the man to whom the patent was granted had demanded the ejectment of the man who was in possession of the land, the man ejected would have the right under the California laws to collect every dollar that he had expended legitimately for himself. But no one demanded his ejectment; no one asked that he relinquish the land. He relinquished it voluntarily, made a request on the Federal Government for $62 that he had paid when he entered the land, and that was all the claim he made. Now, it seems to me, if these are facts, there ought not to be any payment amounting to $700 made to this man, because he has no claim against the Government whatever. He could have stayed on the land. He had six months more to stay. He would have had title to the land if he had stayed that length of time. He evidently did not want to stay. Nobody asked him to leave; he left of his own accord. Now, what do you want to do?

Mr. HERSMAN. I would like to make a statement. This bill with the recommendations was just handed to me by the gentleman from California [Mr. LEA], who has introduced it, and who asked me to bring it up.

Mr. MADDEN. I ask that it be postponed until Mr. LEA is here and until we get the facts in the case, if the gentleman does not know them.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition in opposition.

Mr. HERSMAN. If there has been any minority report it has not been submitted to me. I asked the chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDMONDS], if there was a minority report and he said there was not.

Mr. CURRY of California. That minority report was of the last Congress and not this Congress.

Mr. HERSMAN. That is what I wanted to find out, because I did not want to come before this Congress without having all the facts in the case.

Mr. CURRY of California. That minority report has no place on this floor. It is no minority report at all.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSMAN. Yes.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. What is the fact about the statement of the gentleman from California as to that State having what are generally known as the occupying-claims acts?

Mr. HERSMAN. I am not an attorney, and so I am not able to answer. I will ask the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL of California. I am not an attorney, but I will say that whatever the law is in California on that subject has no application in this case whatever. The Government cancels the title, and the State of California and the courts of California have nothing whatever to do with it. The Government patented the lands of the original claimant 40 years before this second claim occurred, and the second claimant, after he had secured a patent and asked the title company for a title, the title company showed him the Government had patented the land many years before to another claimant.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. You say that the Federal Government or the Land Office canceled this second patent?

Mr. RANDALL of California. It had the same effect. The title company showed in the certificate of title that the Government had patented the land to the original claimant a number of years previously.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What did the Land Office do?

Mr. BLANTON. I will answer the gentleman.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. What did the Land Office do? You said it canceled that second patent. What did it do in that direction?

Mr. HERSMAN. Here is the report of the Secretary in this case, in which he recommends that $700 be allowed this man Englert for the value of the improvements and cash paid out. He says this:

It had been patented to other parties before the filing of his application therefor. This fact he duly verified and thereupon filed a relinquishment of his entry.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Who did? This second man filed a relinquishment?

Mr. HERSMAN. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Was it at the demand of the department?

Mr. HERSMAN. That does not appear in the report that I have before me.

Mr. RANDALL of California. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSMAN. I will.

Mr. RANDALL of California. That would be a necessary act on his part in order to recover his rights and take another homestead.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. He had no rights at all.

Mr. RANDALL of California. He had a right when the Government permitted him erroneously to enter the land. He had to relinquish his right to that entry so that he could make another one.

Mr. BLANTON. I will state to the gentleman that I made a careful investigation of this case, looked at all the proof offered by the claimant, and there was no action taken by the Government whatever to dispossess this man from the land, but after living upon it all these years, when in six months they would have given him a title against the claimant regardless of patent, he wanted to sell his land and went to an abstract company to have the abstract made, and they discovered the fact that years back, in 1880, the Government had issued a patent to a man named Dallas, of whom nobody had ever heard through all those years. Dallas did not claim the land; the Government did not ask the man to give it up, but as soon as he found it had been patented to a man named Dallas in 1880 he went to the Land Office and said, "I will file my deed of relinquishment," and said, "Pay me back the $60 fee."

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. The filing of the relinquishment was on his own accord?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; there is not a scintilla of evidence here to show that the Government asked him to do it or a scintilla of evidence that Mr. Dallas, the patentee in 1880, asked him to do a thing about it. It was his own action. He got tired of his own title and got tired of his own land, and wanted to take up other land. And I want to say this, that not only in California, but in every State of this Union where a man in good faith, believing that he has a title to the land, places valuable improvements upon that land, if a prior claimant comes along with a better title and seeks to dispossess him, in every State of this Union it is the law that he plead in contravention for the amount of the reasonable value of the valuable improvements that he places upon that land in good faith.

Mr. STEENERSON. He must have color of title.

Mr. BLANTON. He had color of title, because the Government placed him on the land. That was his color of title. There can be no better color of title.

Mr. STEENERSON. Is there such a thing as color of title by adverse possession in California?

Mr. BLANTON. He had the right to demand the reasonable value of the valuable improvements that he placed there in good faith. But he did not ask for that. He wanted to get rid of it, and he gave the man who had patented in 1880 the possession of everything; he wanted to give him possession of everything he had, because when you sift it down you find he did not have much. You may imagine that he placed a house there, but it is shown by the evidence that whatever little shack he placed on that land, it amounted to only a few dollars' worth.

Mr. MADDEN. A 12 by 20 house.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; 12 by 20. If my good friend from California [Mr. RANDALL] had known as much about this case as he knows about national prohibition he would not be speaking on this floor here in defense of the California claimant, because he is a just man.

Mr. RANDALL of California. The gentleman from California [Mr. HERSMAN] talks about Government public land in California. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] is talking about private ownership land. The law has no application to Government land.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSMAN. Yes; I yield.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. What I want to know is, Did he get a patent from the Government?

Mr. BLANTON. Not that I know of. He was placed in possession of the land. His holding and color of title would have ripened into a patent if it did not do so.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. May I ask the gentleman if it was a homestead or a timber claim? What was the character of the claim?

Mr. BLANTON. It was a homestead claim.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. How long had he been there?

Mr. BLANTON. Four years and a half.

Mr. EVANS of Nebraska. Has California a statute permitting a person who holds adversely to recover for improvements?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; if he had color of title. Every other State has that law.

Mr. HERSMAN. I do not think every State has that law.

Mr. CARAWAY. I would like to say that that is not the law in my State.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HERSMAN. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I notice in the report of Secretary Lane that when this gentleman, Mr. Englert, discovered that this land had been patented prior to his entry he relinquished all claim. Evidently he must have had a patent or some title or he could not have released to the Government his claim of title. I see that in the report of Secretary Lane.

Mr. HERSMAN. This ex-soldier went on this land in good faith to make a home for himself. He got a patent from the United States Government on this land. It afterwards developed that the United States Government had given patent to the same piece of land in 1880. The records in the San Francisco land office were not straight. Let me read you what the department says about the records in San Francisco. This letter was written from the Department of the Interior and was directed to the register and receiver of the land office at San Francisco. It was written on March 27, 1916, just after this man found that he did not have a title to his land. The Government had issued two patents on the same piece of land. I will read from the letter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, March 27, 1916.

Examine and correct your records.

REGISTER AND RECEIVER,
San Francisco, Calif.

SIRS: The attention of this office has been called to the fact that you insist that patent issued to Arthur Wendle Englert, upon commuted cash certificate 04954, August 7, 1914, has no conflict and is valid, when as a matter of fact the NE. ¼ NE. ¼ sec. 16, T. 16 N., R. 17 W., Mount Diablo meridian, with the balance of said section and other lands was patented to Alexander Grant Dallas June 1, 1880, upon S. F. cash certificate No. 6891.

It appears that this certificate was issued by your office in accordance with office letter "G" of August 1, 1878, under the seventh section of the act of July 23, 1866. (14 Stat., 218.)

The Government having divested itself of all title to the NE. ¼ of NE. ¼ of said section by the issuance of patent to Dallas, the patent issued to Englert is a nullity. Upon receipt of this letter you will correct the records of your office accordingly.

You will see that the San Francisco office insists that it was valid. The Washington office writes to the San Francisco office: "You will correct your records, so that they will be true and the public will be safeguarded."

This man would never have entered upon this land, this ex-soldier would never have expended four years in developing this land, if the records of the San Francisco land office had been correct.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. HERSMAN. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I see by the report of Secretary Lane that he recommends that the gentleman be reimbursed in the sum of $749. I personally would be inclined to follow the commissioner in his report or follow the Secretary. Will the gentlemen tell me why the committee cut it down to $500?

Mr. HERSMAN. I do not know why the committee cut it down to $500, except that the chairman of the committee said to me, when I asked him about it, that certain items possibly ought not to be included. The committee cut it down to $500, but the Secretary recommended that the ex-soldier be paid $749.50.

The sworn testimony of three men have placed the damages at from $700 to $900. This ex-soldier, who fought for his country, is only asking that the United States Government recompense him to the amount of damages that he was out in actual cash outlay, not for loss of time, not for the money that he paid to the Government, because we are paying him only $500, when the affidavits show a very much larger amount. Under the bill he is asking $500. I say this soldier is asking to be recompensed for an error that was clearly the fault of the San Francisco land office.

Mr. MADDEN. This gentleman is asking pay for witnesses and advertisements and all kinds of expenses.

Mr. HERSMAN. His itemized bill is $811, but the committee only allow $500, and he will not be paid for those things under this bill. That is what I meant to imply.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HERSMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. STEENERSON. I desire to take the floor in my own right.

Mr. HERSMAN. I have the floor, but I will yield to the gentleman. How much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut yielded to the gentleman from California such time as he desired up to one hour.

Mr. HERSMAN. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 22 minutes remaining.

Mr. HERSMAN. Will five minutes be sufficient?

Mr. STEENERSON. Yes.

Mr. HERSMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota five minutes.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, this case is very similar to many cases that have occurred in nearly every public land State. In my own State a great many settlers went upon land that was embraced in land grants, and after making improvements it turned out that the title was in the railroad company, and they had to give up their land. In such cases the only remedy they had was to apply for the purchase money if they had purchased land under the preemption law, and I remember a case last year from my district where the people had improved the land for about 30 years, but in a suit brought by the Great Northern Railroad Co. the title was decreed to be in the railroad company. They were in a different position from this man, because the title had never passed from the United States until recently, so that they could not plead adverse possession.

Now, this man was on land that was patented to a private party in 1880. Consequently title by adverse possession was available to him, and it is stated here, and I have no doubt it is true, that in California adverse possession gives title in five years. In some States it takes 5 years, in some 10, in some 15, and in some 20; but in any event it is stated by the gentleman from Texas that they have an occupying claimants' act there, so that the man who takes possession of land under color of title—which a homestead receipt from the Land Office would be, within the meaning of the law—would have the right, when the party who claimed title tried to evict him, to set up the value of his improvements, all of them, and have a jury trial to determine the value of those improvements; and before possession was decreed to the plaintiff he would have to pay that price. Now, it seems to me if we grant this relief here, we are placing this man from California upon an entirely different footing than any other man in the United States. I venture to say that there have been hundreds of settlers in Minnesota who have gone upon public lands, got a receipt from the Land Office and made improvements, and afterwards it turned out, under decisions of the courts, that the title was in the railroad company, and all they got was a return of the purchase money. There is a general law giving them that. No doubt this man could have availed himself of that. The papers in a case of this kind passed through my hands only a year ago, concerning 80 acres of land in my district, where they had to file a deed to the United States before they could get back the purchase money, and to furnish an abstract showing that the title had been adjudged to have passed under a prior grant. That has happened frequently in every public-land State ever since the public-land laws were enacted. If we grant this man, in addition to the return of his money, the value of his improvements, we are giving him something that no other settler has received. It seems to me the claim is unjustified, and we are establishing a bad precedent that will come back to plague us in the future.

Mr. HERSMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] five minutes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, it is conceded that this man has no legal right of recovery. If he had a legal right, the claim would not be here on this calendar, because he could have gone to the courts or have gone to the department and have recovered. I know the practice prevails of the Government making all the mistakes it sees fit—and it can make more than anybody—and then saying to the citizen, "You will have to suffer." The question here is simply one of good faith. If this case were reversed—I am not talking about the laws of California now, for I am without any specific knowledge of the laws of that State, but I know the law in my own State—if a citizen were to sell a piece of land and warrant the title, and afterwards the title were to fail, he could sue the man who gave the warranty and recover the purchase money. In this particular case the party who warrants the title is the Government itself. I realize the Government does not warrant the title but should. It says, "Here is a piece of land that belongs to the Government. If you will do certain acts it will give you title to it." The man complies in good faith with the Government's requirements and acquires what he supposes to be a title and makes valuable improvements. Then through the negligence of an officer of the Government he loses his land and loses his improvements. Now, in good faith can we say that the Government ought not to pay to him what his losses have been? The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] undertook to state the laws of all the States, and he missed every one that I know anything about.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HERSMAN. How much more time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 12 minutes.

Mr. HERSMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas five minutes more.

Mr. CARAWAY. I never did think that the Government ought to plead the statute of limitations or avail itself of its own mistakes to defeat a citizen in his claim against the Government. As a private individual I would not do either of those things, and there is not a gentleman who is a Member of this House who would do it, either. There is no gentleman here who would plead the statute of limitations against a just claim.

Mr. BUTLER. Suppose the other fellow goes to sleep on his rights until the opportunity to prove my side of the case has disappeared? Would I not be justified in pleading the statute of limitations?

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman might be justified, but he would not do it.

Mr. RANDALL of California. The other man did not go to sleep on his rights. His rights were not questioned until he appeared at the Land Office.

Mr. BUTLER. I am only asking the gentleman's opinion, because I have a great deal of confidence in the gentleman and in his correct way of looking at things.

Mr. CARAWAY. I hope these compliments will not be taken out of my time. I do not think this old gentleman acted possibly with the very best judgment. If he was a soldier in the war of 1848, he is getting old. I suspect that if he had consulted a lawyer he might have advised him that if he wanted to acquire title he could stand on his claim and get title by adverse possession.

But, with all due deference to people who take a different view, I have always thought that taking title by adverse possession is questionable. It is a way of acquiring property that I would not and you would not do. I would not want anything I got by reason of the fact that somebody who had the actual title overlooked the fact that I was ripening a title adverse to him.

I think this shows the old gentleman to be a man of a fine sense of honor; that instead of staying six months longer, as the gentleman from Texas suggested, thereby stealing somebody's piece of land, when he discovered it was not his he went back to the Government and said this property was not the Government's, that the Government had no right to give him a title to it, that it belonged to another man, that he did not want to take his property away by adverse possession, and he yielded back whatever title the Government undertook to give him.

Mr. BLANTON. How does the gentleman from Arkansas know that the man, Dallas, to whom the patent was issued in 1880, did not himself receive a patent that was contrary to the provisions of law and that he was not the lawful owner, or else he would not have gone off and left it?

Mr. CARAWAY. The gentleman from Texas was on the committee, and if such a state of facts had been true he would have developed it. I have absolutely no doubt that the gentleman knew he could retain his title by adverse possession, but he did not care to do it. It is a question of good faith. Neither I nor you would receive property under such circumstances, and I am not willing that the Government should do it. It does do it, as the gentleman from Minnesota says. It always treats the citizen as if he had no rights at all. Thousands of acres in my own State and district the Government disclaimed title to, and people went on it and made valuable improvements, then the Government asserted its title and the citizens were kicked out, but it did not make it right. I am not going to be a party to help my Government break a contract which in good conscience it ought to meet. [Applause.]

Mr. HERSMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. GLYNN].

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, something has been said about a minority report. As a matter of fact, there is no minority report in this Congress. A minority report was made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] two years ago, when he was on the committee, but he is not a member of the committee to-day. He did not seem to be able to convince any other member of the committee that his views were correct. I think we have had a good deal of debate on this, and I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GREEN of Iowa). The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill for amendment.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 7, strike out the figures "500" and insert in lieu thereof the figures "62."

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think in all good conscience and justice to the man he should be paid back $62, the amount of the fees he paid to the Government. The Government received this amount of fees. It is not certain that he received them back. He may have received them, but we do not know that he has. I would like to be sure that he has received that money back.

Mr. CARAWAY. On what theory? If he is entitled to one he is entitled to the other.

Mr. BLANTON. He paid certain money into the Treasury.

Mr. CARAWAY. Yes; and he paid certain money for improvements.

Mr. BLANTON. But the Government received no benefit from the improvements. If every Member would get the papers and see what these improvements consisted of that he placed on this land, you would get rid of that bugaboo that there were improvements to any great extent. That is the reason he did not make any claim against the original patentee under the law of California for valuable improvements made in good faith. He did not have enough there to press the claim.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the gentleman think he ought to deduct from the $62 a reasonable rental of the property during the time the man lived on it?

Mr. BLANTON. No. He did stay on it, and if it was like it is in some places it would be worth something and it would have been a proper deduction, but I do not think we ought to pay this man for trips that he made here and there which he claimed in his account in an effort to get this land. I have known good men to go into west Texas seeking a home, who believed they got a good title from the State, who have gone on the land and made valuable improvements, spent money in placing it in cultivation, and in after years found out that there was a superior title, but Texas does not make anything good except to pay back the money it has received. That is what the State of Texas does. I do not know what the State of Arkansas does. I did think that there was a law in Arkansas—I was giving Arkansas the benefit of the doubt when I said the law existed there where a man in a bona fide belief that he had good title in good faith placed valuable improvements on the land and lived on it for one, three, or four, or even, as was done in this case, four and a half years to the exclusion of everybody else, that whenever an adverse claimant should jump up and try to take it away—I gave Arkansas the credit of having a law that would allow the man to go into the courts in reconvention and recover the reasonable value of the valuable improvements that he had placed on the land in good faith.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. If I had the time I would gladly yield.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], and wish to say that I agree heartily with everything the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] has said, that the Government of the United States ought to act honorably and fairly and decently with its citizens in all the business it transacts with them. This is not an unusual case. I have had considerable experience with the land office in my own State of Michigan and with the Land Office here. I wish to say that in my judgment the Government does not always conduct itself creditably. If it were a private individual carrying on private business, it, or somebody representing it, would be haled into court so quick it would make his head jar. Any court or jury in the country would render judgment against an individual right off the reel; the courts would not stand for such conduct as the Government, through some of its officials, are guilty of. And I do not wish to reflect too severely on the officials; they are not to blame; it is the system that has grown up. Perhaps Congress is at fault for not having taken notice of it and for not enacting laws that compel the Government to play fair in all cases and to meet promptly every obligation, legal or equitable. I know of a case in my own district where a woman school-teacher found a piece of land, near by, which, according to the records of the Land Office, was open to homestead entry. She made the proper filing, went upon the land, and improved it to the extent of $2,500. Later she learned that a prior patent had been issued. She appealed to the Land Office for reimbursement or for some relief from the serious position in which she was placed because of their mistake. There was no relief for her in the department; they simply said that she must take her chances when she dealt with the Government. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] is wrong in one particular, if he will pardon me, when he says that a patent from the Federal Government is a warranty deed, or that when the Government issues a patent or promises to, it promises to convey a title as by a warranty deed. When that matter was put up in the particular case I speak of, and the department was told that it warranted the title, it said no; that the patent it issues is only a quit-claim deed; that those who do business with the Government must take their chances as to the title. Think of it! Take their chances on being trimmed by the Government of the United States and in an unconscionable way, I submit! The Government ought to be made to play fair. The conscience of the Government ought to equal the combined conscience of all the people of the country. [Applause.] An individual would not be permitted to do business that way, but the great Government of the United States does it and gets away with it.

How much is the claimant in this case entitled to? I submit we should go by the proof as here presented. It has been asked how it happens that he did business with the Government after he was told that the title he had undertaken to secure was of no value. Here is a letter written by the Assistant Commissioner of the Land Office to the Hon. William Kent, a former Member of this House, well known to many of us, in which Mr. Kent was told to have the man return his papers to the Land Office, and he would receive the sum he had paid, $62. That is how he came into communication with the Land Office, after he learned that his Government, for which he had fought as a soldier, had taken his good money and issued him a bogus deed. He was certainly entitled to the $62, but there is evidence that he never received it. The testimony of several witnesses is—and I have read each of the affidavits, and I presume they are entitled to credit, otherwise the committee would not have reported them—that a house was built, and each of the witnesses says it was worth $125. Each of the witnesses, experienced in that part of the country, knowing what labor and material are worth, says that the man did all of the work on the place that any man could reasonably be expected to do in 14 months, and they place a value on what the man did along that line. They tell about the building of a house, the building of fences, and of the planting and cultivating and caring for an orchard, and of making other improvements. They say those improvements are reasonably worth $525.

I think we would not be justified in disregarding that testimony. I think the man, having been buncoed by his Government, is entitled to every dollar that he can possibly get; all he can get will only reasonably reimburse him. He is entitled to every dollar he can get, certainly every dollar the committee recommends he should have. I am in favor of paying the amount the bill carries.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, and wish to speak in opposition to the amendment of my colleague, Mr. BLANTON. I have always believed in old-fashioned honesty, either in the Government or in the individual. At one time the great State of Texas attempted to repudiate its obligations. It attempted to cancel the leases upon its school lands, and Chief Justice Gaines, one of the greatest jurists who ever sat on the Supreme Court of Texas, said, "You can not do it; you must live up to your obligations." Again, the great State of Texas attempted to confiscate a man's property as is done in this instance, where he settled upon the land, and, through some error of the land commissioner, was ousted. The State of Texas, through its legislature, attempted to take away his windmills, his houses, and improvements, and Chief Justice Gaines, speaking for our great supreme court in Texas, again said they could not do it, that he should be paid for his improvements, and he was paid. I believe in holding the Government to as strict accountability as holding an individual to comply with his every contract.

My colleague from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] says to pay him the pitiful sum of $62. Let us take the statement of the Hon. Franklin K. Lane, Secretary of the Interior. What improvements did he put on that place? If he is entitled to $62, he is entitled to every dollar that he put on there. The testimony of Mr. Ferris, a creditable witness, I presume, for Mr. Lane quotes him, is to the effect that he built a two-room house and a shed and dug a well and built a quarter of a mile of fence and cleared and planted a field. This witness says that the total value of the improvements he put on the land amounts to $900. Yet my colleague says that it is an exaggerated statement, and he wants to pay him back the pitiful sum that he paid out, $62.50, and let him go for the rest. I say that I have confidence in this Claims Committee. If I did not have and did not believe they made a full and complete investigation into this claim, I would vote to give him every dollar that Mr. Lane said he ought to have, and that is $749.

I believe Secretary Lane made a full, fair, and complete investigation of this matter, and I would be willing to follow the great Secretary of the Interior in this case as in all others. But as this committee has reported here—and there is no minority report, gentlemen, on this bill—I do not think we can take cognizance of a report made two or four years ago; I do not find any minority report—but the unanimous report is that this old man who fought for his country, who was entitled under the law of his country to take up 40 acres of land and did take it up and made improvements thereon in good faith, and when he found another party had title, as was well stated by the gentleman from Arkansas, he relinquished it and did not take title by limitation which I have always believed was dishonest, although it is permitted in my State. I say this claim ought to be paid; this amount ought to be given him without a single dissenting voice on this floor, in my judgment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 1, noes 54.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN A. GAULEY.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2396) for the relief of John A. Gauley.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I move that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The motion was agreed to.

EASTERN TRANSPORTATION CO.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5346) for the relief of the Eastern Transportation Co.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5346) for the relief of the Eastern Transportation Co.

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Eastern Transportation Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware, and doing business in the city of Norfolk, Va., owner of the barge Sweetser Anthicum, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said barge and the United States barge Old Dominion, in tow of the United States tug Sagamore, in Chesapeake Bay, on the 25th day of August, 1918, may be sued for by the said Eastern Transportation Co. in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the Eastern Transportation Co. or against the Eastern Transportation Co. in favor of the United States upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HOLLAND].

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, the sole purpose of this bill is to authorize a suit in the United States district court to determine the liability, if any, of the United States Government for damages occurring out of a collision between a barge operated by the Eastern Transportation Co. and another barge operated by the United States Government. It has a favorable recommendation by the Assistant Secretary of the Navy who says the bill ought to pass. I hope there will be no opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN T. ADAMS.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5807) for the relief of John T. Adams.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 5807) for the relief of John T. Adams.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to redeem, in favor of John T. Adams, of Frankton, Ind., United States coupon bonds of the 3 per cent loan of 1908 to 1918 (numbered 43361 and 50623 for $500 each), with interest from November 1, 1910, the said bonds, with coupons attached, dated February 1, 1911, to maturity of the loan, inclusive, having been stolen: Provided, That the said John T. Adams shall first file in the Treasury Department a bond in the penal sum of double the amount of the principal and the unpaid interest coupons of the said bonds, in such form and with such surety as may be acceptable to the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the stolen bonds hereinbefore described or the coupons belonging thereto.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VESTAL].

Mr. VESTAL. Mr. Chairman, this bill is to reimburse Mr. Adams, of Frankton, Ind., for two Spanish-American War bonds of denomination of $500 each, which were stolen in 1911. The bonds draw 3 per cent. The bonds matured in September of last year—1918. As soon as the bonds matured I took the matter up with the Secretary of the Treasury and was informed that the only way Mr. Adams could be reimbursed for this money was by special act. I then introduced at the last session of Congress a bill for his relief. The bill was favorably reported at that time, but——

Mr. GARRETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VESTAL. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT. I have not read the report, but from the reading of the bill I understand that these bonds were stolen. If they were coupon bonds, how is it possible by the execution of a bond on the part of the person who lost them to protect the Government?

There is nothing about the coupons to indicate their number in any way. There is no way in which the Government can hold up payment of the interest called for by the coupons. Presumably, if they were stolen the thief has already cashed the coupons.

Mr. VESTAL. No; the bonds are numbered and the department says that none of the coupons have come in, and the coupons are numbered also, but none of them have come in for payment.

Mr. GARRETT. So there will be no difficulty, then, in the matter?

Mr. VESTAL. So the Treasury tells me.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 36, noes none.

So the motion was agreed to.

EMMA J. SPEAR.

The next business in order on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3211) for the relief of Emma J. Spear.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 3211) for the relief of Emma J. Spear.

Be it enacted, etc., That Emma J. Spear, mother of Henry W. Spear, late of Troop M, Second Regiment United States Cavalry, shall be regarded as the duly designated beneficiary of the late Henry W. Spear, under the act approved May 11, 1908, as amended by the act approved March 3, 1909.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. DUPRÉ].

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Chairman, this is a conventional bill to supply the beneficiary where none is designated of a deceased soldier to receive the six months' gratuity. He had originally designated his father, but his father died. As I say, he failed to designate any other beneficiary, and the object of this legislation is to give the six months' gratuity to his widowed mother. The measure has passed the House in previous Congresses.

The bill was read for amendment.

Mr. GLYNN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 25, noes none.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MRS. MAMIE DUFFER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1266) for the relief of Mrs. Mamie Duffer, of Shannon, Miss.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1266) for the relief of Mrs. Mamie Duffer, of Shannon, Miss.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to include within the permitted class of persons entitled to be designated as beneficiaries under the terms of the war-risk insurance act Mrs. Mamie Duffer, of Shannon, Miss., the foster mother of Wilfred Osborne Duffer, formerly a member of the Seventy-fourth Company, Sixth Regiment United States Marine Corps, who was killed in action in France July 19, 1918, the said Mrs. Mamie Duffer having been named as beneficiary in an insurance policy applied for by said Wilfred Osborne Duffer.

That the proceeds of the policy shall be paid to Mrs. Duffer in accordance with the law in such cases made and provided.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The bill was read for amendment.

Mr. GLYNN. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER].

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CANNON. What is the necessity for this legislation, she having been designated?

Mr. CANDLER. It arose in this way: This is a claim for insurance made on account of the death of Wilfred Osborne Duffer, late a member of Seventy-fourth Company, Sixth Regiment, United States Marine Corps. Mrs. Mamie Duffer and her husband, Mr. R. O. Duffer, took this boy, Wilfred Osborne Duffer, when a little infant child, out of an orphans' home when he was only eight months old, a little orphan having neither father or mother or other kin, so far as is known. She and her husband intended to adopt him, and firmly believed they had done so, by reason of the fact that the orphans' home furnished them articles of adoption, copies of which are printed in the report. The proper officer of the orphans' home signed these articles of adoption and delivered them to Mr. and Mrs. Duffer when they received the child into their custody. The boy remained with them until he was about 20 years old; was in their possession, custody, and control for over 19 years, believing himself during that time to be their child. They stood absolutely "in loco parentis." He never knew any other father or mother except Mr. and Mrs. Duffer. Mr. Duffer had died, leaving Mrs. Duffer a widow without children except this boy. When the war broke out he did not wait to be drafted, but on April 17, 1917, early in the war, he volunteered and went into the service. He was a brave, patriotic, red-blooded, courageous American, who wanted to serve his country in her hour of peril. [Applause.] On the 19th day of July, 1918, while in action on the battle field in France, he was killed. In the meantime he had made application and secured this policy of insurance for $10,000 in favor of Mrs. Duffer. In his application he named as his beneficiary "my mother," Mrs. Mamie Duffer, quite naturally, for she was the only mother he knew. He believed she was his mother, because with his baby eyes he saw her first as mother and with his first baby words he was taught to call her "mother," and did so until he fell on the glory field of honor and made the supreme sacrifice. [Applause.]

It developed, when the War Risk Bureau called on Mrs. Duffer to make proof, that the boy had not been legally adopted; that is, he had not been adopted by regular order or decree of court, and because the boy was not so adopted by regular process and solemn decree of court the War Risk Bureau held they could not pay the policy, and declined to do so. They say they are ready and anxious to pay it, but can not legally do so because of that small technicality, but will do so if this bill is passed. That is the case. To pay the money to Mrs. Duffer will carry out the will and purpose of this boy who died for his country. That is what I want to do, and I hope all will support and none oppose this bill. [Applause.]

That noble soldier boy, Wilfred Osborne Duffer, bought and paid for this insurance not only with his money, deducted from his soldier pay, but he purchased it with his patriotic, sacrificial blood willingly shed for his country on the field of battle in a foreign land, and he said I want "my mother," Mrs. Mamie Duffer, to have the $10,000 thus secured for her. I do not believe there is a Member of Congress who would deny it to her. She ought to have it, therefore I trust you all will vote for the bill. [Applause.]

I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Chairman, I make a preferential motion to strike out.

This case appeals very strongly to my sympathies, and I know it does to every Member of the House, but it is one of a good deal more importance than I fear some Members conceive. Under the facts of this case, this boy having designated some one as his beneficiary who was not eligible to be designated as the beneficiary, it is the same under the law as though he had designated no beneficiary at all, and the insurance upon his death became payable to his next of kin. Upon his death the right to this insurance vested in his next of kin. Now, that is a vested interest or right and is protected by the fifth amendment to the Constitution and can not be taken away from his next of kin by any act of Congress. We propose by the pending bill to change the beneficiary of this insurance. We are saying that the next of kin, whom the law has designated as beneficiaries, shall not receive this insurance, but it shall be paid to some one else. Now, the net result of all this will be that this lady will get this insurance—and I am glad to see her get it, of course—and also the next of kin, who have this vested interest that can not be taken away from them by any act of Congress, will also get it. The next of kin can file their claim and collect the same amount from the Government. In other words, we are fixing it so that the Government will have to pay this insurance twice.

Now, the rights of the next of kin do not depend merely on the favor of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. They may bring suit in any district court and obtain a judgment against the Government for this amount; also the beneficiary under this bill can take the same steps and collect the money over again.

Mr. VAILE. Does the gentleman contend that they can get a judgment against the mother after this legislation is passed?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. No. What I say is this—and I thought I had made it clear—that the next of kin of this deceased soldier, having a vested interest to this insurance which can not be taken from them by act of Congress, may maintain a suit against the United States for that insurance and collect it, and payment to the foster mother will constitute no defense to the action.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER. This record shows that the father and mother of this boy were dead. So far as the record shows, he has no other next of kin.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It is an extraordinary case, if there are no next of kin, I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi. It is an almost unheard-of and incredible case that a man has no relatives whatever of any degree.

Mr. CANDLER. The gentleman is assuming that there is some one next of kin when the record shows that there is no next of kin.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. They may be undiscovered and may be unknown now, but they may turn up to-morrow. My observation is that heirs usually do turn up when there is anything to be had by turning up. I think it is fair that this committee should consider this case in the light of the facts that we are creating a double liability on the Government.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. I am of the opinion that the conditions here cited by the gentleman raise a serious question; that if it is possible that there are next of kin, I have no doubt in my own mind that they can prosecute successfully a claim against the Government. But the reason why I rose was to ascertain whether or not I am correct in the opinion that we have recently passed legislation to correct just this situation?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The House has passed a general bill similar in application to this particular bill and which would render this bill useless. It has almost this identical provision in it. That is the reason I speak with such confidence. At the time that bill was under discussion in the House I gave the matter careful consideration, and I then expressed the view that I have expressed here. I think it due to the committee to say so, although, of course, I sympathize deeply with the foster mother, for whose benefit this bill is presented. It was a mistake to pass the original law in that form.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I had a case exactly like this. I have had occasion to make some investigation of it myself. In that case, as in this case, the party designated the beneficiary, and designated his mother as the beneficiary.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to have a quorum. I make the point of order that we ought to have a quorum.

Mr. CANDLER. Oh, I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. BLANTON. We have done to-day the biggest day's work this Congress has yet done, in passing Senate resolution No. 15.

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Chairman, I did not yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to insist upon his point of order?

Mr. BLANTON. If there is not going to be a prolonged discussion, I will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman withdraws his point of no quorum.

Mr. HASTINGS. I have not much more to say, Mr. Chairman. I arose more to reply to the discourtesy of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON] than anything else. I have always tried to be courteous to Members on the floor. I did not intend to try to break in for the purpose of being discourteous to him.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield and allow me to apologize?

Mr. HASTINGS. Very well.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I would have yielded if the gentleman had done me the courtesy to ask permission to interrupt.

Mr. HASTINGS. That is all right. I have no more to add.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a single question. Is it true that the next of kin, this deceased soldier not having a mother in fact, and not having been legally adopted—is it true that the next of kin, after this legislation is had, as stated by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HUDDLESTON], can bring suit in the Federal court?

Mr. HASTINGS. I did not state that. I stated positively as my judgment that it can not be done, because if this policy is not a valid policy, there is no policy, and this is attempting to make this one valid. Otherwise there is no one, and no suit can be brought.

Mr. CANNON. If there be a next of kin——

Mr. HASTINGS. If they can not designate this person as beneficiary, then there is no legal policy, and there can be no liability. This is attempting to cure that defect.

Mr. PARRISH. If the gentleman will permit, the next of kin would not come in unless the policy was payable to a party certain and that party had died.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I want to suggest to the gentleman that under the law when the policy is made payable to some one not eligible under the law to receive it, it becomes payable to the next of kin, as if that party had been named in the policy, so that this policy must be construed to-day as if it read payable to the boy's next of kin, whoever that may be.

Mr. CANNON. What is the amount of the policy?

Mr. CANDLER. Ten thousand dollars.

Mr. CANNON. If that is so, it seems to me the House ought not to pass this bill.

Mr. CANDLER. I disagree with the gentleman as to that. I do not think his contention is valid. The House has passed a prior bill of a general nature.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. The House passed the bill, but it has not become a law. The Senate has not passed it.

Mr. HASTINGS. The House has decided against the contention of the gentleman from Alabama, I think, by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. CANNON. Let me ask another question, because sincerely I was ready to vote for this bill. If the next of kin has a vested right, is it in the power of Congress by legislation to cut out the next of kin?

Mr. CANDLER. The next of kin has no vested right.

Mr. HASTINGS. The very dispute revolves around that one point. Of course, it is our contention that the next of kin has no vested right, and Congress has so decided in the general legislation it has passed.

Mr. LANKFORD. In this case, where the foster mother thought she had adopted the boy, and the boy thought he had been adopted, and they lived for years as though there had been an adoption, if in fact there was not a legal adoption I am confident that there was an equitable adoption, which under the law would cut out the next of kin, and the foster mother could recover the money, and the next of kin regardless of the passage of the act could not get it.

Mr. CANNON. This legislation cutting out the next of kin has not passed?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. It has passed the House.

Mr. CANDLER. It has passed the House.

Mr. CANNON. But that would be of no force if the next of kin has a vested right.

Mr. CANDLER. The next of kin have no vested right, because of the fact that the right is not vested in them at all. This boy himself directs exactly who shall receive the money, and this is to validate his purpose, his intention, and his designation, made by himself. The passage of this bill will ratify it.

Mr. LANKFORD. I think it is clear in this case that there was really an equitable adoption.

Mr. ROSE. I assume that this boy had the right to name this woman as his beneficiary.

Mr. CANDLER. There was no law to prevent it, and this is to validate his designation.

Mr. CANNON. Why not amend this bill by providing that in the event that hereafter there is a recovery by the next of kin this so-called foster mother shall give bond to return the money?

Mr. CANDLER. You might just as well defeat the bill, because you could never tell how long it would be held up under such a provision as that.

Mr. ROSE. There are some features of this case that are becoming perfectly plain to me now. If this soldier named this woman as his beneficiary under this policy, believing her to be his mother, and the records of the court show that ever since his early childhood she has been occupying the position of a mother to him, then, it seems to me, under the law of any State of the Union that woman has an insurable interest in the boy's life.

Mr. CANNON. But the court records can not show that.

Mr. CANDLER. She stood in loco parentis to him from the time he was eight months old.

Mr. CANNON. Would the court records show that?

Mr. CANDLER. The court records would not show that, but the record of the orphan asylum would show it.

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that if we settle this case on the legal technicalities we will be considering it until next winter; but if this boy thought she was his mother and that he was her adopted son, and if this is his last will and testament, and he plainly seeks to leave that money to her, I think his desires and intentions in the matter should be regarded as conclusive on the House.

Mr. CANDLER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi moves that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 50, noes 4.

Accordingly the motion was agreed to.

THE ARUNDEL SAND & GRAVEL CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 5345) for the relief of the Arundel Sand & Gravel Co.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Arundel Sand & Gravel Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware and doing business in the city of Norfolk, Va., owner of the steam tug A. G. Bigelow, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said tug and the U. S. S. Susquehanna in Norfolk Harbor on the 26th day of November, 1917, may be sued for by the said Arundel Sand & Gravel Co. in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the Arundel Sand & Gravel Co., or against the Arundel Sand & Gravel Co. in favor of the United States upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, I ask to substitute for the House bill the bill S. 1670, which has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims this morning. It is a similar bill, word for word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the Senate bill passed by the Senate, S. 1670, be substituted for the House bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the sole purpose of this bill is to give the Arundel Co. the right to sue the Government for damages sustained by reason of the negligence of the barge owned by the Government of the United States. This is the character of claim that frequently comes before the Claims Committee and there never is any opposition. The Claims Committee has not recommended the payment of a single cent and only asks that the right be given the company to bring a suit in the proper court of the United States, and that notice shall be given.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROSE. Yes.

Mr. ELSTON. I have introduced a similar bill to pay damages for a collision between a United States vessel and a private tug. My recollection is that the naval officials in the local naval district passed on the claim, in so far as they were authorized to do so, and made a favorable recommendation. That correspondence was sent here with a draft of the bill. Now, do I understand that it is not the proper procedure to introduce a bill to pay the claimant, but to authorize the claimant to sue in the United States district courts for the amount of the claim? Is that what I am to understand is the only recourse, and that the committee will not consider a proposition of reporting out a bill to pay the amount of the claim itself?

Mr. EDMONDS. If it is a claim stated and agreed to by the Navy Department, the committee would appropriate the amount. But in this case there is a dispute as to who is the proper party to pay the damage.

Mr. ELSTON. That explains the proposition. In the case I have mentioned the amount of the liability has been agreed upon.

Mr. EDMONDS. Where it has been agreed upon the committee will make the appropriation.

Mr. ROSE. In this case the department is willing that an adjustment shall be made, but there is a dispute as to which party shall pay the damage.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 1670) for the relief of the Arundel Sand & Gravel Co.

Be it enacted, etc., That the claim of the Arundel Sand & Gravel Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Delaware and doing business in the city of Norfolk, Va., owner of the steam tug A. G. Bigelow, against the United States for damages alleged to have been caused by collision between the said tug and the U. S. S. Susquehanna in Norfolk Harbor on the 26th day of November, 1917, may be sued for by the said Arundel Sand & Gravel Co. in the District Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia, sitting as a court of admiralty and acting under the rules governing such court, and said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine such suit and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of such damages and costs, if any, as shall be found to be due against the United States in favor of the Arundel Sand & Gravel Co., or against the Arundel Sand & Gravel Co. in favor of the United States upon the same principles and measures of liability as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal: Provided, That such notice of the suit shall be given to the Attorney General of the United States as may be provided by order of the said court, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney General to cause the United States attorney in such district to appear and defend for the United States: Provided further, That said suit shall be brought and commenced within four months of the date of the passage of this act.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 48 ayes and no noes.

So the motion was agreed to.

The House bill was laid on the table.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, it is 5 o'clock, and I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MADDEN. Oh, we have just one more bill, a very short one, and I will ask the gentleman to withhold the point for a moment.

Mr. EDMONDS. I will move to rise then.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well; I withdraw the point.

W. L. ROSE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1275) for the relief of W. L. Rose.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to W. L. Rose, of Sacramento, Calif., late of the United States Navy, the sum of $66.12 to indemnify him for clothing and property lost on the United States ship Yosemite November 13, 1900.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, this amount of money would have been paid to this man if he had known the law, which required him to file his claim within two years. It came in five days too late. He did not get his money. I might say that he is not related in any way to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ROSE], a member of the committee. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the second reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 44, noes none.

So the bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bills that have been laid aside with a favorable recommendation to the House with the recommendation that they do pass, and that the bills H. R. 6377 and 5345 do lie upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. TILSON) having assumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration bills on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report back to the House the bills H. R. 6857, 7030, 3258, 1024, 795, 5346, 5807, 3211, 1266, 1275, and the bill S. 1670, without amendment, with the recommendation that the bills do pass, and that the bills H. R. 6377 and 5345 do lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill (H. R. 6857) to authorize the change of the name of the steamer Charlotte Graveraet Brietung to T. K. Maher.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 35, noes 0.

So the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill (H. R. 7030) for the relief of Martin Goldsmith.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 35, noes 0.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill (H. R. 3258) for the relief of Julius Jonas.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EDMONDS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1024) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to John Zimmerman for certain lands in the Colorado National Forest upon the surrender of other lands of equal acreage also located in the Colorado National Forest, Colo.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were—ayes 40, noes 0.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. VAILE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 795) for the relief of Arthur Wendle Englert.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. BLANTON moves to recommit the bill to the Committee on Claims, with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendment: On page 1 strike out "$500" and insert "$62."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. Division, Mr. Speaker, and, pending that, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman withhold it until I can prefer a request for unanimous consent about another matter?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; I will withhold it for a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman withholds his point of no quorum.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings in the Speaker's room yesterday when the silver set was presented to Gen. McCain may be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that the proceedings yesterday in reference to the presentation of a silver service to Gen. McCain be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I renew my motion that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 13 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, November 1, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Attorney General of the United States, transmitting a tentative draft of an amendment to an act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel," approved August 10, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 283); to the Committee on Agriculture and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a tentative draft of a bill to amend the explosives act of October 6, 1917 (H. Doc. No. 284); to the Committee on Mines and Mining and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SIMS, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3193) to authorize the Tennessee Bridge Co., a corporation chartered under the laws of the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Loudon, Tenn., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 430), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MONTAGUE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9947) to authorize J. L. Anderson and H. M. Duvall to construct a bridge across Great Pee Dee River near the town of Cheraw, S. C., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 431), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10135) for the construction of a bridge across Rock River at or near East Grand Avenue, in the city of Beloit, Wis., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 432), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. VOLSTEAD, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 35) approving the recent statement issued by the President of the United States regarding the threatened strike in the coal fields of the United States and pledging the support of the Congress to the President in the exercise of all his constitutional powers in the premises, reported the same with an amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 434), which said concurrent resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. RHODES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9615) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to correct an error in an Indian allotment, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 433), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9405) granting an increase of pension to May J. Wode; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 10149) granting an increase of pension to Catharine E. Brinkmann; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 10305) to obtain revenue and to promote and encourage the production of chrome and chromium ores and manufactures thereof in the United States and its possessions; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HUMPHREYS: A bill (H. R. 10306) to provide for an additional major general in the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MILLER: A bill (H. R. 10307) to advance one grade upon the retired list certain retired Army officers serving on active duty during the emergency incident to the war with Germany and Austria; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. QUIN: A bill (H. R. 10308) to authorize the issue to States and Territories and the District of Columbia of rifles, shotguns, pistols, machine guns, and other property for the equipment of home guards; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HUDSPETH: A bill (H. R. 10309) to provide for the establishment of a division of patrol guard in the Bureau of Immigration, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. KELLEY of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 10310) to promote the efficiency of the United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HAUGEN: A bill (H. R. 10311) to further amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, and amended by the act approved March 3, 1913; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania. Resolution (H. Res. 370) instructing Civil Service Commission and Postmaster General to allow former soldiers, sailors, and marines advanced standing in appointment as first-class postmasters; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. RUCKER: Resolution (H. Res. 371) authorizing the printing of Public Health Bulletin No. 98, entitled "Health Almanac, 1920"; to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. McARTHUR: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 243) authorizing the Secretary of War to loan to the city of Portland, Oreg., tents, cots, blankets, and pillows for the use of visitors attending the forty-sixth annual session of the Imperial Council, Ancient Arabic Order, Nobles of the Mystic Shrine, in June, 1920; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 10312) granting an increase of pension to Nathaniel Sandford; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: A bill (H. R. 10313) for the relief of William Casey; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 10314) granting an increase of pension to John O. McMahon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HERSMAN: A bill (H. R. 10315) for the relief of Hilbert A. C. Jensen; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 10316) granting a pension to Matthew F. Patch; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANHAM: A bill (H. R. 10317) for the relief of Blanche Utley; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MAJOR: A bill (H. R. 10318) granting an increase of pension to Louisa Mawhinney; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: A bill (H. R. 10319) granting an increase of pension to Conrad H. Rowe; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. NOLAN: A bill (H. R. 10320) granting an increase of pension to Alice Barkley; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PURNELL: A bill (H. R. 10321) granting a pension to Emma L. Lindsay; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RUCKER: A bill (H. R. 10322) granting an increase of pension to John H. Price; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 10323) granting a pension to Jesse J. Renfro; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 10324) granting a pension to James Steele; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of Ninetieth Division Association, regarding compulsory military service; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania: Petition of certain citizens of Allegheny County, Pa., expressing opposition to the Smith-Towner educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. ELSTON: Petition of California Civic League, urging passage of the Jones-Baker bill giving military rank to Army nurses; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of Alameda Parlor, No. 47, Native Sons of the Golden West, urging restriction of Japanese immigration and land colonization; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of the Ottawa (Ill.) Business Men's Association and Hess Bros., of Somonauk, Ill., opposing the Siegel and other price-fixing measures; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of the Rockford (Ill.) Manufacturers and Shippers' Association, concerning patent legislation; to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of the Illinois Manufacturing Association, opposing House bill 8572; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of the Ninetieth Division Association, favoring universal military training and an adequate Regular Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of U. S. Grant Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Chicago, Ill., favoring the Fuller bill, House bill 9369; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HERSMAN: Petition of citizens of California, praying for the repeal of the tax on ice cream and soda-fountain foods and drinks; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. HUTCHINSON: Petition of Retail Grocers' Association of the Chamber of Commerce of Trenton, N. J., urging Government action relative to the equitable distribution of the available sugar supply; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Newark Military Service Rifle Club, indorsing the plan of the Secretary of War to make the Caldwell rifle ranges a permanent Government training ground and urging the appropriation for the same; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota: Resolution by the city council of the city of Minneapolis, requesting the Congress of the United States to fix the profits to be allowed manufacturers, jobbers, and retailers of sugar, and to provide for an equitable distribution of sugar; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. NOLAN: Petition of Vallejo Metal Trades Council, Vallejo, Calif., favoring the passage of House bill 7041; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. RAKER: Petition of Clayburgh Bros., Hills Bros., Hulse-Bradford Co., Levi Strauss & Co., D. De Bernard & Co., Dolliver & Bro., Seller Bros. & Co., Langley & Michaels Co., Walton N. Moore Dry Goods Co., A. Schilling & Co., Greenebaum, Weil & Michels, W. P. Fuller & Co., Pacific Coast Syrup Co., Rogers Shoe Co., Elkus Co., Marvin Shoe Co. (Inc.), L. Samter & Sons, C. A. Hutton Flour Co., B. Hart & Co., O'Rourke, Eubanks Hat Co., and Garcia & Maggini Co., all of San Francisco, Calif., protesting against the passage of House bill 8315; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of Excelsior Parlor, No. 31, of Jackson; Georgetown Parlor, No. 91, Native Sons of the Golden West, of Georgetown; McCloud Parlor, No. 149, Native Sons of the Golden West, of Redding; Chispa Parlor, No. 40, Native Sons of the Golden West, of Ione; and Stockton Parlor, No. 7, Native Sons of the Golden West, of Stockton, all in the State of California, protesting against immigration from oriental countries; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of Grain Dealers' National Association, of Toledo, Ohio, regarding grain business and Government control of the price of grain and flour; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Women's Council, of Sacramento, Calif., urging the exclusion of the Japanese from this country and an amendment to the Constitution so that no person can become a citizen of this country by being born here whose parents are of a race that is ineligible for citizenship; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, petition of Hamilton County League of Building Associations, for complete census of the housing situation, the tenant-farmer proposition, and also a complete census of the building and loan associations; to the Committee on the Census.

Also, petition of Langley & Michaels Co., of San Francisco, Calif., against House bill 5123; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of Sun Harbor Packing Corporation, of San Diego, Calif., supporting House bill 8422; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. VARE: Petition of Federal Employees' Union No. 23, proposing reclassification of employees of customs service only in such manner as will give the employees of the department a voice; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, November 1, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

In the absence of the Chaplain, the Members, at the request of the Speaker, joined in the Lord's Prayer.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. WALTERS, for three days, on account of business.

To Mr. CLARK of Missouri, for three days, on account of the death of his little grandson.

EXPRESSIONS OF SYMPATHY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think it is fitting and proper that we should give a moment's consideration to the sad announcement that has just been made of the death of the beloved grandson of ex-Speaker CLARK. I am sure that we all sympathize deeply and sincerely with the father and mother and the grandfather and the grandmother of this beloved child who has just passed to the great beyond. We trust that the Great Father will bring balm to the hearts of the bereaved parents, grandparents, and friends.

Mr. DUPRÉ. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of those who sorrow in my home city of New Orleans, where this child has just passed away, I wish to thank the gentleman from Wyoming, and I know that I may also thank all the gentlemen of the House, for he voices the sentiments of us all, for the kind words of sympathy just spoken.

CORRECTION.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I rise to correct the RECORD. In yesterday's RECORD, at the top of page 7818, the left-hand column, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] made the statement as it appears in the RECORD:

No. Only the autocratic, anarchistic leaders who preach revolution against our Government.

I am making no objection on that ground or asking for any correction on the ground of the character of the words and the sentiment expressed therein, but I do ask unanimous consent to correct the RECORD by striking out those words which I have just read.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for just a moment. I want to find out what the gentleman wishes to strike out. On what page is it?

Mr. KING. On page 7818.

Mr. BLANTON. Now, what words does the gentleman want to strike out?

Mr. KING. I want to strike out, in the first place, all the words of the gentleman, for the reason, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] did not obtain the recognition of the Chair. He did not address the Chair; he did not get leave of the Member who had the floor to yield to a question, and his remarks were not a part of the debate, but were simply a part of the remarks in the general conversation of the House, and, therefore, should be stricken from the RECORD.

Furthermore, the gentleman from Texas did state in those remarks, which he injected contrary to the rules of the House, the words, "No. Only the leaders." But when the report came to him, after it had been submitted to me, the gentleman made the RECORD say:

No. Only the autocratic, anarchistic leaders who preach revolution against our Government.

He inserted those words by writing them in by hand in the typewritten notes, without submitting them to me. Therefore I ask that the whole sentence——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. KING. I am not yielding just for a minute.

Mr. BLANTON. I rose to reserve the right to object. That gave me the floor, I presume.

Mr. KING. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. BLANTON. I ask to be heard on the matter.

Mr. KING. I insist that I have the floor, in order to finish the sentence.

The SPEAKER. No one has the floor. The Chair will state the question. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] asks unanimous consent to correct the RECORD by striking out the sentence referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object for the purpose of stating what the facts are. The other day Mr. JONES, the gentleman from Texas——

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. If anybody demands the regular order——

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker, because they were the words——

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the words he just used be stricken from the RECORD. The gentleman has just uttered——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the sentence referred to.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be heard on that.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. BLANTON. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois will be fair enough to give me a chance to be heard here.

Mr. KING. Certainly. I will yield to the gentleman three minutes——

Mr. BLANTON. Five minutes.

Mr. KING (continuing). To talk upon the question.

Mr. BLANTON. Just to mention——

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. In order to have the subject to debate, must not the motion be read to the House?

The SPEAKER. That is proper. The Clerk will report the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING]. The gentleman from Illinois will state it.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I asked unanimous consent. There is an objection pending, but reserved. I move, on page 7818, near the top of the first column, that the words of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON], "No. Only the autocratic, anarchistic leaders who preach revolution against our Government," be stricken from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KING moves to strike from the RECORD, page 7818, near the beginning of the page, 22 lines from the top, these words: "Mr. BLANTON. No. Only the autocratic, anarchistic leaders who preach revolution against our Government."

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Illinois is not in order. It is not in order for the House to strike from the RECORD words used in debate that are not offensive to the rules of the House. The House may not strike from the RECORD such words. The decision can be found, I am quite sure, in Hinds' Precedents. The House may not arbitrarily exercise the power to strike inoffensive words from the RECORD. I do not understand that it is insisted that those words involve a question of privilege.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman, I assume, will be fair enough to let me be heard on this matter.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; for a question.

Mr. DYER. As I understand it, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois says those words were not uttered in debate. They were written in the RECORD. They were not uttered on the floor.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Moreover, if the gentleman will yield to me, is it not contrary to the rules of the House to ever utter on the floor of the House any statement when the gentleman so uttering it has not been recognized by the Chair or yielded to by the speaker? That is the fact, as I understand it, in this case, and it was so stated.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield to me——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will just permit me for a moment, I did not understand the basis of the gentleman's motion. If the basis of his motion be that these words were not uttered in fact, and that the gentleman from Texas was not entitled to the floor to utter them, not being yielded to, then I am prepared to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. That is the fact in this case.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman from Illinois says that that was the basis——

Mr. KING. That is the basis.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Illinois yielded to me five minutes, as I understand.

Mr. GARRETT. I withdraw the point of order because of that statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is recognized.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, yesterday in debate the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] asked permission to insert in the RECORD a telegram from John L. Lewis to the Secretary of Labor, which was a scurrilous attack upon the President. I objected, which was then my right.

Whereupon the gentleman from Illinois said this:

I expected the gentleman would object. The gentleman has said that he would hang them as high as Haman. I would recommend to the gentleman to read the history of Robespierre of France and his ending.

Saying that I was in favor of hanging the laborers of this country as high as Haman.

I immediately rose in my seat and said, "No. Only the autocratic, anarchistic leaders who preach revolution against our Government." The reporter of the debate got "only the autocratic leaders." He did not get the balance of my statement, "who preach revolution against our Government." That is part of the statement I made. When the notes came to me they said "only the autocratic leaders," and I added to that exactly what I said on the floor—"who had been preaching revolution against our Government."

This was in conformity with what had happened before; and in that connection I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that——

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No. The gentleman has all the time he wants. I am sure he will allow me to give my reasons to the House.

We had permission here which gave every Member of the House the privilege to extend his remarks. That permission was asked for on the floor and granted. I had the right not only to put those words in—and they were left out, not being caught by the reporter—but I had the further right to put in more, if I desired, under permission given by the House to extend my remarks. What does the extension of remarks mean, if you can not add to what you have already said? But I made that statement here. "Only the autocratic, anarchistic leaders who have been preaching revolution against our Government."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BLANTON. In a moment I will yield. What brought about this discussion by the gentleman from Illinois was the following: The other day the gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] was discussing the anarchistic labor leaders.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KING. The point of order is that the gentleman is not discussing the matter before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I can not yield. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. JONES] said "we ought to deport these labor leaders from this country; that we ought to send them somewhere else"—the ones who had been preaching anarchy in this country; and I got up and told the gentleman from Texas that we ought to have a law that where a man preaches revolution against his flag and Government, to overthrow it by force, we ought to have a law to hang him as high as Haman. That is the statement on which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] based his statement "that I would hang all the laborers in this country."

I want to say to the gentleman from Illinois that ever since I was 10 years old I have labored for my meat and bread. Since I was 10 years old I have assumed the responsibility of the head of a family. I have helped to raise and educate and support orphan brothers and sisters. Am I the kind of a man who would preach the doctrine of hanging as high as Haman the laborers of this country? There is not another man in this House who has more callouses in his hands to show that he has labored and earned his bread by the sweat of his brow. [Applause.] I want to say that I had the right to correct the statement of the gentleman from Illinois, who would have the country believe that I was in favor of hanging the laborers of this land. It was in connection with those remarks that I made the RECORD show my statement in reply.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, this is a question purely of parliamentary practice. The gentleman from Texas and no other Member has the right to interject remarks into the speech of another Member. The gentleman from Texas did not secure the right to the floor, and his remarks were not a part of the debate and should be stricken out.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. A short time.

Mr. KING. I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, it occurs to me that this is much ado about nothing. I dare say, Mr. Speaker, that there is never a day passes that some gentleman does not interject a question or statement into the remarks of some other gentleman who is upon the floor engaged in debate. If we were to take up the time of the House to strike every such interruption from the RECORD we never would attend to the public business. There is nothing in this statement that anybody should object to. The alteration could in no wise embarrass the gentleman from Illinois. I do not believe that any Member ought to change remarks in a colloquy; certainly he never should change the colloquy so as to put the gentleman with whom he is engaged in debate in an embarrassing or false position. But nothing of that sort occurs here. The gentleman from Illinois had said to the gentleman from Texas "The gentleman would hang all the labor people." As the RECORD reads—whether or not it is changed I know not—Mr. BLANTON replies, "No; only the autocratic, anarchistic leaders who preach revolution against our Government." It seems when the reporter took it down, according to the gentleman from Texas, he left out the last part. What possible difference can it make to the House and the orderly procedure of the House; what difference can it make to any Member of the House, or to the House itself, whether the gentleman added "who preach revolution against our Government?"

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman think that any Member ought to have the right to prevent some one else from interjecting something into his remarks without his permission?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SINNOTT. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SINNOTT. Was not the remedy of the gentleman from Illinois to cut out the remarks from the reporter's transcript?

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair at first blush that it is in order to strike out the words as a question of privilege. If a Member without permission interjects a statement into another Member's speech, the House has a right to determine whether it should be stricken out. The Chair is disposed to think that if another gentleman interjects a statement into a Member's speech, the Member himself has the right to strike that out, but that is a matter of procedure rather than of parliamentary law, and the Member might not have the opportunity to strike it out or even to see it.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I am not at all concerned in the merits of the controversy as to whether the statement of the gentleman from Illinois was proper or whether the statement of the gentleman from Texas, if made in order, would have been proper. I want to refer to the actual facts of the case in the interest of orderly procedure of the House, which, in my opinion, is too frequently infringed, and all to the detriment of orderly proceeding.

The fact was, and anybody will admit it, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] had the floor. No one without the permission of the Speaker, in the first place, and without the permission of the gentleman from Illinois, in the second place, had any more right to the floor than if he had been seated in the gallery and sought to interrupt the proceedings.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. The gentleman from Illinois rose and asked unanimous consent to print a statement in the RECORD. He was recognized by the Speaker for that purpose and that purpose only. The gentleman from Texas objected, as he had a right to do. I ask the gentleman from Ohio if he does not think the gentleman from Illinois, therefore, when he interjected his remarks, was as much out of order as the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. LONGWORTH. I am not bringing up that question whether the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois were in order or not. It has absolutely nothing to do with this question. He had the floor, and nobody took him off the floor by a point of order. The gentleman from Texas interjected into the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois, as is proved by the next sentence after the remarks of the gentleman from Texas—

Mr. KING. I refuse to yield to the gentleman.

Then the Speaker says:

A gentleman must not take the floor without consent.

The gentleman from Texas made the remark without the consent of the Speaker and without the consent of the gentleman from Illinois. It is not a part of the RECORD.

Mr. POU. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. POU. That being so, where the reporter takes down a part of what the gentleman from Texas says, does not the gentleman from Ohio think that in all fairness he ought to be reported correctly. I remember distinctly the gentleman from Texas did add the words he said he did.

Mr. LONGWORTH. He had no right to be reported at all.

Mr. POU. No; but if he is reported, does not the gentleman think he ought to be reported correctly?

Mr. LONGWORTH. That does not come into the discussion. He had no right to say anything. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] as Speaker has frequently so ruled, and I recollect a statement that he made on the floor of the House in relation to this sort of an occurrence. He stated that on one occasion he was making a speech and was interrupted by a gentleman and he declined to yield. When the manuscript was brought to him he of his own motion struck out every remark made by the gentleman who interrupted him.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. The next day, as he said, the gentleman came and objected to having his remarks stricken out, but Mr. CLARK insisted that he had the absolute right to strike them out. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] had the right to strike these remarks out at the time. Having failed to do that, then it becomes the right of the House to strike them out, if the House sees fit to do so. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] laid what I think is a very untenable ground for his right to keep these remarks in the RECORD or correct them. He says that he did it under leave to extend.

Mr. BLANTON. No, no. I said that would have been a reason for it, if I had not actually used the words. But I did use them. Mr. KITCHIN heard me use them and Mr. POU heard me and Mr. ROSE, from Pennsylvania, heard me use them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Texas is not in order, as he is speaking from his seat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas must not interrupt another gentleman without asking his consent.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. Yes.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman from Ohio to-morrow then move to strike out the remarks just made by the gentleman from Texas? He had neither the gentleman's consent nor the Speaker's consent—and that is something that occurs every day.

Mr. LONGWORTH. No; but in this case I said that the gentleman had grounded his remarks on a leave to print.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONGWORTH. With pleasure.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has control of the time.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I want to clear up the question of fact in regard to this matter. Of course, the point is a purely parliamentary one. As I pointed out, it was not a part of the debates in the House, but independent of them. This manuscript was submitted to me and contained the gentleman's interjection, which was, "No; just the leaders." I did not cross it out at that time, when they were submitted to me. Afterwards the manuscript went to the gentleman from Texas, and it was his duty, under the rules, if he intended to interject some further remarks, to let me know or ask my permission, which he did not do. That is the way the words happened to get in. But independent of that, the particular objection is that the gentleman from Texas did not have the floor, and simply because he has a louder voice and can halloo louder than anyone else does not give him the right to the floor in this House under the rules. [Applause.]

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KING. I can not yield to the gentleman. He would not yield to me.

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Illinois yield me three minutes?

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman let me have about a minute?

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. STEAGALL. Will the gentleman yield me three minutes?

Mr. KING. I regret——

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I feel constrained to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question.

Mr. KITCHIN. I would like to have the gentleman yield to me one minute.

Mr. KING. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina for one minute.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman is technically correct, that according to the rules of the House, if the gentleman insists upon it, the remarks should go out—purely upon a technicality; but I do remember distinctly hearing the gentleman use those remarks, or remarks substantially similar—that it was the revolutionary leaders—the leaders teaching revolution.

Mr. KING. That makes no difference to me—what he said.

Mr. KITCHIN. If the gentleman will read his own remarks, while I think the gentleman did not intend to do it, yet he will see that it leaves the gentleman from Texas in the position of saying, according to the gentleman, that he would hang all of the leaders.

Mr. KING. Then the gentleman should have explained in his own time.

Mr. BLANTON. Not the leaders, but the laborers.

Mr. KITCHIN. Not the leaders, but the laborers. And does not the gentleman from Illinois think it only fair to the gentleman from Texas to let his remarks stay in the RECORD? The gentleman has the right to insist upon their going out. It does not affect the gentleman's speech or argument, but it does put the gentleman from Texas in the wrong light.

Mr. KING. Personally I would say that the gentleman's suggestion I do not object to, but in the interest of orderly procedure of this House I do not see how I can comply with the gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. KITCHIN. Technically the gentleman is right; but I should think the gentleman would withdraw his motion, knowing that it will do the gentleman from Texas a wrong.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

Mr. RUCKER. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves the previous question.

The question was taken, and the previous question was ordered.

Mr. RUCKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I demand a division, and, pending that, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the door, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 117, nays 95, answered "present" 20, not voting 200, as follows:

YEAS—117.

Anderson	Foster	McFadden	Scott
Andrews, Nebr.	French	McPherson	Smith, Idaho
Baer	Fuller, Ill.	MacCrate	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Garland	MacGregor	Steenerson
Barbour	Green, Iowa	Madden	Stephens, Ohio
Begg	Greene, Mass.	Michener	Stiness
Benham	Hayden	Miller	Strong, Kans.
Bowers	Hernandez	Monahan, Wis.	Strong, Pa.
Brooks, Ill.	Hersey	Mondell	Summers, Wash.
Browne	Hickey	Morgan	Sweet
Burdick	Hoch	Mott	Taylor, Tenn.
Burke	Huddleston	Nelson, Wis.	Thompson
Burroughs	James	Nolan	Tillman
Carss	Jefferis	Osborne	Tilson
Chindblom	Johnson, Wash.	Parker	Timberlake
Christopherson	Juul	Platt	Towner
Classon	Kahn	Porter	Vestal
Dale	Keller	Raker	Volstead
Darrow	Kelly, Pa.	Ramseyer	Wason
Davis, Minn.	King	Randall, Calif.	Wheeler
Denison	Kinkaid	Randall, Wis.	White, Kans.
Dickinson, Iowa	Kleczka	Reavis	White, Me.
Dowell	Knutson	Reber	Williams
Dunn	Kraus	Reed, W. Va.	Wilson, Ill.
Dyer	Kreider	Rhodes	Wingo
Edmonds	Lampert	Ricketts	Yates
Ellsworth	Lankford	Riddick	Young, N. Dak.
Elston	Longworth	Rose
Evans, Nebr.	Luhring	Rowe
Focht	McArthur	Sanders, Ind.

NAYS—95.

Alexander	Dent	Larsen	Romjue
Almon	Dickinson, Mo.	Lazaro	Rucker
Aswell	Dominick	Lee, Ga.	Sabath
Barkley	Dunbar	Linthicum	Sanders, La.
Black	Dupré	Lonergan	Sinnott
Bland, Mo.	Evans, Mont.	McAndrews	Small
Bland, Va.	Gallagher	McGlennon	Smithwick
Box	Garrett	McLaughlin, Mich.	Stoll
Brand	Glynn	Major	Steagall
Brinson	Godwin, N. C.	Mapes	Stedman
Buchanan	Goodwin, Ark.	Merritt	Stevenson
Byrnes, S. C.	Griffin	Moore, Va.	Taylor, Colo.
Byrns, Tenn.	Hadley	Nelson, Mo.	Temple
Campbell, Pa.	Hardy, Colo.	Nichols, Mich.	Upshaw
Caraway	Harrison	Overstreet	Valle
Clark, Fla.	Hastings	Padgett	Vinson
Coady	Hull, Tenn.	Park	Watkins
Collier	Humphreys	Parrish	Weaver
Connally	Igoe	Phelan	Welty
Cramton	Jacoway	Pou	Wilson, La.
Crisp	Johnson, Miss.	Quin	Woods, Va.
Currie, Mich.	Jones, Tex.	Rainey, Ala.	Wright
Curry, Calif.	Kitchin	Rayburn	Young, Tex.
Davis, Tenn.	Lanham	Robinson, N. C.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—20.

Ayres	Cannon	Goodykoontz	Mansfield
Bee	Carter	Hays	Neely
Briggs	Echols	Hudspeth	Sears
Butler	Fairfield	Layton	Watson, Va.
Candler	Fisher	Mann, S. C.	Whaley

NOT VOTING—200.

Ackerman	Browning	Cullen	Evans, Nev.
Andrews, Md.	Brumbaugh	Dallinger	Ferris
Anthony	Caldwell	Davey	Fess
Ashbrook	Campbell, Kans.	Dempsey	Fields
Babka	Cantrill	Dewalt	Flood
Bacharach	Carew	Donovan	Fordney
Bell	Casey	Dooling	Frear
Benson	Clark, Mo.	Doremus	Freeman
Blackmon	Cleary	Doughton	Fuller, Mass.
Bland, Ind.	Cole	Drane	Gallivan
Blanton	Cooper	Eagan	Gandy
Boies	Copley	Eagle	Ganly
Booher	Costello	Elliott	Gard
Britten	Crago	Emerson	Garner
Brooks, Pa.	Crowther	Esch	Goldfogle

Good	Kiess	Murphy	Sims
Goodall	Kincheloe	Newton, Minn.	Sinclair
Gould	LaGuardia	Newton, Mo.	Sisson
Graham, Pa.	Langley	Nicholls, S. C.	Slemp
Graham, Ill.	Lea, Calif.	O'Connell	Smith, Ill.
Greene, Vt.	Lehlbach	O'Connor	Smith, N. Y.
Griest	Lesher	Ogden	Snell
Hamill	Little	Oldfield	Snyder
Hamilton	Luce	Oliver	Steele
Hardy, Tex.	Lufking	Olney	Stephens, Miss.
Haskell	McClintic	Paige	Sullivan
Haugen	McCulloch	Pell	Sumners, Tex.
Hawley	McDuffie	Peters	Swope
Heflin	McKenzie	Purnell	Tague
Hersman	McKeown	Radcliffe	Taylor, Ark.
Hicks	McKinley	Rainey, H. T.	Thomas
Hill	McKinley	Rainey, J. W.	Tincher
Holland	McLane	Ramsey	Tinkham
Houghton	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Reed, N. Y.	Treadway
Howard	Magee	Riordan	Vare
Hulings	Maher	Robsion, Ky.	Venable
Hull, Iowa	Mann, Ill.	Rodenberg	Voigt
Husted	Martin	Rogers	Walsh
Hutchinson	Mason	Rouse	Walters
Ireland	Mays	Rowan	Ward
Johnson, Ky.	Mead	Rubey	Watson, Pa.
Johnson, S. Dak.	Minahan, N. J.	Sanders, N. Y.	Webb
Johnston, N. Y.	Montague	Sanford	Webster
Jones, Pa.	Moon	Saunders, Va.	Welling
Kearns	Mooney	Schall	Wilson, Pa.
Kelley, Mich.	Moore, Ohio	Scully	Winslow
Kendall	Moore, Pa.	Sells	Wise
Kennedy, Iowa	Moores, Ind.	Sherwood	Wood, Ind.
Kennedy, R. I.	Morin	Shreve	Woodyard
Kettner	Mudd	Siegel	Zihlman

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota with Mr. FLOOD.

Mr. VOIGT with Mr. HARDY of Texas.

Mr. MAGEE with Mr. THOMAS.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota with Mr. BEE.

Mr. ROBSION of Kentucky with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky.

Mr. MOORE of Ohio with Mr. GALLIVAN.

Mr. LANGLEY with Mr. FIELDS.

Mr. TINCHER with Mr. DOUGHTON.

Mr. BOIES with Mr. SEARS.

Mr. TREADWAY with Mr. BOOHER.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania with Mr. MANSFIELD.

Mr. BUTLER with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. ACKERMAN with Mr. WISE.

Mr. SANDERS of New York with Mr. FERRIS.

Mr. WALTERS with Mr. CASEY.

Mr. FREAR with Mr. ROWAN.

Mr. FREEMAN with Mr. ROUSE.

Mr. COLE with Mr. TAGUE.

Mr. COOPER with Mr. SULLIVAN.

Mr. COPLEY with Mr. STEPHENS of Mississippi.

Mr. COSTELLO with Mr. SMITH of New York.

Mr. CROWTHER with Mr. SISSON.

Mr. DALLINGER with Mr. SIMS.

Mr. WATSON of Pennsylvania with Mr. CLEARY.

Mr. WEBSTER with Mr. CAREW.

Mr. KENDALL with Mr. MAYS.

Mr. KIESS with Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. ANTHONY with Mr. WELLING.

Mr. MASON with Mr. LEA of California.

Mr. GOOD with Mr. RIORDAN.

Mr. LAGUARDIA with Mr. MAHER.

Mr. HULL of Iowa with Mr. NICHOLLS of South Carolina.

Mr. HUSTED with Mr. MOONEY.

Mr. HUTCHINSON with Mr. MOON.

Mr. SELLS with Mr. EVANS of Nevada.

Mr. SHREVE with Mr. EAGAN.

Mr. GOODALL with Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY.

Mr. GOULD with Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY.

Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania with Mr. OLNEY.

Mr. WINSLOW with Mr. CANTRILL.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana with Mr. CALDWELL.

Mr. WOODYARD with Mr. BRUMBAUGH.

Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. OLIVER.

Mr. SIEGEL with Mr. EAGLE.

Mr. SINCLAIR with Mr. DRANE.

Mr. BLAND of Indiana with Mr. VENABLE.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania with Mr. KETTNER.

Mr. ZIHLMAN with Mr. BLACKMON.

Mr. DEMPSEY with Mr. SHERWOOD.

Mr. IRELAND with Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. LEHLBACH with Mr. MCLANE.

Mr. LITTLE with Mr. MCKINLEY.

Mr. SMITH of Illinois with Mr. DOREMUS.

Mr. SNELL with Mr. DOOLING.

Mr. RADCLIFFE with Mr. GOLDFOGLE.

Mr. RAMSEY with Mr. GARNER.

Mr. LUCE with Mr. MCKEOWN.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. DONOVAN.

Mr. BROWNING with Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas.

Mr. REED of New York with Mr. GARD.

Mr. RODENBERG with Mr. GANLY.

Mr. MOORES of Indiana with Mr. JOHNSTON of New York.

Mr. MORIN with Mr. HOWARD.

Mr. MUDD with Mr. HOLLAND.

Mr. MCCULLOCH with Mr. MCDUFFIE.

Mr. MCKENZIE with Mr. MCCLINTIC.

Mr. JONES of Pennsylvania with Mr. MINAHAN of New Jersey.

Mr. SWOPE with Mr. DEWALT.

Mr. VARE with Mr. DAVEY.

Mr. HASKELL with Mr. OLDFIELD.

Mr. HAUGEN with Mr. O'CONNOR.

Mr. BACHARACH with Mr. WEBB.

Mr. ESCH with Mr. SCULLY.

Mr. HAWLEY with Mr. O'CONNELL.

Mr. FESS with Mr. SAUNDERS of Virginia.

Mr. FORDNEY with Mr. RUBEY.

Mr. MURPHY with Mr. HERSMAN.

Mr. KEARNS with Mr. MEAD.

Mr. PAIGE with Mr. BENSON.

Mr. PETERS with Mr. BELL.

Mr. NEWTON of Missouri with Mr. BABKA.

Mr. OGDEN with Mr. HEFLIN.

Mr. PURNELL with Mr. HAMILL.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Nebraska with Mr. LESHER.

Mr. MANN of Illinois with Mr. CLARK of Missouri.

Mr. MCKINLEY with Mr. ASHBROOK.

Mr. WALSH with Mr. CULLEN.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. GANDY.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Dudley, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, had asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SMOOT, Mr. FALL, Mr. LENROOT, Mr. MYERS, and Mr. PITTMAN as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas rises to a question of personal privilege. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday during the debate on Senate concurrent resolution No. 15, then under consideration before the House, the following appears of record, with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] on the floor. I cite from page 7818 of the RECORD.

Mr. KING, after certain remarks, says:

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to extend in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point a telegram dated October 30, 1919, to the Secretary of Labor——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. This is intimately connected with the request, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may proceed, but he must come to it quickly.

Mr. BLANTON. It will not take long. He says:

to the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Wilson, from John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America.

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. REAVIS. It is quite apparent that the gentleman from Texas at this time is trying to read in the RECORD that which was stricken out.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not going to do it.

Mr. REAVIS. And I make the point of order that is not in order.

The SPEAKER. That is not in order.

Mr. BLANTON. It reads:

Mr. BLANTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KING. I expected the gentleman would object. The gentleman has said that he would hang them as high as Haman. I would recommend to the gentleman to read the history of Robespierre, of France, and his ending. The gentleman would hang all the laboring people.

Mr. Speaker, in reply to that statement on the floor of the House, even though I did not have recognition of the Chair and was not yielded to by the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair thinks that the statement to the effect that the gentleman would hang all the laboring people does raise a question of personal privilege, and the Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, it has been on very few occasions in this House that I have objected to any gentleman extending his remarks in the RECORD. I had no personal feeling against the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] yesterday when I objected to his request to extend in the RECORD the telegram from John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, to the Secretary of Labor. It was not because of any personal feeling against the gentleman from Illinois, because toward him I have had the kindest of feelings. But I did it from a sense of duty. I had read that Lewis telegram in the press. I knew the contents of it. I knew that it was a reflection not only upon the President of the United States and his Cabinet, but I knew it was a reflection, so far as I considered it, upon the Government of the United States in this crucial hour, and I objected. May I call your attention to a few excerpts from that telegram and show that I had a reason for objecting?

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. In just a moment.

This telegram is published in the press, and I quote from the Washington Times, of Friday, October 31, 1919, the following excerpts from said Lewis telegram, to wit:

> Permit me to say to you, sir, the unprecedented and unwarranted action of Cabinet and President of the United States in issuing statement of Saturday last has done more to prevent satisfactory settlement of impending strike and working out of wage agreement than any other element which has entered into situation. The President's statement is a fiercely partisan document, because it attacks the intention of the mine workers without even suggesting that mine operators may have brought about this unhappy situation, and further because threat is made to exercise full force of Government to prevent stoppage of work—
>
> And so forth.
>
> It is, indeed, a sad commentary upon the principles of square dealing when the President of the United States and his Cabinet, by unanimous vote, ally themselves with sinister financial interests which seek to deny justice to labor and precipitate our country into industrial turmoil—
>
> And so forth.
>
> The President of the United States is the servant and not the master of the Constitution—
>
> And so forth.
>
> The President's statement threatens invasion of constitutional and inalienable rights of American citizens. It is the climax of long series of attempted usurpation of executive power—
>
> And so forth.
>
> The presidential edict threatens to deny to mine workers protection of both the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments to the Constitution. They are threatened with involuntary servitude by the presidential attempt—
>
> And so forth.
>
> Yet his statement threatens the mine workers with a sanctified peonage—
>
> And so forth.

I have read those excerpts to show to the membership of this House that I had a reason, and a good reason, as a Representative, as a red-blooded American citizen, in this crucial hour which we are now facing, to keep that infamous, scurrilous attack upon not merely the President but upon the Government of the United States from going into the RECORD.

Mr. KEARNS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Not until I get through my statement, and then I will be glad to yield.

I want to say that in the face of that document, which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING], who has sought to discredit me here this morning——

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I decline to yield. The gentleman has gone far enough in his effort to discredit me already.

I want to say, in the face of this document which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] sought to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD now, when at least the membership of this House should be men of good judgment, who would not fan the flame of the radical just now—I want to say, in the face of his attempt, that it had been asserted on the floor of this House several times this week by the gentleman's leader on that side of the House, the distinguished gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], that he and every other patriotic, red-blooded American citizen indorsed every word of that statement by the President. Is there a man here on this side of the House who does not indorse the President's statement? If there is, I want him to be fair enough to stand up and let the membership of this House look him in the eye.

Gentlemen, I have a right in the exercise of my prerogative as a Representative of some of the people of the United States to get up in my place and object to any such scurrilous stuff as that going into the RECORD. I did it then and I would do it again.

Mr. KEARNS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just in a moment. When I get through with my statement I will gladly yield. And when I objected—do not the rules of this House give every man the right on the floor to object? Under the rules of the House any man has the right to get up and claim recognition to object. I got up and objected. That was one of my prerogatives as a Member of this House. Did not that give me just as much right to the floor as the gentleman from Illinois, who asked us to insert this stuff in the RECORD? I objected. Then what did he do? Was he fair? Was he fair to me? Let us see; let us see whether he was fair. Now, you men who voted against me here this morning to keep my position from being known to the country, I want you to scrutinize carefully the words that that gentleman used on the floor when he knew that that was not my position or the position of any man in this country:

> Mr. KING. I expected the gentleman would object. The gentleman has said that he would hang them as high as Haman. I would recommend to the gentleman to read the history of Robespierre, of France, and his ending.

Now, listen:

> The gentleman would hang all of the laboring people.

You permitted your colleague on this side of the House to make a statement that one of your colleagues, even though he is a Democrat from Texas, would hang all the laboring people. You do not believe that that is my sentiment. There is not a man in this House who believes that. But you permitted your colleague on the floor to make an unparliamentary statement like that, something that he knew he had no right to make against a colleague of his when it did not represent his sentiments and never had represented them. He went out of his place as a Representative on this floor to misrepresent me before the people of the country.

I want to say that for a man who would be in favor of hanging all the laboring men, that there is no death on earth too bad for him. What basis did he have for it? The only basis on earth he had for it was the fact that my colleague from Texas, Mr. JONES, while on the floor the other day, in discussing legislation that would get rid of the anarchists of this country, said those anarchists should be deported. Not the laboring men, because we could not do without them. I am a laboring man. Ever since the war Congress convened in April, 1917, I have worked from 12 to 16 hours a day. I am a laboring man. I know the problems that confront every man who wins his bread and meat by the sweat of his brow. I know them, and my people know that I know them. You might think, the gentleman from Illinois might think, and every man who may attempt to discredit me before the country and the House might think, that organized labor will pat you on the back. You may think this might hurt me in my district. You wait until after the next election comes, and you will see that in the face of every fight I have made on this floor I will get at least 40 per cent of the laboring vote in my country. The laboring men know that I have been fighting for their best interests. The other 60 per cent would vote for me if it were not for the autocratic lash of the autocratic whip of the labor union. When that labor union autocratic whip lashes, they respond, a number of them, just like you Republicans respond sometimes when your leader's whip pops on this side of the House. You vote sometimes when you do not want to vote.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. I do not think the gentleman is now discussing the question of personal privilege at all. He is making a political speech. I want the gentleman to be set right. I want it to be made to appear that he is not in favor of hanging all the laborers; but he must confine himself to the subject.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman should confine himself to his question of privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. I will try to, Mr. Speaker. But when it is "BLANTON did this" and "BLANTON did that"; when the fight is made against this that BLANTON said and against that that BLANTON said, although it has been done for 30 years just as BLANTON has been doing it, the unions are behind it. It is the labor unions of this country who have tried to discredit me. It has been shown that hired employees of the Labor Department have left their places, drawing big salaries from the Government, and gone down here at the Capitol Park Hotel and registered under assumed names and stayed there for several days in the attempt to frame me, and some of my colleagues here have applauded them for it. But the people of the country know the situation. You can not fool them. They sit in these galleries and pass upon everything that we do and say here. If I had gotten permission the other day when I asked it, to have placed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD several thousand letters coming to me from citizens from every congressional district in this land, letters from your constituents, possibly some of you men would not have been so anxious to vote against me this morning. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] could see the letters that have come from his district in Illinois, he would not have been so anxious here this morning to try to discredit me. I have the satisfaction and the consolation of knowing that my position on the floor of this House has been approved by the loyal citizens of this Nation, Democrats and Republicans alike.

Now, when the gentleman from Illinois said that I was in favor of hanging all laborers, what would you have done, my good friend from Colorado [Mr. VAILE], if a man had misrepresented you in that way? Would you have sat silent? I ask every man in this House who voted to strike the words indicating my position from this RECORD this morning and leave me before the country apparently in favor of hanging every laboring man in the country—that is what you did; you voted to leave me suspended in the air, as in favor of hanging every laboring man in the country——

The SPEAKER. The Chair must admonish the gentleman that he must confine himself to the question of privilege. The justice of the vote just taken by the House is not the question.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have the deepest and profoundest respect for the Speaker, and I do not want to violate the rules.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Just a moment; let me finish my statement. When the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] said I was in favor of hanging all labor men I did just what each one of you would do. I got up and said, "No; I am not in favor of that; I am in favor of hanging only the autocratic, anarchistic leaders who preach revolution against this Government."

Mr. REAVIS. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman has just enumerated in his speech the language which the House has stricken from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is in order.

Mr. BLANTON. I think the gentleman from Nebraska is fairer than that. There is nobody in this House that thinks more of the gentleman from Nebraska than I do.

Mr. REAVIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. No; I can not yield. Did I make that statement? I will give you the names of the men who heard me make it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas is out of order, and the Chair will again admonish the gentleman that he must confine himself to his question of privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. It was questioned by the gentleman from Illinois whether I made the statement that appears in the RECORD. I have a right under a question of personal privilege to show that numerous Members here heard me make that statement.

The SPEAKER. The only question of personal privilege the gentleman made was that he was charged with being in favor of hanging all labor men.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I make the further point of personal privilege, the highest privilege, that it was intimated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] this morning that I did not make the statement, and I want to be heard on it.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know whether the gentleman from Illinois made that statement or not.

Mr. BLANTON. I will ask the reporter to produce the notes of the gentleman's opening remarks this morning.

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, in view of the fact that that was left open—I ask unanimous consent to name the gentlemen sitting around me here who heard me make the statement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to state to the gentleman that the Chair is simply endeavoring to save the time of the House, and the gentleman from Texas is not confining himself to the question of privilege.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, is it not always in order to ask unanimous consent of the House?

The SPEAKER. Certainly.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to name my colleagues, both Democrats and Republicans seated around me here, who heard me make that statement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to name the Members who heard him make the statement. Is there objection?

Mr. REAVIS. Reserving the right to object, this is a question of personal privilege on the statement of the gentleman from Illinois that he, the gentleman from Texas, was in favor of hanging laborers as high as Haman. I do not believe that anybody in this House has any such thought that he ever said such a thing, but I believe that this is a matter that ought to be brought to a close in order that the business of the House may proceed.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of economy of time, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made and the gentleman from Texas will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Everybody knows in this House, and in this city, and in this Nation, that I have been making a fight ever since I have been in Congress against—not labor unions, not laborers, or their right to organize for proper and lawful purposes—but against autocracy in their midst, against anarchy in their midst, against the disregard of law preached in their midst, against the preachment of revolution against that flag and against that Government.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker I make the point of order that the gentleman is not confining himself to the question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair's attention was diverted, but the gentleman will confine himself to the question.

Mr. BLANTON. I am discussing the question whether I was in favor of hanging labor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. BLANTON. I have done that. I have warned this House time and again of the very emergency which exists just now. I have pleaded with the membership of this House month after month for that very thing. I do not deny what I have done. What I have done is in the past. The President did on last Saturday what I have been preaching in the past months and for the past two years. What I have been doing in the past two years the Cabinet of the United States did in the last week. What I have preached from the floor of this House during the last two years the Attorney General of the United States has been doing in the last few days. What I have preached from the floor of this House the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] voted that very sentiment on the roll call here on yesterday morning. He voted for this resolution No. 15. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois if he approves of the statement that was made by John L. Lewis to the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. KING. Will the gentleman give me a chance to answer?

Mr. BLANTON. It can be answered by yes or no, and I will give the gentleman the privilege of answering yes or no.

Mr. KING. I want to say——

Mr. BLANTON. I will yield for the gentleman to say yes or no. Do you approve of the telegram sent by Lewis to the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. KING. I stated on the floor of the House——

Mr. BLANTON. I yield only for an answer of yes or no. The question can be answered by yes or no.

Mr. KING. If the gentleman will give me a chance to answer; he does not control the method of my answer.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman willing to answer it yes or no?

Mr. KING. I will answer your question if you insist.

Mr. BLANTON. Are you willing to answer that question yes or no?

Mr. KING. I will answer your question. Will you cease talking for a minute? The gentleman's voice is too loud.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] has no right to address the gentleman from Texas as he did. He should address him as "the gentleman from Texas" and not as "you."

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make the same point of order the other way, that the gentleman from Texas has no right to address the gentleman from Illinois in the second person.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas will suspend. The Chair rules that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, since the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] is not willing to answer that question yes or no, I want to know if there is a man in this House who says that he is in favor of and indorses that telegram from Lewis to the Secretary of Labor? If there is, I will give you a chance to say "yes," and if you do not say "yes," I take it by your silence that you are not in favor of it.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, is this propounding questions to the House for an answer yes or no, and all this talk——

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. The Chair thinks the gentleman is not confining himself to the question of personal privilege.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman proceed in order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman raises the point of order that the gentleman is not in order. The gentleman will take his seat, and then he may proceed by leave of the House. The gentleman from Texas will be seated. The Chair understood the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER] to raise the point of order that the gentleman was not proceeding in order.

Mr. BLANTON. If I am not, Mr. Speaker, it is through no intention upon my part to go beyond the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has been admonished by the Chair several times. The gentleman will take his seat, and the motion may be made that he proceed in order.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania to make any such point of order. I understood him to make a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. KREIDER. I was directing the Speaker's attention to the fact that the gentleman from Texas had been repeatedly admonished to proceed in order, and he persistently refuses to do so. Instead of that, he turns around and propounds questions to the House, which is out of order, and I therefore make the demand that the gentleman be silenced.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that the gentleman from Pennsylvania simply propounded an interrogatory to the Speaker and did not make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. That may be.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman be not allowed to proceed unless he proceeds in order.

The SPEAKER. That point is, of course, one which must be sustained.

Mr. KREIDER. I make the point of order, furthermore, that he is out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not proceeding now. The gentleman will proceed in order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have taken up more of the time of the House than I intended. I think if my position must be taken out of the RECORD yesterday morning, that the unparliamentary language of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] should likewise be taken from the RECORD. I move, Mr. Speaker, in my time, that the language of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] appearing on the pages in the RECORD that I have indicated, wherein he attributes to me the sentiments of wanting to see all of the laborers hanged as high as Haman, be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, and on that motion I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please state exactly what he wishes to have stricken out.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not make a motion of that kind when he is recognized on a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct in one sense.

The gentleman from Texas can not make that motion as a part of his question of personal privilege, but the Chair thinks that it is a privileged motion.

Mr. BLANTON. I ask permission of the Chair to make the motion, which is a privileged motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair recognizes the gentleman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against the motion.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will wait until the motion of the gentleman from Texas has been reported by the Clerk.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the language of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] on top of page 7818 of the RECORD of yesterday, which follows an objection that was made by me to the insertion in the RECORD of certain matter, be stricken from the RECORD, the language to which I refer being as follows:

> Mr. KING. I expected the gentleman would object. The gentleman has said that he would hang them as high as Haman. I would recommend to the gentleman to read the history of Robespierre, of France, and his ending. The gentleman would hang all the laboring people!
> * * * * * * *
> Mr. KING. I refuse to yield to a gentleman at the present time who would hang men as high as Haman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas makes the motion which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please wait until the motion is reported by the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. BLANTON moves to strike from the RECORD, on page 7818, at the top of the left-hand column, the following language:
> "Mr. KING. I expected the gentleman would object. The gentleman has said that he would hang them as high as Haman. I would recommend to the gentleman to read the history of Robespierre, of France, and his ending. The gentleman would hang all the laboring people!"
> * * * * * * *
> "Mr. KING. I refuse to yield to a gentleman at the present time who would hang men as high as Haman."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman's motion comes too late. The gentleman had a perfect right at the time those words were uttered on the floor by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] to have had the words taken down, and then it would have been a question as to whether they should be stricken out. The gentleman has several times to my personal knowledge failed to take that advantage which was his under the rule, and the next day he either inserts something in the RECORD which he did not say or has retained in the RECORD that which he had no right to say.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to those remarks, and I ask that they be taken down. I ask that the remarks of the gentleman be taken down.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I will be very glad to have them taken down.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks that the words of the gentleman from Ohio be taken down.

The reporter proceeded to transcribe the words requested to be taken down.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw both the motion and the request; let them all stay in.

COAL, PHOSPHATE, OIL, GAS, AND SODIUM.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 2775 and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

> S. 2775. An act to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the request of the Senate for a conference be agreed to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, Mr. ELSTON, Mr. FERRIS, and Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a change of reference. There is a House Document, No. 175, that has been referred to the Committee on Claims when it relates to a bill that has been referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that House Document No. 175 be referred from the Committee on Claims to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. MONDELL. For the present, Mr. Speaker, I object.

QUESTION OF PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] will state his question of personal privilege.

Mr. KING. My name was mentioned by the gentleman from Texas in his remarks made here a few minutes ago, and it places me in a rather false light before the House. I do not think the gentleman from Texas intended to do it or to work me any injury, because the gentleman from Texas and myself are the best of friends.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois will state his question of privilege.

Mr. KING. I am coming to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman must state it at once and before he begins to debate.

Mr. KING. My point of personal privilege is simply this: Those statements that were made by the gentleman from Texas placed me in a false light before the House in this, that I stand here as taking up the time of the House all day on a matter of this kind because I do not consent to strike out certain words. I went to the gentleman from Texas——

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think the gentleman is stating a question of personal privilege.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman is entitled to time in which to make his statement.

Mr. KING. If the Chair desires to rule in advance on the subject, very well.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman had completed his statement.

Mr. KING. No, sir; I had not. I went——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that the gentleman is not stating a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair must state to the gentleman from Illinois that in order to make a question of privilege he must quote something that has been derogatory to his character or standing.

Mr. KING. I went to that table a few minutes ago, before the gentleman made his speech on my motion, and I said, "I will consent to the withdrawal of that part of your speech from the RECORD which puts you in as favoring the hanging of the laboring people." The gentleman refused to accept that; told me I was insulting him, and waved me away from the table. What more——

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the gentleman stating what occurred.

Mr. KING. I have objection to the gentleman's statement, and therefore made a unanimous-consent request.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman.

Mr. KING. I ask that the words to the effect that the gentleman would hang all laboring people be stricken from the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the words to the effect that the gentleman "would hang all the laboring people" be stricken from the RECORD.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object. It comes too late.

ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 363.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. J. Res. 241, to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the year 1919. The said resolution shall be read; there shall be 20 minutes' general debate—10 minutes by those favoring the resolution and 10 minutes by those opposing the resolution. At the conclusion of the general debate the resolution shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule; at the conclusion of such consideration the committee shall rise, report the resolution, together with any amendments thereto, to the House. Thereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution and all amendments thereto to the final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield?

Mr. KREIDER. For a question.

Mr. BEE. Will you be able to hold this 20 minutes of general debate on the subject of the bill?

Mr. KREIDER. That is what it is supposed to be. The rule provides for it.

Mr. GARRETT. It will be agreeable to me to vote on the rule now.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. LONGWORTH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 241) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the year 1919.

Resolved, etc., That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires on each mining claim located and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed, or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended as to all mining claims in the United States, including Alaska, during the calendar year 1919: Provided, That every claimant of any such mining claim, in order to obtain the benefits of this resolution, shall file or cause to be filed in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before December 31, 1919, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, joint resolution No. 241 provides for the suspension of assessment work on mining claims for the year 1919, and it is for the purpose of correcting House joint resolution No. 150, now Public, No. 10, that was passed and approved on August 15. That resolution at that time was for the purpose of suspending the work on mining claims also, but in it was the provision that any claimant could get the benefit of a suspension on five claims. Now, that was construed in a number of different ways and did not give the claimant what was intended by the passage of the resolution at that time under the construction made by the Interior Department, and as a consequence there has been a good deal of discussion and a great deal of difficulty over it out of which will grow a great deal of litigation for people who purchased claims who were not absolved from the suspension work by the mistaken idea, and those who hold the claims will suffer from it. In addition to that it is found that the bill passed some time ago provided that soldiers and sailors should have exemption for six months from making their assessment work on claims after they were discharged from the service; that a good many soldiers and sailors were discharged prior to June 30, 1919, and as a consequence all of them would be required to do their assessment work on their claims this year before the 1st of January and they have not returned to their homes. The conditions out in the Northwest States, as we know here from the relief given to parties who held homestead entries out there, are very bad, and the people have left the community very largely; a great drought has occurred for three years, and as a consequence there is no one there to do this assessment work, and those who are there engage in other work that is necessary and which they can not get away from. In addition to that snow has occurred in those northwestern mountains out in those States where these claims are, and the weather is such that it is impossible for men to go in there and do claim work. This does not take any money out of the Treasury of the United States. It simply absolves these claimants from doing the work that is required for this year and no longer, and the committee are unanimous in asking that this resolution be passed. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID].

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, there is a real exigency existing for the enactment of the pending resolution. Its purpose is to clarify the act approved August 15 of this year. This act has been construed and misconstrued in various ways, with the result that endless litigation will ensue if the purposes of the law shall not be made plain. To that end this new resolution has been introduced and unanimously reported out by the Committee on Mines and Mining. As the chairman of the committee has well said, snows have been falling in mountains where these mineral claims exist, which render it impracticable now, at this late time in the season, for the assessment work required by the law to be performed. However, the question of the merit of suspending the requirements to perform assessment work this year has already been passed upon by the House. This has been adjudicated, we might say, by the House and settled, but public policy requires that we should make plain the purpose of the act. The meaning was well understood and agreed upon by the committee, and I have no doubt but the Supreme Court would give it the construction intended, but lawyers and laymen scattered over the mining States of the West differ so much upon its construction, and as so many different State courts rather than the Department of the Interior will be required to pass upon the questions which may be raised, with the result of diverse decisions to be made, good public policy, as I have said, requires a new enactment.

Mr. Chairman, there are different other reasons why this resolution should be immediately enacted, which I shall not take time to mention, because it is apparent that the disposition of the membership is to grant the relief without extended discussion.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Arkansas unless there is some one who desires to speak in opposition to the bill. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arkansas for 10 minutes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to use the 10 minutes, but I desire to call the attention of the committee to this, that there is nothing very fundamental involved in the joint resolution. The joint resolution does not exempt the holders of the claims from doing assessment work. It simply suspends it for this year, and those of you who are familiar with mining law understand the amount that has to be done of the annual assessment work, and this resolution, even though it does pass, does not relieve the claimant from doing the total amount of assessment work that is required before finally proving up. The reason why the committee reported this bill unanimously, I think, can be summed up in this one statement, and that is that we were convinced that there would be interminable litigation and resulting expense and loss if we did not pass this blanket resolution, which simply exempts the claimant from doing assessment work for this year.

Now, under the restriction that was in the last resolution that was passed, restricting the benefits to five claims to any one person or corporation, there were several questions that arose that would have to be settled in the courts. For instance, suppose a partnership has 10 claims. They take suspension for 5. Then suppose that each member of the partnership should have 10 claims. Would the members as individuals be entitled to any exemptions? Or, as another illustration, suppose that a corporation has 10 claims. That corporation gets 5 claims suspended. Then would each, say, of the thousand stockholders who had stock in the corporation be entitled to suspension if they filed on the claims individually? Would they be entitled to suspension? Suppose that a man was not a stockholder of record in the corporation. Suppose you had transferred your stock to me by assignment, and the transfer had not been made of record on the books of the corporation.

Those suggestions will naturally cause the Members of the House who are lawyers to see how many different interminable questions might arise which would be a cloud on these claims.

So the committee, after hearing the Commissioner of the General Land Office and the other officials, including Judge Feenney, decided that the safest thing to do was to suspend work this year on all claims, and then that would settle it beyond all peradventure.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 241) to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the year 1919.

Resolved, etc., That the provision of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which requires on each mining claim located and until a patent has been issued therefor, not less than $100 worth of labor to be performed, or improvements aggregating such amount to be made each year, be, and the same is hereby, suspended as to all mining claims in the United States, including Alaska, during the calendar year 1919: Provided, That every claimant of any such mining claim, in order to obtain the benefits of this resolution, shall file or cause to be filed in the office where the location notice or certificate is recorded, on or before December 31, 1919, a notice of his desire to hold said mining claim under this resolution.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is necessary to move that the committee rise, inasmuch as I understand the rule provides for it; but, nevertheless, I will move formally that the committee rise and report the resolution to the House with favorable recommendation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a vote has not been taken on it.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule has been passed. The resolution has been read under the five-minute rule, and no gentleman is seeking recognition.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Chairman, a point of order, please.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GARLAND] to move that the committee rise.

Mr. GARLAND. I did put the motion to rise.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. The point of order I made was well taken.

Mr. GARLAND. I made the motion a few moments ago that the committee rise and report out House joint resolution 241 with the recommendation that it be passed.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. The point of order I made a moment ago was that very thing—that there had not been such a motion passed by the House.

Mr. GARLAND. One has been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that under the rule passed by the House it is provided that at the conclusion of the consideration of the resolution the committee should rise. It is not necessary to make the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. However, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made the motion that the committee do now rise and report the resolution with favorable recommendation to the House.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a further point of order. In the interest of orderly procedure, without such a motion as that made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania we would go back into the House without any recommendation whatever as to the measure in the House.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the committee do now rise and report the resolution to the House. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. LONGWORTH, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration House joint resolution 241, had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment, with the recommendation that the resolution be passed.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reports that that committee, having had under consideration House joint resolution 241, had directed him to report the same back to the House without amendment. The question is on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. The record of the proceedings in the Committee of the Whole will show that no action whatever was taken by the committee with regard to recommending to the House that this resolution be passed. Should not some kind of recommendation come from the Committee of the Whole to the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not necessary under the rule.

Mr. BLANTON. That it could report back without recommendation?

The SPEAKER. The rule says the committee shall report the resolution.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Does not that carry with it——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not making a point of order. The question propounded is not a point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Speaker. Where the House has resolved itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering certain legislation, whether under rule or not, is it not the rule of the House that before that legislation can be considered finally by the House it must come from the Committee of the Whole on some kind of a recommendation?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has not made any point of order. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. GARLAND. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. BLANTON) there were 58 ayes and 2 noes.

So the resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. GARLAND, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on this resolution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nebraska?

There was no objection.

AMENDING THE FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules I submit the following report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 364.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 2472, being "An act to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act"; that the bill shall have a privileged status until the conclusion of its consideration; that there shall be not to exceed three hours of general debate, one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and one-half by the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. PHELAN, at the conclusion of which the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule; that at the conclusion of such consideration the committee shall arise and report the bill to the House with amendments, if any; that thereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

With the following amendments recommended by the Committee on Rules:

In line 9 strike out the words "the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency" and insert in lieu thereof the words "those favoring."

In lines 10 and 11 strike out the words "the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. PHELAN," and insert in lieu thereof the words "those opposing the bill."

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. KREIDER. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire some time?

Mr. GARRETT. It has been suggested to me that this bill ought to be read by paragraph for amendment. The attention of the Committee on Rules was not directed at the time we considered the rule to the fact that this is a bill of one section. Not being an appropriation bill, under the general rules of the House, when read for amendment, the whole bill will be read. There are a large number of committee amendments, and those will be offered in any event. It might limit, more than the House desires, the power of offering amendments if we leave it in this state. Would it be agreeable to the gentleman from Pennsylvania if we asked unanimous consent that the rule be amended by inserting the words "by paragraph," so that it will be read by paragraph for amendment?

Mr. KREIDER. I think we ought to make that amendment. I ask unanimous consent to insert after the word "read," in line 11, the words "by paragraph."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to amend the rule by inserting after the word "read," in line 11, the words "by paragraph." Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, from the reading of the rule it is not clear who shall control the time. Will the gentleman state clearly about that?

Mr. KREIDER. Under the rule the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole will control the time, one-half for those in favor and one-half for those opposed.

Mr. KING. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that I am a member of the committee and I am opposed to the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, does the gentleman from Pennsylvania think that as much as three hours will be required for general debate on this measure?

Mr. KREIDER. I would be very glad to have it cut down.

Mr. GARRETT. That was the representation made to us in the Committee on Rules, and we followed the suggestion offered by the gentlemen who appeared before the committee.

Mr. MONDELL. From inquiries I have made I have some doubt as to whether as much time as that will be desired. I have no disposition to curtail unduly the debate.

Mr. WINGO. I think if the members of the committee are to explain what they know about the bill, really more time will be required.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman thinks that three hours will be required, I have no disposition to curtail it.

Mr. WINGO. I will say that as far as I am concerned five minutes will be sufficient, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] can not intelligently explain this bill and answer the questions that will be asked under an hour and a half. The gentleman from Massachusetts ought to have an hour and a half. No member of the committee would undertake to discuss it under an hour.

Mr. KREIDER. Does the gentleman desire any time to discuss the rule?

Mr. GARRETT. I had a request for time, but there is one statement that ought to be made, if the gentleman will yield me five minutes.

Mr. KREIDER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, inquiry has been made by several gentlemen why the Committee on Rules suggested the amendments to the original resolution as introduced. The resolution that was introduced provided that the time should be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency and by the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN]. It developed before the Committee on Rules that there was opposition in the Committee on Banking and Currency to the bill. Therefore the Committee on Rules, in accordance with its policy—of course, it intended no sort of reflection on the gentlemen who were to control the time under the original proposition, but in accord with its fixed policy—changed the resolution so as to say it should be controlled by those for and those against. That seems to me to be a fair proposition, and I would suggest that if you want to arrange about the control of time in a different manner you do it by unanimous consent now. Does the gentleman from South Carolina want any time?

Mr. STEVENSON. I would like 10 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. This has been debated now, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania has control of the time for an hour. Will the gentleman yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina?

Mr. KREIDER. I will yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that under the provision of time provided the membership of the Banking and Currency Committee on the Democratic side has no representative at all in respect to time. We know that the Chairman of the committee will give us a fair amount of time. I want to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING], who is the only member who opposes the bill, whether he expects to insist upon the entire hour and a half, leaving the balance of the time, an hour and a half, to be divided among the others? We would like to see if we could not all be liberal and divide that up ourselves and agree on this report of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. KING. I would say in reply to the gentleman from South Carolina that since the bill has been reported there have been a number of gentlemen who have come to me for time, consuming probably altogether an hour and a half. Of course the gentleman understands full well that this is a big bill and, as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] has suggested, the time for general debate ought not to be limited to three hours. We ought to have two hours on a side. I do not want to be put in the position of monopolizing time, however, but I am the only member on the committee who has seen fit to oppose this bill, and I am opposing it in good faith, although I may be in error.

Mr. STEVENSON. We understand that. Nobody questions the gentleman's good faith.

Mr. KING. As a matter of fact, it would take the gentleman from South Carolina himself three hours to explain the bill; he could talk intelligently upon it for a longer time than that. I am willing to give some of my time, if I may be permitted to have control of it under the rule, to the gentleman from South Carolina and to several other gentlemen here who have requested time. Would that be all right, if I might have an hour and leave the half hour to be divided among various others who desire to discuss the bill? Would that be satisfactory?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think that would be a fair arrangement. I am sure the gentleman from Illinois is ready to do what is fair. I have no question of his good faith in opposing this measure. I have always found him to act upon the impulses of his heart, and I am satisfied that he is perfectly honest. The bill is an important one, and three hours is certainly a small time in which to debate it. Yet, considering the vast importance of the legislation still to come and the great importance of the measure itself, I am prepared to accede to the proposition to limit it to three hours. There are two conditions confronting us. The first is the exchange condition, the important condition that arises out of the reconstruction period, which is a very important one; and the second is the preparation for the world commerce that the United States should engage in if it proposes to maintain its great place among the nations of the earth.

Mr. Speaker, to give an idea of what institutions of the kind which it is proposed to organize would mean, if we can get them expeditiously, I would say that a man in London or in Liverpool who wants to buy cotton to-day goes to his bank, for instance, and borrows £10,000 sterling. He comes to America or sends his agents here to buy cotton with that money. If he can get the gold and send it over here it would bring him $48,600, but he can not get it. If he has to come over here and draw exchange in pounds, shillings, and pence, as he will have to do, that amount of money will net him in dollars $41,500. If, instead of that, he could go to a bank of the character we propose to establish, or its branch in London, and arrange to put up the same securities there and get his loans in dollars in the home bank in New York, his £10,000 would be worth to him $48,600, and he could buy with that 138,857 pounds of cotton at 35 cents a pound; but if he would have to draw exchange and get only $41,500 for his £10,000, he could buy exactly 20,286 pounds less of cotton. In other words, he loses 40 bales of cotton in the transaction. That is the difference, and it amounts to 6 cents a pound. If we have these institutions so that he could come here and get his money, by putting up the same securities that he puts up in England, he could pay 6 cents a pound more for his cotton than he can under the present arrangement, and on the 11,000,000 bales of cotton in the United States that would mean $330,000,000 to the people of America who market the cotton.

The same thing is true with respect to the wheat market. If he could use the foreign exchange institutions that we propose to build up and could come here and borrow his money and have it in dollars, his money would buy 19,440 bushels of wheat, while if he had to come here and draw exchange he could buy only 16,600 bushels of wheat, fixing the price of the wheat at $2.50 a bushel. In other words, if he could get his money in dollars, he would be able to pay 42 cents more a bushel for wheat and get the same amount of wheat that he gets at $2.50 now, drawing exchange. For that reason the present emergency is one which makes it exceedingly important that these institutions be brought into existence, with all of the possible safeguards thrown around them, in order that the farming interests of the United States, the producer—and the same thing applies to the manufacturer—may have a market, where he can get the full worth of his property and have the competition of the foreign buyer here to buy the goods and the products which he makes for export. For that reason I am in favor of passing this bill as promptly as due consideration for proper legislation makes it possible. [Applause.]

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, is the gentleman not going to allow any more debate on the rule?

Mr. KREIDER. Would the gentleman like to have time? The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] said that he would like to have some time, but there are three hours of general debate on the bill.

Mr. WINGO. Did he speak about the time under the rule?

Mr. KREIDER. I have not consumed all of the time under the rule, but in order to expedite matters, we might as well adopt the rule and then go ahead with the debate on the bill.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, I naturally wanted as much as five minutes anyway on the bill, outside of the five-minute rule.

Mr. KREIDER. Does the gentleman desire to speak on the amendment or on the bill?

Mr. WINGO. On the rule.

Mr. KREIDER. I would suggest that we adopt the committee amendments, and then I will yield before I move the previous question.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, there is no use for me to talk about it after action is taken.

Mr. KREIDER. Does the gentleman desire to speak on the committee amendments?

Mr. WINGO. I want to speak on the whole proposition involving the rule.

Mr. KREIDER. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the committee amendments to the rule. I do not know I shall have anything else to say during the consideration of this bill. I suggested to the chairman of the committee, and he was kind enough to say to me that he would be very glad——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can discuss the whole subject.

Mr. WINGO. I know that; but you could not discuss this subject in five minutes or three hours. The chairman was very kind, and asked if I wanted some time. I recognized that under the proposition of having three hours that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] is certainly entitled to an hour and a half or an hour, and it would not be possible, so I gladly waived whatever rights I might have. I want to suggest this to the House: That it is unwise to bring in a great measure like this the last day of the week and simply put it through under whip and spur. I measure my words when I say there has not been a single constructive measure equal in importance to this since the passage of the Federal reserve act. It is fraught with great danger and also involves within its terms more possibility of great good than any bill that this House will be called upon to consider during this or next session, in my candid opinion. As the bill came from the Senate I am against it. Not only am I against it because it was loosely drawn so that you could not tell much about it, but I was against it on account of some of its provisions or failure to put certain safeguards in it. I wish I had an hour and a half or two hours to discuss the things which are involved and the possibilities. If the committee amendments are adopted, I shall vote for the bill, but if the committee amendments are not adopted, or if some further amendments are adopted that some gentlemen want, I reserve the right to oppose and vote against the bill. Of course, gentlemen of the House recognize the extraordinary condition that exists in our export trade and export finances. We have got to accept something like this or else we have got to accept the other proposal, and that other proposal is that the foreign Governments guarantee the credits of their merchants and their manufacturers which are to buy raw material in this country, and our Government in turn shall guarantee those credits and our Government issue bonds, or else underwrite the credits. I am against that, and for that reason I realize the necessity of adopting something like this. But I want to warn the House of the danger of it, and to be sure that no amendment shall be put in there which will permit the original proposition to be carried out, and that was not only to control the price of exchanges but to furnish a monopoly to buy the surplus products of this country and dole them out just exactly like the allied purchasing board did during the war. I am against that monopoly in time of peace. I want to build up a competitive system of credits like you have a competitive system in merchandise.

The committee sought to remedy the evil in the bill by putting in a penal clause in one amendment and providing for the restriction of those credits to the business for which they are created—that is, the actual foreign exchange, foreign banking business—and let us keep hands off of trying to control the surplus products, the surplus wheat, and the surplus cotton, and the surplus corn of the United States. That is the reason I suggested that gentlemen can very easily see that this bill is a very important bill, and I regret for one that it is brought in here this late hour upon Saturday afternoon, when there is a bare quorum in the city and less than 75 men upon the floor. It ought to be brought up at the beginning of the week and at least two or three days' general debate allowed, because I predict that even the small number who are here, when they hear the gentleman from New York and others who speak in general debate, they will have questions to ask that will require more than three hours to answer intelligently, and give all of the members of the committee a general outline of the bill before undertaking to consider it under the five-minute rule and finish up the details of the bill. I warn you, gentlemen, it is possible for it to be of great public benefit, but it is also freighted with great danger, and for that reason we ought to consider carefully and deliberately not only the details of the bill but the general framework of the bill. I believe the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House has cured these defects, and if the House will adopt these amendments I shall support the bill; but if it does not, I repeat, I shall not, because it will be too dangerous an institution to build up in this country.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield me one minute?

Mr. CARTER. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I have no doubt but what this bill is very important. I know it is very important, but I do not think the gentleman from Arkansas need be disturbed with regard to it. The provision for general debate is liberal, unusually liberal, and the widest opportunity will be given for discussion and amendment under the five-minute rule—under the rule which has been adopted.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I do.

Mr. WINGO. We had 11 hours on the little camouflaged budget-system bill, and here are three hours' debate allowed on a constructive measure in reference to the foreign export business of the United States.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, well, we have had a great deal of general debate on important and unimportant bills at one time and another, but it does not follow we need to use time unnecessarily.

Mr. KREIDER. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the committee amendments.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the words "The chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency" and insert in lieu thereof "those favoring."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 10, strike out "The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN]" and insert "those opposing the bill."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The question was taken, and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2472, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 2472, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 2472) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I ask for the reading of the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended, be further amended by adding a new section as follows:

"BANKING CORPORATIONS AUTHORIZED TO DO FOREIGN BANKING BUSINESS.

"SEC. 25 (a). Corporations to be organized for the purpose of engaging in international or foreign banking or other financial operations, or in banking or other financial operations in a dependency or insular possession of the United States, either directly or through the agency, ownership, or control of local institutions in foreign countries, or in such dependencies or insular possessions as provided by this section, and to act when required as fiscal agents of the United States, may be formed by any number of natural persons, not less in any case than five.

"Such persons shall enter into articles of association which shall specify in general terms the objects for which the association is formed and may contain any other provisions not inconsistent with law which the association may see fit to adopt for the regulation of its business and the conduct of its affairs.

"Such articles of association shall be signed by all of the persons intending to participate in the organization of the corporation and thereafter shall be forwarded to the Federal Reserve Board and shall be filed and preserved in its office. The persons signing the said articles of association shall, under their hands, make an organization certificate which shall specifically state:

"First. The name assumed by such corporation, which shall be subject to the approval of the Federal Reserve Board.

"Second. The place or places where its operations are to be carried on.

"Third. The place in the United States where its home office is to be located.

"Fourth. The amount of its capital stock and the number of shares into which the same shall be divided.

"Fifth. The names and places of business or residence of the persons executing the certificate and the number of shares to which each has subscribed.

"Sixth. The fact that the certificate is made to enable the persons subscribing the same, and all other persons, firms, companies, and corporations, who or which may thereafter subscribe to or purchase shares of the capital stock of such corporation, to avail themselves of the advantages of this section.

"The persons signing the organization certificate shall duly acknowledge the execution thereof before a judge of some court of record or notary public, who shall certify thereto under the seal of such court or notary, and thereafter the certificate shall be forwarded to the Federal Reserve Board to be filed and preserved in its office. Upon duly making and filing articles of association and an organization certificate, the association shall become and be a body corporate, and as such and in the name designated therein shall have power under such conditions and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe to adopt and use a corporate seal, which may be changed at the pleasure of its board of directors; to have succession for a period of 20 years unless sooner dissolved by an act of Congress or unless its franchises become forfeited by some violation of law; to make contracts; to sue and be sued, complain, and defend in any court of law or equity; to elect or appoint directors, all of whom shall be citizens of the United States; and, by its board of directors, to appoint such officers and employees as may be deemed proper, define their authority and duties, require bonds of them, and fix the penalty thereof; dismiss such officers or employees, or any thereof, at pleasure and appoint others to fill their places; to prescribe, by its board of directors, by-laws not inconsistent with law or with the regulations of the Federal Reserve Board regulating the manner in which its stock shall be transferred, its directors elected or appointed, its officers and employees appointed, its property transferred, and the privileges granted to it by law exercised and enjoyed.

"Each corporation so organized shall have power, under such rules and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe:

"(a) To purchase, sell, discount, and negotiate notes, drafts, checks, bills of exchange, acceptances, including bankers' acceptances, cable transfers, and other evidences of indebtedness; to purchase and sell securities, including the obligations of the United States or of any State thereof; to accept bills or drafts drawn upon it subject to such limitations and restrictions as the Federal Reserve Board may impose; to issue letters of credit; to purchase and sell, exchange, coin and bullion; to borrow and to lend money on real or personal security; to receive deposits; and generally to exercise such powers as are incidental to the powers conferred by this act or as may be usual, in the determination of the Federal Reserve Board, in connection with the transaction of the business of banking or other financial operations in the countries, colonies, dependencies, or possessions in which it shall transact business and not inconsistent with the powers specifically granted herein.

"(b) To establish and maintain for the transaction of its business branches or agencies in foreign countries, their dependencies or colonies, and in the dependencies or insular possessions of the United States, at such places as may be approved by the Federal Reserve Board and under such rules and regulations as it may prescribe; and to establish and maintain such additional branches or agencies as the Federal Reserve Board may from time to time authorize even in countries or dependencies not specified in the original organization certificate.

"(c) With the consent of the Federal Reserve Board to purchase and hold stock or other certificates of ownership in any other corporation organized under the provisions of this section, or under the laws of any foreign country or a colony or dependency thereof, or under the laws of any State, dependency, or insular possession of the United States, but not transacting business in the United States, except such as in the judgment of the Federal Reserve Board may be incidental to its international or foreign business: Provided, however, That no corporation organized hereunder shall invest in any one corporation an amount in excess of 10 per cent of its own capital and surplus, except in a corporation engaged in the business of banking, when 15 per cent of its capital and surplus may be so invested.

"No corporation organized under this section shall carry on any part of its business in the United States except such as, in the judgment of the Federal Reserve Board, shall be incidental to its international or foreign business: And provided further, That except such as is incidental and preliminary to its organization no such corporation shall exercise any of the powers conferred by this section until it has been duly authorized by the Federal Reserve Board to commence business as a corporation organized under the provisions of this section. No corporation organized under this act shall engage in commerce and trade, or deal in commodities or foodstuff, or as a condition of extending credit dictate or attempt to control the buyer or seller in the disposition of commodities, or interfere with the freedom of competition in the sale of commodities.

"No corporation shall be organized under the provisions of this section with a capital stock of less than $2,000,000, one-quarter of which must be paid in before the corporation may be authorized to begin business, and the remainder of the capital stock of such corporation shall be paid in installments of at least 10 per cent on the whole amount to which the corporation shall be limited as frequently as one installment at the end of each succeeding two months from the time of the commencement of its banking operations, until the whole of the capital stock shall be paid in. The capital stock of any such corporation may be increased at any time, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, by a vote of two-thirds of its shareholders or by unanimous consent in writing of the shareholders without a meeting and without a formal vote, and may be reduced in like manner, provided that in no event shall it be less than $2,000,000.

"A majority of the shares of the capital stock of any such corporation shall be held and owned by citizens of the United States, by corporations the controlling interest in which is owned by citizens of the United States, chartered under the laws of the United States or of a State of the United States, or by firms or companies the controlling interest in which is owned by citizens of the United States. The provisions of section 8 of the act approved October 15, 1914, entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' as amended, shall be construed to apply to the directors, other officers, agents, or employees of corporations organized under the provisions of this section.

"Shareholders in any corporation organized under the provisions of this section shall be liable for the contracts, debts, and engagements of such corporations to the extent of double the amount of their stock holdings. No such corporation shall become a member of any Federal reserve bank.

"Should any corporation organized hereunder violate or fail to comply with any of the provisions of the laws of the United States all of its rights, privileges, and franchises derived herefrom may thereby be forfeited. Before any such corporation shall be declared dissolved, or its rights, privileges, and franchises forfeited, any noncompliance with, or violation of such laws shall, however, be determined and adjudged by a court of the United States of competent jurisdiction, in a suit brought for that purpose in the district or territory in which the home office of such corporation is located, which suit shall be brought by the United States at the instance of the Federal Reserve Board or the Attorney General. Upon adjudication of such noncompliance or violation, each director and officer who participated in, or assented to, the illegal act or acts, shall be liable in his personal or individual capacity for all damages which the said corporation shall have sustained in consequence thereof. No dissolution shall take away or impair any remedy against the corporation, its stockholders, or officers for any liability or penalty previously incurred.

"Any such corporation may go into voluntary liquidation and be closed by a vote of its shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock.

"Whenever the Federal Reserve Board shall become satisfied of the insolvency of any such corporation, it may appoint a receiver, who shall take possession of all of the property and assets of the corporation and exercise the same rights, privileges, powers, and authority with respect thereto as are now exercised by receivers of national banks appointed by the Comptroller of the Currency of the United States: Provided, however, That the assets of the corporation subject to the laws of other countries or jurisdictions shall be dealt with in accordance with the terms of such laws.

"Every corporation organized under the provisions of this section shall hold a meeting of its stockholders annually upon a date fixed in its by-laws, such meeting to be held at its home office in the United States. Every such corporation shall keep at its home office books containing the names of all stockholders thereof, and the names and addresses of the members of its board of directors, together with copies of all reports made by it to the Federal Reserve Board. Every such corporation shall make reports to the Federal Reserve Board at such times and in such form as it may require; and shall be subject to examinations whenever deemed necessary by the Federal Reserve Board by examiners appointed by the Federal Reserve Board, the cost of such examinations, including the compensation of the examiners, to be fixed by the Federal Reserve Board and to be paid by the corporation examined."

Every banking corporation authorized to do foreign banking business under the provisions of this section shall, for the purpose of taxation, make reports to the Federal Reserve Board and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at such times and in such form as they may require, including a true report of the names of the actual stockholders of such corporations, and the amount of stock held by each, and all such corporations organized and transacting business under the provisions of this section shall be taxed the same as member banks of the Federal Reserve System.

During the reading of the bill the following occurred:

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I understood the gentleman from Arkansas to ask that the bill be read for amendment.

Mr. WINGO. I insisted on the regular procedure being followed.

The CHAIRMAN. The first reading is in full unless the reading is dispensed with.

Mr. PLATT. I thought the gentleman wanted to cut off general debate and have the bill read for amendment.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman was not listening to what I said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the bill.

Also the following committee amendments were read:

Page 1, line 9, after the word "engaging," insert the word "principally."

Line 10, after the word "other," insert the words "international or foreign."

Page 2, line 6, after the word "required," insert "by the Secretary of the Treasury."

In line 24, after the word "Board," in line 23, insert "but shall include the word 'Federal,' and no other financial corporation hereafter organized under any law other than an act of Congress shall use such word in its name under a penalty of $10 for each day that such word is used in violation of this provision."

Page 4, line 1 after the word "certificate," insert "and after the Federal Reserve Board has approved the same and issued a permit to begin business."

Lines 5 and 6, strike out the words "under such conditions and regulations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe."

In line 9, after the word "dissolved," insert "by the act of the shareholders owning two-thirds of the stock."

On page 5, line 5, after the word "negotiate," in line 4, insert the words "with or without its indorsement or guaranty."

Line 8, after the word "sell," insert the words "with or without its indorsement or guaranty."

Line 10, page 5, after the word "thereof," insert the words "but not including shares of stock in any corporation except as herein provided."

Line 14, after the word "sell," strike out "exchage, coin, and bullion" and insert the words "coin, bullion, and exchange."

Line 16, page 5, strike out the words "on real or personal security" and insert "to issue debentures, bonds, and promissory notes under such limitations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, but in no event having liabilities outstanding thereon at any one time exceeding ten times its capital stock and surplus; to receive deposits outside of the United States and to receive only such deposits within the United States as may be incidental to or for the purpose of carrying out transactions in foreign countries or dependencies or insular possessions of the United States."

Page 6, line 7, after the word "herein," insert "whenever a corporation organized under this section receives deposits in the United States it shall carry reserves in such amounts as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, but in no event less than 5 per cent of its deposits."

Line 13, after the word "business," insert the words "agencies in the United States and."

Line 18, page 6, after the word "prescribe," strike out the following words: "and to establish and maintain such additional branches or agencies as the Federal Reserve Board may from time to time authorize even in," and insert in line 20 the word "including."

Page 7, line 3, after the word "States," insert the words: "engaged principally in the business of banking or in any other financial operation of the kinds authorized by this section."

Page 7, line 9, after the word "business," insert: "Provided, however," and after the word "That" insert the words "except with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board."

Page 7, line 12, after the words "surplus," strike out the words: "except in a corporation engaged in the business of banking when 15 per cent of its capital and surplus may be so invested," and insert: "Provided further, That no corporation organized hereunder shall purchase, own, or hold stock or certificates of ownership in any other corporation organized hereunder or under the laws of any State which is in substantial competition therewith, or which holds stock or certificates or ownership in corporations which are in substantial competition with the purchasing corporation."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] asks unanimous consent that the further reading of the committee amendments be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it is true that there are only about 20 or 25 men present, but even the ones here present ought to know something about the bill. I think doubtless this important measure will be considered and agreed upon and passed by about 25 men, and those men, outside of the committee, ought to know what is in the bill. Therefore I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, on line 21, page 7: "Nothing contained herein shall prevent corporations organized hereunder from purchasing and holding stock in any corporation where such purchase shall be necessary to prevent a loss upon a debt previously contracted in good faith; and stock so purchased or acquired in corporations organized under this section shall within six months from such purchase be sold or disposed of at public or private sale unless the time to so dispose of same is extended by the Federal Reserve Board."

In line 14, page 8, strike out:

"No corporation organized under this act shall engage in commerce and trade, or deal in commodities or foodstuff, or as a condition of extending credit, dictate or attempt to control the buyer or seller in the disposition of commodities, or interfere with the freedom of competition in the sale of commodities."

And insert:

"No corporation organized under this section shall engage in commerce or trade in commodities except as specifically provided in this section, nor shall they control or fix or attempt to control or fix the price of any such commodities. The charter of any corporation violating this provision shall be subject to forfeiture in the manner hereinafter provided in this section. It shall be unlawful for any director, officer, agent, or employee of any such corporation to use or to conspire to use the credit, the funds, or the power of the corporation to fix or control the price of any such commodities, and any such person violating this provision shall be liable to a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court."

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I want to move, if it is in order, that the further reading of the amendments be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman can not take such action except by unanimous consent.

Mr. PLATT. I ask unanimous consent again.

Mr. KING. I object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. PLATT. The amendments will have to be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 16, after the word "its," strike out the word "banking" and insert the word "business"; in line 22, after the word "vote," insert "but any such increase of capital shall be fully paid in within 90 days after such approval"; on page 10, line 1, after the figures "$2,000,000," insert "No corporation, except as herein provided, shall, during the time it shall continue its operations, withdraw or permit to be withdrawn, either in the form of dividends or otherwise, any portion of its capital. Any national banking association may invest in the stock of any corporation organized under the provisions of this section, but the aggregate amount of stock held in all corporations engaged in business of the kind described in this section and in section 25 of the Federal reserve act as amended shall not exceed 10 per cent of the subscribing bank's capital and surplus"; in line 13, after the word "shall," insert "at all times"; in line 22, after the word "amended," insert "by the acts of May 15, 1916, and September 7, 1916"; in line 25 insert, after the word "section," "Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall (1) prohibit any director or other officer, agent, or employee of any member bank who has procured the approval of the Federal Reserve Board from serving at the same time as a director or other officer, agent, or employee of any corporation organized under the provisions of this section in whose capital stock such member bank shall have invested; or (2) prohibit any director or other officer, agent, or employee of any corporation organized under the provisions of this section, who has procured the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, from serving at the same time as a director or other officer, agent, or employee of any other corporation in whose capital stock such first-mentioned corporation shall have invested under the provisions of this section.

"No member of the Federal Reserve Board shall be an officer or director of any corporation organized under the provisions of this section, or of any corporation engaged in similar business organized under the laws of any State, nor hold stock in any such corporation, and before entering upon his duties as a member of the Federal Reserve Board he shall certify under oath to the Secretary of the Treasury that he has complied with this requirement."

On page 11, lines 24 and 25, strike out the words "contracts, debts, and engagements of such corporations to the extent of."

On page 12, line 1, strike out "double the amount of their stockholdings" and insert "amount of their unpaid stock subscriptions."

In line 4, page 12, after the word "hereunder," insert "violate or."

In line 5, after the words "provisions of," insert the words "the laws of the United States," and insert "this section."

On page 13, line 21, after the word "to," strike out the words "examinations whenever" and insert "examination once a year and such other times as may be."

On page 14, line 2, after the word "examined," insert: "The directors of any corporation organized under the provisions of this section may, semiannually, declare a dividend of so much of the net profits of the corporation as they shall judge expedient; but each corporation shall, before the declaration of a dividend, carry one-tenth of its net profits of the preceding half year to its surplus fund until the same shall amount to 20 per cent of its capital stock."

In line 10 strike out:

"Every banking corporation authorized to do foreign banking business under the provisions of this section shall, for the purpose of taxation, make reports to the Federal Reserve Board and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue at such times and in such form as they may require, including a true report of the names of the actual stockholders of such corporations; and the amount of stock held by each and all such corporations organized and transacting business under the provisions of this section shall be taxed the same as member banks of the Federal Reserve System."

And insert:

"Any corporation organized under the provisions of this section shall be subject to tax by the State within which its home office is located in the same manner and to the same extent as other corporations organized under the laws of that State which are transacting a similar character of business. The shares of stock in such corporation shall also be subject to tax as the personal property of the owners or holders thereof in the same manner and to the same extent as the shares of stock in similar State corporations: Provided, however, That such shares owned by nonresidents of any State shall be taxed only in the city or town in which the corporation's home office is located, and not elsewhere.

"Any corporation organized under the provisions of this section may at any time within the two years next previous to the date of the expiration of its corporate existence, by a vote of the shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock, apply to the Federal Reserve Board for its approval to extend the period of its corporate existence for a term of not more than 20 years, and upon certified approval of the Federal Reserve Board such corporation shall have its corporate existence for such extended period unless sooner dissolved by the act of the shareholders owning two-thirds of its stock, or by an act of Congress, or unless its franchise becomes forfeited by some violation of law.

"Any bank or banking institution incorporated by special law of any State or of the United States or organized under the general laws of any State or of the United States and having an unimpaired capital sufficient to entitle it to become a corporation under the provisions of this section may, by the vote of the shareholders owning not less than two-thirds of the capital stock of such bank or banking association, with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board, be converted into a Federal corporation of the kind authorized by this section with any name approved by the Federal Reserve Board: Provided, however, That said conversion shall not be in contravention of the State law. In such case the articles of association and organization certificate may be executed by a majority of the directors of the bank or banking institution, and the certificate shall declare that the owners of at least two-thirds of the capital stock have authorized the directors to make such certificate and to change or convert the bank or banking institution into a Federal corporation. A majority of the directors, after executing the articles of association and the organization certificate, shall have power to execute all other papers and to do whatever may be required to make its organization perfect and complete as a Federal corporation. The shares of any such corporation may continue to be for the same amount each as they were before the conversion, and the directors may continue to be directors of the corporation until others are elected or appointed in accordance with the provisions of this section. When the Federal Reserve Board has given to such corporation a certificate that the provisions of this section have been complied with, such corporation and all its stockholders, officers, and employees shall have the same powers and privileges and shall be subject to the same duties, liabilities, and regulations, in all respects, as shall have been prescribed by this section for corporations originally organized hereunder.

"Every officer, director, clerk, employee, or agent of any corporation organized under this section who embezzles, abstracts, or willfully misapplies any of the moneys, funds, credits, securities, evidences of indebtedness or assets of any character of such corporation; or who, without authority from the directors, issues or puts forth any certificate of deposit, draws any order or bill of exchange, makes any acceptance, assigns any note, bond, debenture, draft, bill of exchange, mortgage, judgment, or decree; or who makes any false entry in any book, report, or statement of such corporation with intent, in either case, to injure or defraud such corporation or any other company, body politic or corporate, or any individual person, or to deceive any officer of such corporation, the Federal Reserve Board, or any agent or examiner appointed to examine the affairs of any such corporation; and every receiver of any such corporation and every clerk or employee of such receiver who shall embezzle, abstract, or willfully misapply or wrongfully convert to his own use any moneys, funds, credits, or assets of any character which may come into his possession or under his control in the execution of his trust or the performance of the duties of his employment; and every such receiver or clerk or employee of such receiver who shall, with intent to injure or defraud any person, body politic or corporate, or to deceive or mislead the Federal Reserve Board, or any agent or examiner appointed to examine the affairs of such receiver, shall make any false entry in any book, report, or record of any matter connected with the duties of such receiver; and every person who with like intent aids or abets any officer, director, clerk, employee, or agent of any corporation organized under this section, or receiver or clerk or employee of such receiver as aforesaid in any violation of this section shall upon conviction thereof be imprisoned for not less than 2 years nor more than 10 years, and may also be fined not more than $5,000, in the discretion of the court."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT], the chairman of the committee, is recognized for 1 hour and 30 minutes.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee refuses to rise.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. The Chair having stated that "evidently there is no quorum" here, I take it that the committee can not do anything except to get a quorum or rise.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Mr. BLANTON. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. The Chair has stated that we are without a quorum. I submit that you can not ask for tellers under the rules of the House and the rules governing the committee until you get a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order. The regular order is the calling of the roll.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Doughton	Howard	Mead
Andrews, Md.	Drane	Hulings	Merritt
Anthony	Dyer	Hull, Iowa	Miller
Ashbrook	Eagan	Husted	Minahan, N. J.
Babka	Eagle	Hutchinson	Montague
Bacharach	Ellsworth	Ireland	Moon
Barkley	Emerson	Jefferis	Mooney
Bell	Esch	Johnson, Ky.	Moore, Ohio
Benson	Fairfield	Johnson, S. Dak.	Moore, Pa.
Blackmon	Ferris	Johnston, N. Y.	Moore, Va.
Bland, Ind.	Fess	Jones, Pa.	Moores, Ind.
Boies	Fields	Kearns	Morin
Booher	Fisher	Kelley, Mich.	Mudd
Bowers	Flood	Kendall	Murphy
Briggs	Fordney	Kennedy, Iowa	Newton, Minn.
Britten	Frear	Kennedy, R. I.	Newton, Mo.
Brooks, Pa.	Freeman	Kettner	Nicholls, S. C.
Browning	Fuller, Mass.	Kiess	Nichols, Mich.
Brumbaugh	Gallivan	Kincheloe	Nolan
Burke	Gandy	Kinkaid	O'Connell
Butler	Ganly	Kreider	Ogden
Byrnes, S. C.	Gard	LaGuardia	Oldfield
Caldwell	Garland	Langley	Olney
Campbell, Kans.	Garner	Lazaro	Paige
Cannon	Garrett	Lea, Calif.	Parker
Cantrill	Goldfogle	Lehlbach	Pell
Carew	Good	Lesher	Peters
Carter	Goodall	Little	Purnell
Casey	Goodykoontz	Luce	Radcliffe
Clark, Fla.	Gould	Lufkin	Rainey, H. T.
Clark, Mo.	Graham, Pa.	McClintic	Rainey, J. W.
Cleary	Graham, Ill.	McCulloch	Ramsey
Cole	Greene, Mass.	McDuffie	Rayburn
Cooper	Greene, Vt.	McGlennon	Reber
Copley	Griest	McKenzie	Reed, N. Y.
Costello	Hamill	McKeown	Riordan
Crago	Hamilton	McKinley	Robsion, Ky.
Crowther	Hardy, Tex.	McKinley	Rodenberg
Cullen	Harrison	McLane	Rogers
Dallinger	Haskell	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Rouse
Davey	Hawley	MacCrate	Rowan
Dempsey	Heflin	Magee	Rucker
Dewalt	Hersman	Maher	Sanders, Ind.
Dickinson, Iowa	Hicks	Mann, Ill.	Sanders, La.
Donovan	Hill	Martin	Sanders, N. Y.
Dooling	Holland	Mason	Sanford
Doremus	Houghton	Mays	Saunders, Va.
Scott	Snell	Thomas	Webster
Scully	Snyder	Tincher	Welling
Sells	Steele	Tinkham	Whaley
Sherwood	Stephens, Miss.	Treadway	Wilson, Ill.
Shreve	Stiness	Vare	Wilson, Pa.
Siegel	Sullivan	Venable	Winslow
Sims	Sumners, Tex.	Voigt	Wise
Sinclair	Sweet	Walsh	Woods, Va.
Sisson	Swope	Walters	Woodyard
Slemp	Tague	Ward	Yates
Smith, Ill.	Taylor, Ark.	Watson, Pa.	Zihlman
Smith, N. Y.	Taylor, Colo.	Webb

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill S. 2472, found itself without a quorum, and he caused the roll to be called, whereupon 199 Members answered to their names, and he presented a list of the absentees.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. LONERGAN, by unanimous consent, was given leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, the bill before us might afford excellent opportunity for an elaborate address on foreign trade and its value to the people of this great producing Nation if there were time for it, but the thing to bear in mind is that this bill, S. 2472, is primarily a bill to bring order out of chaos, to provide a sound, substantial, national system of financing foreign trade. It is a new national banking act for banks specializing in foreign trade, and I think will come to be regarded some day as a very important piece of constructive legislation, not unworthy to be mentioned along with the national banking act itself or the Federal reserve act, or the Federal farm-loan act.

Banking in America, as everybody knows, was carried on long before the national banking act was passed and also long before any of the States had general acts for the incorporation of banks, but without regulation, often by persons who had no real grasp upon the fundamental principles of sound banking and sometimes by reckless and unscrupulous speculators. The development of the national banking system brought order out of chaos to a considerable extent, and the development of the Federal Reserve System completed the process, unifying and binding together the members of the system throughout the length and breadth of our great country.

The financing of our foreign trade, however, is something that the comparatively small, individual, independent banks, scattered all over the country, could not undertake except to a very limited degree. It was left mostly to the great London banking houses and to a few strong private banking houses in New York, firms like J. P. Morgan & Co.; Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; Lazard Freres; Heidelbach, Ickelheimer & Co., and some firms with long German names. These had foreign branches, subsidiaries, and connections through which much of their foreign business was done.

The Federal reserve act, in section 25, first gave our national banks a chance to compete with something approaching even terms by providing that banks with a capital and surplus of a million dollars or more might establish foreign branches. When a bank establishes a branch, however, it risks all of its capital in that branch—the branch is a part of itself—and very few banks felt strong enough to do this.

The National City Bank of New York, which is the greatest banking institution in the country, with a combined capital, surplus, and undivided profits of something like $87,000,000, and deposits of about three-quarters of a billion dollars, was the only national bank to go into foreign-branch business extensively. With its subsidiary, the International Banking Corporation, it now has more than 70 branches all over the world, many of them in Central and South America. It renders good service, but it was felt that the business ought not to be the monopoly of one institution, so the amendment of September 7, 1916, was passed giving banks with a capital and surplus of a million or more an opportunity to cooperate in establishing foreign branches, in securing control of foreign banks, or in establishing banking institutions principally engaged in financing foreign trade.

Eight foreign trade banks have been established with some help from national-bank subscriptions and are operating under State charters and under regulations of the Federal Reserve Board, to which they are required to agree as a condition precedent to receiving national-bank subscriptions. Their names will be found in the report accompanying this bill. Two of them were incorporated under the laws of Connecticut, four under the laws of New York, and two under the laws of Massachusetts. Some of these State charters give very broad powers, much broader than we have given in this bill, and with few restrictions.

These institutions, which are doing a banking business, though not a deposit business, may obtain Federal charters under this act if they so desire, and it is hoped that most of them will.

But there is another class of institutions which the bill is perhaps more especially designed to cover. Some of them are already in existence or beginning to organize, and to them the term "export finance corporation" has been given. An amendment to the Federal reserve act approved September 17, 1919, gives national banks the right to subscribe not to exceed 5 per cent of their capital and surplus to these institutions. They are expected to do a long-time credit business, taking such securities as bonds and mortgages and issuing their own debentures against them. It is very desirable that these institutions should be national, under Federal charters, and under such control of the Federal Reserve Board as can not be fully obtained by agreement if they should be compelled to operate under State charters. It seems to me that little argument should be needed to convince anyone of the wisdom of this course.

Now, it is not necessary for me to go into an elaborate discussion of the advantages of foreign trade. Everybody who has given the matter any consideration knows that it is absolutely necessary to our own prosperity that we should hold as much of it as we can. The record export figures of July, almost a billion dollars—$918,300,000—we can not hope to maintain, nor is it desirable that we should. The balance of trade in our favor amounted to $4,129,200,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30 last. Such one-sided conditions can not continue indefinitely, and are due to the dire necessities of Europe during the last part of the war and the first months of reconstruction. Already there has been a considerable decrease in exports and a considerable increase in imports, but we do not want to have our exports to Europe slump disastrously to ourselves and to our customers if we can devise a good means for payment. They have good assets and securities, and under the system proposed we are to take these securities, under approval of the Federal Reserve Board, as collateral for payment.

Everybody who glances at the financial columns of the newspapers knows of the unprecedented decline in foreign exchange, due to the fact that Europe owes to the United States vast sums of money and has not the gold or the goods to pay immediately or in the near future. Sterling exchange in August went down to 4.12½, par being 4.8665. On yesterday, according to this morning's papers, demand sterling was 4.16½. French exchange was 8.83 and Italian 10.82. At this rate, in order to make a payment in dollars in the United States, an Italian would have to pay more than twice as many lire as in normal times; or, in other words, an American dollar is worth more than two dollars in Italian currency. Such conditions are a tremendous hindrance to exports, and if continued long would put a stop to most of our European export trade, while greatly encouraging imports.

We do not claim that this bill will work miracles, but it will give an opportunity for American exporters, manufacturers, farmers, cattle raisers, and bankers to make the best use of their capital under Federal supervision in extending credits to our customers, so as to hold as much as can be held of our trade.

The only alternative is to continue the subsidizing of exports through direct Government loans or credits, which all will agree, I think, should not be continued.

I may add, Mr. Chairman, that we have greatly amended this bill, and I think have much improved it. As I have said, it is practically a new national banking act for a new class of financial institutions. We have put in a good many restrictions taken from or suggested by the national bank act, or from the Federal reserve act. We have provided that there shall be no monopolies of credit or commodities, and we have safeguarded the investors. There is a provision that debentures shall not be issued for more than ten times the amount of the capital; that dividends shall not be paid until one-tenth of the earnings of the company is carried to the surplus up to the time that the surplus equals 20 per cent of the capital.

These things may not all be necessary, because all the way through the bill it is tied up with the Federal Reserve Board. Nearly everything authorized is on the approval of the Federal Reserve Board. These export financial corporations have to begin a business new to this country, and from experience build up, and it was necessary that the bill should be drawn with broad general powers given to them. I am sure that we all have confidence in the Federal Reserve Board and believe that it will handle things right, but it seemed best to the committee to provide plainly certain restrictions and safeguards.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. I will.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. What provisions are there in the bill for inspection?

Mr. PLATT. Very complete provisions for inspection and examination. Examinations are to be not less often than once a year. The bill as originally written provided for inspection, but we put in a time——

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Certainly.

Mr. TILSON. Along the line just mentioned by the gentleman from North Dakota, who is to do the inspecting?

Mr. PLATT. The Federal Reserve Board has examiners——

Mr. TILSON. The same personnel would be on this examination that is on the Federal Reserve Board; that is, the Federal reserve bank will do this inspecting.

Mr. PLATT. Probably, although it may develop special examiners. The Federal Board has examiners to examine institutions under State charters, and some of them have grown to be rather large. The Mercantile Bank of the Americas began with 6 men in their employ and now has, I am told, 2,000, with branches and subsidiaries in several different countries. It is not as big as the National City Bank of New York, but it is considerable of an institution.

Mr. TILSON. What provision is there for paying the inspectors? Is it the same as under the Federal reserve law?

Mr. PLATT. They assess the cost of inspection on the banks themselves.

Mr. HAUGEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Does the act authorize the establishment of branch banks in the United States?

Mr. PLATT. Not in the United States.

Mr. HAUGEN. What is meant by this language in line 12, page 6?

To establish and maintain for the transaction of its business agencies in the United States and branches or agencies in foreign countries.

Mr. PLATT. Yes; agencies in the United States; but agencies are not the same thing as branches.

Mr. HAUGEN. Would not this authorize the establishment of branch banks—would you adopt the Canadian system?

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no. But these are not banks of deposit. They will not compete with our National and State banks. I am not quite sure that we ought not to allow them to have branches in the United States, but we have not. The Mercantile Bank of the Americas, which I have already mentioned, has a branch in New Orleans. They could perhaps do business better through branches than through agencies.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the gentleman thinks that under this bill branch banks could not be established in the United State

Mr. PLATT. No; they are allowed branches in foreign countries.

Mr. HAUGEN. Then this does not authorize branch banks here?

Mr. PLATT. It does not in the United States, but does, as I say, in other countries. The gentleman must remember, too, that these institutions are not banks in the ordinary sense.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. I wish the gentleman would illustrate in practice just how this financial institution would conduct its operations. We are told that £10,000 sterling in American gold is worth $48,600, but under the present rate of exchange it is only worth in the United States, in round numbers, $41,000. In other words, a man will get $7,000 in trade less for his credit on exchange in the United States than if he were in England. How does this financial institution propose to operate?

Mr. PLATT. Does the gentleman mean how these institutions propose to remedy that situation?

Mr. DUNBAR. Yes.

Mr. PLATT. Of course, the gentleman understands why that situation occurs.

Mr. DUNBAR. I understand why it occurs.

Mr. PLATT. It is because England owes us a tremendous amount of money, and it is impossible to buy bills in England from men who owe money in the United States sufficient to offset money drawn in the United States against English banks, on account of goods exported from the United States, there being so much more exported from the United States all of the time, so much more going out to England and other countries. I do not think this bill will wholly remedy that situation. I do not think any power on earth can do that. What I expect this bill to do is to furnish an orderly, well-regulated, carefully supervised system which will provide for taking in payment for our goods such collateral as foreign nations may have, that is good

That is to say, collateral for payment in the future, perhaps bonds and perhaps mortgages. For instance, a manufacturing company may send over a certain amount of machinery to a foreign factory or a railroad, and take its bonds in payment, indirectly through these export finance institutions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has used 15 minutes.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman another question. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Very well. That is only one of the operations it is expected to do.

Mr. DUNBAR. If a cotton man were to sell cotton to an English dealer to the extent of 10,000 pounds sterling, he would receive in all likelihood foreign securities in payment for that cotton.

Mr. PLATT. Oh, no. That is just exactly why we are putting a banking institution in between. He might have to, if he did it directly. Such big concerns as the Baldwin Locomotive Co., for instance, can take the bonds and finance them over here to a certain extent, but the average cotton grower, or the average small manufacturer can not do that, and the bank comes in between. The export bank takes these foreign securities and either sells them directly, or perhaps issues its debentures, and then gives the cotton grower the money.

Mr. DUNBAR. The cotton grower sells the cotton to the value of £10,000, and from whom does he get his money?

Mr. PLATT. From the bank to be established under this bill.

Mr. DUNBAR. Then what does the bank get?

Mr. PLATT. Long-term credit securities of some kind or other from the other side of the ocean.

Mr. DUNBAR. The bank takes securities from the purchaser?

Mr. PLATT. Yes; directly or indirectly.

Mr. DUNBAR. And who is to regulate, who is to say that these securities are valuable—the directors of the institution?

Mr. PLATT. In the first place, the bankers who handle that sort of security are pretty wise men themselves, and in the second place, the Federal Reserve Board has to approve the securities.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PLATT. Yes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Under the bill, a reserve of 5 per cent is required, and on page 5 I find that it may issue promissory notes to the extent of ten times its capital and surplus. Does the gentleman consider that conservative banking?

Mr. PLATT. Oh, yes; because these are not deposit banks. They are not to take deposits at all, excepting as incidental to their foreign trade.

Mr. HAUGEN. Any bank that issues a promissory note for ten times the capital stock would not be considered conservative.

Mr. PLATT. The Federal farm-loan banks issue bonds to the extent of twenty times their capital stock.

Mr. HAUGEN. But they take real estate security.

Mr. PLATT. That is not always as good as some other securities.

Mr. HAUGEN. Real estate security has been stricken from the bill.

Mr. PLATT. Yes; we struck out the specification "on real or personal security."

Mr. HAUGEN. Cats and dogs, or anything else.

Mr. PLATT. The fact that that is stricken out does not mean that they can not take real estate security. They require security.

Mr. HAUGEN. Ten times the amount of the capital stock and surplus is a large amount. With $100,000 of capital the bank may then issue a promissory note for a million dollars.

Mr. PLATT. That is, of course, the extreme limit. There was no limit originally. We have said the Federal Reserve Board should fix the limit, but not to exceed this. The Federal farm-loan banks issue securities up to twenty times their capital, and some of these banks already in existence, I think, take acceptances to something like twelve times their capital.

Mr. HAUGEN. Would the gentleman accept an amendment providing specifically that no branch banks shall be permitted under this act?

Mr. PLATT. I could not accept an amendment of that kind, because there is no authorization for branch banks in there. We have provided that branches shall only be established in foreign countries, and I do not see any reason to put anything else in.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the bill provides for agencies in the United States.

Mr. PLATT. If the gentleman is going to have people in Iowa properly served by these banks, they would want an agency there.

Mr. HAUGEN. But we do not want any branch in Iowa, as they have in Canada.

Mr. PLATT. That is not a branch, and these are not banks. If the gentleman does not want his people properly served by a local agency they would have to go to New York every time they did business. The gentleman might strike that out, but that is exactly the effect of it. These financial institutions either are to have agencies or else his people will have to go to Wall Street every time they do business with them.

Mr. HAUGEN. They can appoint agents without providing it in the law. I see no necessity for this unless it means branch banks.

Mr. PLATT. It does not mean branch banks. It says agencies.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, I would like to ask the gentleman from Iowa how they would do a thing unless specifically authorized by the act giving them the charter?

Mr. HAUGEN. But you do not have to provide in the charter for appointing an agent in any State or Territory; it is not necessary to state that.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to use any time?

Mr. PLATT. How much time did I use?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty minutes.

Mr. WINGO. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman, if the gentleman from New York will indulge me.

Mr. PLATT. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will give me his attention just a moment, there are reasons which the chairman of the committee recognized why a great many Members have already left the House, and it is 4 o'clock, so will the gentleman permit me to suggest that the gentleman move that the committee rise? Has the gentleman another gentleman to whom he desires to yield?

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. As I understand, the Chairman has charge of the time; that I do not have charge of the hour and a half of time?

The CHAIRMAN. It is only by courtesy that that arrangement has been made by the Chair, which the Chair will carry out.

Mr. PLATT. I will reserve the remainder of my time. I think the opposition ought to open up at least to-night.

Mr. WINGO. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. KING] on the committee ought to control the opposing time. And while I am as much opposed to the Senate bill as he is, yet with the House committee amendments I am in favor of the bill, and I understand the gentleman from Illinois is opposed to it even with the amendments. I think the gentleman from Illinois would be entitled to control the opposition time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WINGO. I was going to suggest to the gentleman from New York that——

Mr. PLATT. I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the pending bill, Senate bill 2472, is a bill to amend the banking act, approved September 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, by inserting a new section to be known as section 25 (a). This bill has had lengthy hearings in the House Committee on Banking and Currency, and has been very thoroughly worked over by both the subcommittee and the general Committee on Banking and Currency. Indeed, the bill as passed by the Senate September 9, 1919, has been so amended by the House committee that it is now virtually a redrafted bill that is presented to the House for its consideration and approval. These various changes and amendments I believe have made for a decided improvement in the bill, and for the safeguarding, in a large way, the interest and welfare of our domestic as well as our foreign and international interests, industrially, economically, and commercially.

Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the preceding speakers that the bill before us is a very important measure and should have our most serious consideration, and I wish to say at the very outset, Mr. Chairman, that unless the committee amendments are favorably reported upon I shall be compelled to vote against the measure.

It is now generally admitted that one of the best and far-reaching pieces of legislation placed on the statute books of America in the interest of sound banking and improved commerce was the so-called Federal reserve act. [Applause.] During the awful strain of the World War it proved a real bulwark of strength and furnished sufficient elasticity to our currency and credits to enable us to finance with safety and ease our tremendous war expenditures and to aid in a large way the needs of our allies across the sea, to whom we have extended a credit of approximately $10,000,000,000. Indeed, our great Federal Reserve Bank System made it possible for us to keep the channels of commerce and industry free and open and to finance our enormous financial obligations, and there is now no question that the Federal Reserve Banking System became a determining factor in winning speedily a glorious victory in the great World War. Without this great financial bulwark a panic in our financial system would probably have been inevitable during this awful strain and upheaval, but with the system under the guidance of a sane and efficient Federal Reserve Board we believe that panics are a thing of the past. But it is evident that the Federal reserve act has to do with domestic banking business largely, if not entirely, and has practically no general provision for successful foreign banking, particularly in the line of long-time credits, which under the present condition of the world is absolutely essential to our foreign export trade.

During the past year, as a direct consequence of the Great War, the foreign exchange and the international trade have been in a very demoralized condition, and we need immediately legislation to help stabilize our international exchange and to facilitate our growing foreign trade. In the hearings we observe, from a statement by Senator OWEN, that the foreign exchange rates have been so demoralized that the American dollar has risen as it relates to the British pound sterling until it is worth about $1.12; in France to $1.33; and in Italy to somewhere about $1.70. This condition is even worse in Germany, where the exchange rate August 27 was 5 cents, or a discount from mint par of about 79 per cent. It is easy to see that with such an exchange situation existing our foreign trade is being materially impaired, and we find from authentic sources that France and England are already heavy buyers in the markets of Germany because of the exchange rates which exist there—money going much farther in the markets of Germany than it does in our markets in the purchase of manufactured articles and necessities of life.

The position of our farmers, manufacturers, merchants, and labor is indeed in a very serious situation. We must facilitate production in order to keep the wheels of industry going. Our foreign trade must be maintained. Our export of surplus goods must be facilitated to the extent that our manufacturers, merchants, farmers, and cattle growers can find a ready market for their products and thus help capital, labor, farmer, and manufacturer to increase our production and make possible a ready market in foreign countries for our surplus stuff. That our foreign exchange market is in a bad condition is easily seen from the following statement under date of August 27:

	Unit value.	Exchange rate July 30.	Exchange rate Aug. 27.	Discount from mint par.
				Per cent.
Germany	$0.2382	$0.06250	$0.0500	79.0
Italy	.1930	.1168	.1043	45.9
Belgium	.1930	.1345	.1199	37.8
France	.1930	.1370	.1250	35.2
England	4.8665	4.3650	4.2400	12.8
Switzerland	.1930	.1785	.1766	8.5
Holland	.4020	.3775	.3712	7.6
Denmark	.2680	.2225	.2175	18.8
Norway	.2680	.2375	.2310	13.8
Sweden	.2680	.2475	.2440	9.0
Spain	.1930	.1930	.1910	1.0
Argentina	.9648	.9615	.9625	¼
Japan	.4885	.5089	.5100	[1]4.2

[1] Premium.

This, then, proves to us this very important fact, that there must be something done to stabilize the foreign exchange market of to-day and to facilitate proper extension of credits if we are to be enabled to carry out our industrial affairs in a way that shall be to the best interest of our great and growing Nation.

In spite of this situation foreign buyers continue to draw heavily upon the surplus products of America, and immense prosperity must come to this Nation ultimately as a consequence of a new wealth represented by foreign trade. The Government records show that for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the American people exported $4,129,000,000 worth more of merchandise than they imported. It is said that never before has the world been so heavily indebted to us on foreign trade. It is further stated that the foreign commerce of this country, meaning both imports and exports, for the last fiscal year was the largest ever recorded in any 12-month period, being the enormous total of $10,320,617,889. These figures prove, without any question, that the United States has become, temporarily at least, the great supply for foreign nations, and our best economists and financial experts agree that if we make the best use of our foreign trade opportunities as now presented the United States will exert in the coming decades a commanding influence in the world trade.

We hear on every hand statements that we should restrict our output in order that we may lower the high prices which prevail. To me it is clear that the high cost of living is a consequence of economic conditions existing throughout the entire world, as well as in our own country, and that prices are largely a result of supply and demand, and that those who counsel restriction of our output are in the final analysis real enemies of labor, capital, farmer, manufacturer, and consumer. Restricting our output, whether it be in coal, iron, or the necessary foodstuffs of life, will ultimately spell economic and commercial failure. What we need to-day is an accumulation of capital brought about by saving, curtailment of extravagance and waste, and increased production. The real situation for America, therefore, is to provide such banking instrumentalities as will make it possible to finance our factories and mines and industries; to increase our production and facilitate the selling of these products in the markets of the world. Already Germany, our great enemy during the World War, is gradually becoming our great competitor in the economic field of endeavor. She is reestablishing her factories and her industrial institutions. Her labor has increased the labor day from 8 to 12 hours in order to facilitate larger production. This is a great lesson to America. In America labor and capital must cooperate and the Government must extend every facility possible for a harmonious growth of all the institutions of our industrial and commercial life.

Unless some such instrumentality for the aid of our foreign commerce is instituted as is provided for in this bill we shall fail utterly as a great Nation to develop and hold our rightful place in the great international commerce of the world. It has been a common comment that we have been handicapped in the past in the foreign markets of the world in competition with countries like England and Germany because of their superior foreign-exchange banking corporations and foreign financial institutions established in all the principal foreign countries of the world and very largely to our disadvantage in the South American countries.

Indeed, in the last 20 years it has been common report in the editorials of our large dailies and of our commercial and banking journals that we in some way should occupy commercially the foreign markets of the world in the same strong and forceful way that the countries of England and Germany have done.

The Great War has wrought a tremendous change in the world situation. The world markets are now open to us. They are beckoning to us to enter and possess the trade and turn to our permanent commercial advantage the tremendous opportunities that now knock at our very doors. Our best students of commerce and industry believe that we should accept the world-wide opportunity offered and make possible a larger, a better, and a more prosperous American industry and life. Let us not permit the opportunity to pass. We must not hesitate. We must not permit the dominance of world commerce and world banking to again go back to England or Germany or France, which it certainly will in time, unless we grasp the opportunities and possibilities now offered to us. This bill, as is stated in line 8, page 1, is to permit corporations to be organized for the purpose of engaging principally in international or foreign banking or other international or foreign financial operations, the purpose of which is to provide a means by which foreign credits can be marketed in a safe and legitimate way with the investors of America. For decades we have been bemoaning the fact that we have not had the proper foreign-credit bank institutions. This is the time to institute them. The American people are already entering fields of speculation and credit schemes that are very doubtful, and such a legitimate and safe investment as this bill provides would be a healthy channel for investment for a large number of our people, and I am sure that if our people understood that the institutions proposed by this bill are safeguarded by regulations under the Federal Reserve Board and with the restrictions that are placed in this bill, making these investments safe and sound, there will be no difficulty in finding individual and corporate capital sufficient to make these institutions instruments of tremendous power in facilitating foreign commercial developments.

Read our commercial journals and our daily editorials of to-day, and you will find that speculation is rife in this country in very doubtful schemes and enterprises. This bill would provide at least one investment in well-regulated and well-safeguarded institutions.

If you will look through the hearings carefully you will observe that our best banking experts, together with Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, express the opinion that our Federal Government should not extend further credits to foreign countries or assume any further liability in the expansion of foreign trade. As a country we have extended credits to foreign countries to approximately $10,000,000,000. This should be the limit in the extension of credits by our Government. The further extension of credits must now be assumed by individual and corporate initiative, and this bill is merely to provide a proper instrument through which such initiative by individuals and corporations can properly function to the advantage of the commercial and industrial life of our Nation and to the proper safety of our investing public.

As indicated in the report and hearings on this bill, two classes of corporations can be incorporated under this act. One to engage principally in foreign banking business, such as is already engaged in by eight or more international banking corporations, and the other is to engage principally in investment banking, taking long-time paper, mortgages, and bonds, and issuing against such securities their own debentures, promissory notes or bonds, under such limitations as the Federal Reserve Board may prescribe, but in no event having liabilities outstanding thereon at any one time exceeding ten times its capital stock and surplus.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. May I have three minutes additional?

Mr. PLATT. I will yield the gentleman three minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for three additional minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. The bill provides that these corporations may receive deposits outside of the United States, but within the United States they shall receive only such deposits as may be incidental to their business, and when so received shall carry such a cash reserve as may be prescribed by the Federal Reserve Board, but in no event shall it be less than 5 per cent of such deposits. This provision is made so that these corporations which are strictly foreign corporations in their operation shall in no way compete with our domestic banking institutions and their business. The two fields are entirely separate and distinct and it is the purpose of the bill to keep the two fields without competition, which might prove ruinous to both our domestic banks and to our foreign banks instituted under this bill.

The committee has labored assiduously to provide against a possible gigantic monopoly in the foreign banking business under this act, so far as domestic competition is concerned, by making the strict provision that except with the approval of the Federal Reserve Board no corporation organized under this act "shall invest in any one corporation an amount in excess of 10 per cent of its own capital and surplus, or shall purchase, own, or hold stock or certificate of ownership in any other corporation organized under this act or under the laws of any State which is in substantial competition therewith, or which holds stock or certificate of ownership in corporations which are in substantial competition with the purchasing corporation."

The bill further provides that no organization under this act shall carry on any part of its business in the United States except such as in the judgment of the Federal Reserve Board shall be incidental to its international or foreign business. To further safeguard the interests of our industrial and commercial life from possible monopoly or combination of powerful commercial interests in the large export commodities, this bill makes a very strenuous provision that no corporation organized under this section shall engage in commerce or trade in commodities except as specifically provided for in this section, "nor shall they control or fix or attempt to fix the price of any such commodities."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. May I have two minutes more?

Mr. PLATT. I yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. It goes even so far as to prohibit by a heavy fine of not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment of not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court, "for any director, officer, agent, or employee to use or to conspire to use the credit, the funds, or the power of the corporation to fix or control the price of any such commodities."

The United States is justly proud of its splendid banking system. Safety to depositors in our banks has been our most earnest endeavor, and so splendidly has this been achieved that bank failures have in the last decade been reduced to a negligible quantity. Our committee has sought to keep intact this splendid record for safety to our depositors in our domestic banks in providing that while national banks may invest in the stock of corporations under this section as provided for under existing banking laws, "the aggregate amount of stock held in all corporations engaged in business of the kind described in this section and in section 25 of the Federal reserve act as amended, shall not exceed 10 per cent of the capital and surplus of the bank subscribing such stock."

Proper safeguards as to embezzlement and misappropriation of funds by officers, agents, and directors have also been provided for in this bill. This bill as drawn and presented for consideration has the unqualified approval of the Federal Reserve Board, and the committee has had the closest possible cooperation of the Federal Reserve Board and their counsel in framing what we believe to be a splendid beginning and foundation in foreign or international banking or in international financial operations. It is an instrumentality needed at this crucial hour in our national and international life. We must provide a proper instrument for our export and international trade and help stabilize, as far as possible, our foreign exchange in order to continue our commercial and industrial life on the highest possible plane of American efficiency.

The corporations under this bill become strictly investment institutions and the instruments of facilitating our growing and expanding commerce and industry. I repeat, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the urgent need of the hour is to conserve capital, curtail waste and extravagance, to enlarge industrial and commercial output, and to increase the efficiency of labor, and to conserve in the highest degree possible the rights equally of the three great economic factors of our Nation's progress and prosperity, viz, capital, labor, and consumer. We must enter the open markets of foreign trade now inviting us to come in or drop behind in the race for success. Decades ago this was not necessary. We are now passing into a different stage of action in the business of world trade, and it is up to us either to meet and vigorously overcome all the difficulties that confront us or else to be surpassed by other nations in the field of foreign commerce and trade. I have confidence to believe we shall meet the issue heroically and with our characteristic American energy and success. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PLATT. Will the gentleman from Illinois use a little time?

Mr. WINGO. I suggest to the chairman that the committee now rise. It is late, and we have but a bare handful of Members here.

Mr. PLATT. I would like to have one speech in opposition before we rise.

Mr. WINGO. That would take 30 minutes or an hour.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know to whom the gentleman is going to yield.

Mr. KING. I think we ought to rise, and I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 2472) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. STRONG of Pennsylvania, for three legislative days, on account of important business.

To Mr. SMITH of Michigan, for 10 days, on account of important business.

ZION NATIONAL PARK.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 425, insist on the House amendments, and to agree to the conference asked for.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 425 and insist on the disagreement to the amendments of the Senate and ask for a conference. The Clerk will report the bill by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 425) to establish the Zion National Park in the State of Utah.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I heard a rumor that the leasing bill has come back from the Senate. Surely, it has not come back?

Mr. SINNOTT. The Senate has asked for a conference on the oil-leasing bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Has the Senate passed the oil-leasing bill?

Mr. SINNOTT. Oh, no; they have disagreed to all the House amendments and ask for a conference.

Mr. BLANTON. It was the bill that originally came from the Senate?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

The SPEAKER appointed the following conferees: Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, and Mr. MAYS.

LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. UPSHAW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD a brief resolution from the wholesale grocers of Atlanta on the Kenyon-Kendrick bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to print in the RECORD the resolution referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, it was the understanding of the House not long ago that we were to keep all this extraneous matter out of the RECORD. Therefore I shall have to object.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that October 31 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 9205. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and prior fiscal years, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 9697. An act to extend the time for the completion of a bridge across Pearl River, between Pearl County, Miss., and Washington Parish, La.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, November 3, 1919, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FOCHT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 197) regulating the height of buildings on certain streets in the District of Columbia, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 435), which said joint resolution and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. HAUGEN, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10311) to further amend section 8 of an act entitled "An act for preventing the manufacture, sale, or transportation of adulterated or misbranded or poisonous or deleterious foods, drugs, medicines, and liquors, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes," approved June 30, 1906, and amended by the act approved March 3, 1913, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 438), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. BEE, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 1827) for the relief of Carolyn Wheeler Kobbe, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 437), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Claims was discharged from the consideration of House Document No. 175, claim of Edward A. Purdy, postmaster at Minneapolis, Minn., for credit on account of loss by burglary, together with report of investigating inspector, and the same was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 10325) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, for the execution of civil work, surplus property pertaining to the Military Establishment; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: A bill (H. R. 10326) to confer further jurisdiction and power upon the Court of Claims to determine and report the interest, title, ownership, and right of possession of the Yankton Tribe of Indians of South Dakota in and to the land known as the Pipestone Reservation; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. MOORE of Virginia: A bill (H. R. 10327) to provide for an investigation and report upon the condition of the Chain Bridge, across the Potomac River, and the preparation of plans for a bridge to take the place thereof should it be deemed necessary; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10328) to amend an act approved May 18, 1916, entitled "An act to provide for the removal of what is known as the Aqueduct Bridge, across the Potomac River, and for the building of a bridge in the place thereof"; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 10329) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CRAMTON: A bill (H. R. 10330) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the Wade J. Morrison Post, No. 181, American Legion, of Mayville, Mich., one Chauchat automatic rifle; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SUMMERS of Washington: A bill (H. H. 10331) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BAER: Resolution (H. Res. 372) urging the President to take charge of the bituminous coal-mining properties throughout the United States; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. UPSHAW: Resolution (H. Res. 373) providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate the present coal strike; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Pennsylvania: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 244) instructing the Civil Service Commission and the Postmaster General to allow soldiers, sailors, and marines advanced standing in appointment as first-class postmasters; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

By Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, relating to the inclusion of Iron Mountain and Harney Range and Harney Peak in the Custer State Park; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. PARK: Memorial from the Legislature of the State of Georgia, favoring legislation whereby the Okefenokee Swamp may be made a national park reservation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON: Memorial of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, urging Congress to appropriate sufficient funds to reimburse certain landowners in the State of South Dakota for damages to land caused by overflow of Lake Andes; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, memorial of the Legislature of the State of South Dakota, favoring legislation forbidding the trading on margins or selling or offering for sale any grain or farm products not in existence at the time of the sale, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 10332) granting an increase of pension to George L. Wells; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10333) granting an increase of pension to Zachariah Allbaugh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRINSON: A bill (H. R. 10334) granting an increase of pension to James B. Waters; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DUNBAR: A bill (H. R. 10335) for the relief of Leo T. Wolford; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FIELDS: A bill (H. R. 10336) granting a pension to Harriet Jordan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HICKEY: A bill (H. R. 10337) granting a pension to Martha Isabella McGinnis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KLECZKA: A bill (H. R. 10338) granting a pension to Charles W. Brush; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANHAM: A bill (H. R. 10339) for the relief of H. C. Mullins, his wife, and minor children; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McPHERSON: A bill (H. R. 10340) granting an increase of pension to William W. Jackson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MERRITT: A bill (H. R. 10341) to authorize the President of the United States to reappoint Seth William Scofield major of Cavalry; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PETERS: A bill (H. R. 10342) granting a pension to Walter G. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. RUCKER: A bill (H. R. 10343) granting an increase of pension to James Braley, alias James Bradley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 10344) granting an increase of pension to Thomas D. Bearden; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 10345) granting a pension to Belle Cannon; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of Ukrainian National Committee of the United States, Wilmington, Del., and certain citizens of Wilmington, Del., of Ukrainian birth, concerning Ukrainian independence; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. BEGG: Petition of Fremont Council 591, Knights of Columbus, Fremont, Ohio, protesting against withdrawal of war activities of Knights of Columbus from military and naval camps; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DOWELL: Petition of sundry citizens of East Peric, Iowa, relative to the supply of sugar; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GRIFFIN: Petition of Bronx Property Owners and Business Men's Association, urging early action on House bill 3285; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. McGLENNON: Petition of Ninetieth Division Association, favoring reasonable amount of universal military training; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the Newark Military Service Rifle Club, indorsing plan to establish the Caldwell rifle ranges as permanent Government training grounds; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. ROWAN: Petition of Foster-Milburn & Co., of Buffalo, N. Y., opposing Senate bill 2904; to the Committee on Agrituture.

Also, petition of Philadelphia Branch, Ukrainian National Committee of the United States, concerning Ukrainian independence; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of George P. Kimmel, Washington, D. C., regarding conditions in the Patent Office; to the Committee on Patents.

Also, petition of B. Harris, of New York, urging support of certain foreign trading zone bills, House bills 3170 and 9778; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of R. Park Love, concerning conditions in the Post Office Department; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Also, petition of Ganss Fur Co. (Inc.) and Gross, Engle & Co., both of New York, opposing House bill 9778; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the joint conference on retirement, civil-service employees of the United States, Washington, D. C., concerning status of House bill 3149; to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

Also, petition of Lithuanian citizens of Newburgh, N. Y., concerning Lithuanian indpendence; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, petition of Illinois Manufacturers' Association, opposing House bill 8572; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Petition of Knights of Columbus of Crookston, Minn., opposing the proposed internationalization of the war-welfare societies; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: Petition of Al-ko Bottling Works, of Knoxville, Tenn., favoring the passage of the Dallinger bill, to govern the exportation of sugar; to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

MONDAY, November 3, 1919.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come reverently into Thy presence and lift our hearts to Thee in the name of the millions of our fellow citizens who believe in prayer, who have seen Thy guiding hand, who have known the answer to their prayers and have sought Thy guidance and blessing upon us in our national life. We pray that Thou wilt hear and answer the prayer of Thy people, continuing Thy grace and blessing to us, leading us in the safe way of national greatness and peace and righteousness and establishing in all the earth the great principles upon which Thou hast established this Nation. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, October 30, 1919, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting a list of useless papers devoid of historic interest on the files of the Interior Department and requesting action looking to their disposition. The communication and accompanying papers will be referrred to the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] the committee on the part of the Senate. The Secretary will notify the House of Representatives thereof.

PROMOTION OF FOREIGN COMMERCE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce in response to a resolution of the 3d ultimo, which will be inserted in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, October 30, 1919.

MY DEAR SIR: Respectfully referring to Senate resolution No. 203, of October 3, 1919, hitherto acknowledged under date of October 7, permit me to advise as follows:

Attached hereto are five exhibits. Exhibit A gives the detail of the personnel of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, which is that service of the Department of Commerce directly engaged in the work of promoting the foreign commerce of the United States. This document gives in detail the names, positions, salaries, and locations of the entire working force of the service.

Exhibit B is a statement showing the plans of the service for utilizing during the present fiscal year the appropriation for promoting commerce, 1919–20. This states the countries in which work is carried on under this appropriation, the commodities being specially studied, and the other features of this particular work. It should be noted that this is entirely separate and distinct from the following items:

Exhibit C states in similar detail to the above the force and work planned under the appropriation for promoting commerce in the Far East, 1919–20.

Exhibit D states in like detail the work planned for the current fiscal year under the appropriation for promoting commerce in South and Central America.

Exhibit E states the way in which the fund of $300,000 appropriated for commercial attachés is being expended in different countries abroad.

These five documents taken together give a picture of the organization and work of this service. They cover fully the request of the Senate for "detailed statements covering the character, amount, and estimated cost to the Government of such work as is now being carried on under" the auspices of this department.

It should be noted, however, that the work thus described in detail, which is actively progressing all over the globe, is not the only strictly commercial work of the Department of Commerce. In two other services it functions directly in support of the commerce of the country. The Bureau of Standards provides that scientific basis for industry which has until recently been lacking as a necessary support for our trade. Prior to the war Germany greatly excelled in this important respect, and Great Britain is now taking steps to provide the same basic necessity for her own manufactures. The Bureau of Standards is, however, the largest and best equipped laboratory of the kind in the world, and its normal operations form a solid substructure for the development of a scientific basis for our industries.

The Bureau of Fisheries also has been actively creating new industries, such as the aquatic leather industry and the industry of dyeing, dressing, and finishing furs, in both of which respects this country is advanced over others by reason of this particular work. The Bureau of Fisheries also gives earnest and intelligent care to the promotion of food-preserving industries through its fishery products laboratory and has been instrumental in creating new industries in this connection which are on an established and profitable basis.

Both the work of the Bureau of Fisheries and that of the Bureau of Standards contribute in their respective spheres directly and efficiently to the development of our foreign commerce.

In response to the request embodied in the resolution to submit "such suggestions and recommendations" as may look "to the closer cooperation and coordination of the various agencies of the Government for effective promotion of the foreign commerce of the United States," I beg respectfully to state as follows:

The basic statute of the United States upon this subject is the organic act of February 14, 1903 (32 Stat., 825), creating the Department of Commerce and Labor. This act provides as follows:

"It shall be the province and duty of said department to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, the mining, manufacturing, shipping, and fishery industries, the labor interests, and the transportation facilities of the United States; and to this end it shall be vested with jurisdiction and control of the departments, bureaus, offices, and branches of the public service hereinafter specified and with such other powers and duties as may be prescribed by law."

So much of the foregoing as relates to labor interests was superseded by the act creating the Department of Labor. The provisions respecting mining and transportation facilities are modified by the respective functions of the Bureau of Mines, of the Department of the Interior, of the Railroad Administration, and of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The same is true as regards shipping through the operations of the Shipping Board. As respects, however, the foreign and domestic commerce, the manufacturing and fishery industries, there has been no modification of the organic act above cited. It remains, indeed, so far as its letter is concerned, quite unrepealed save as respects the labor interests. It is to-day in full force and vigor. There is no other department of the Government broadly charged by law to foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce, etc., of the United States. It is assumed that this law was meant to be taken seriously; that the duties imposed by it upon the Department of Commerce are real duties, and that it should have the authority as well as the responsibility of performing them. It is perhaps not too much to assume that it was the purpose of Congress that the Department of Commerce, within the sphere which is above outlined, should have the same authority and influence that the Treasury Department has in finance, the War and Navy Departments in their respective fields of military effort, the Agriculture Department in the field of agriculture, the Department of State in diplomacy, and, indeed, each of the other executive departments within its nominal scope.

Such, however, is not the case. Other bodies exist who perform in whole or part duties such as those charged by law upon the Department of Commerce. In writing frankly of the actual situation it should be premised that the matter is not discussed in any spirit of complaint, nor is there thought of criticism of persons or of specific bodies. The subject under review is a matter of organization, and the question being discussed is whether our present organization is fitted to cope effectively with the serious commercial problems that face the country.

Any review of the commercial work of the Government must show that the absence of organization is its most conspicuous feature. There is an excess of organizations; too little system. Numerous bodies exist, functioning in the same field or with direct action or reaction therein, each independent, without coordination, without liaison, without the obligation on the part of any of them to inform the others. In short, there exists in our public commercial organization much the same condition that existed in the allied armies before unity of command was secured. It would not be questioned that before that time the commanders of the allied and associated forces were sincere, competent, and devoted men. Each in his own separate sphere was doing his best and trying to support his allies as fully as he could. Just so it is in our Government commercial organization. Different bodies of able and earnest men function separately on commercial subjects at home and abroad, without mutual plan, without frequent consultation, and often in ignorance of what the others are doing.

The War Finance Corporation is given authority to furnish credits to the extent of a billion dollars "in order to promote commerce with foreign nations." The similarity of the language of this appropriation to that of the organic law of the Department of Commerce is notable. The appropriation is made for the express purpose of doing that with which the Department of Commerce is specifically charged by law. There is no doubt this function will be performed well, so far as the law permits, but there is no obligation to coordinate this work with that of the Department of Commerce, although this last is charged by law to "foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce" of the country. The management of the War Finance Corporation has shown marked courtesy to the Department of Commerce, but there is no close cooperation.

The Federal Reserve Board admirably performs a function of vital importance to our commerce and finance. One can only speak of it in terms of approval and admiration, but so far as the Department of Commerce is concerned it functions separately, without obligation of either consultation or of cooperation. It is, however, true that the operations of the Federal Reserve Board lie at the very root of the successful operation of our commerce.

The Interstate Commerce Commission performs functions of high value in our domestic and foreign commercial life, but it performs them as a separate organization. It probably does not occur to the distinguished members of that useful body to either consult or cooperate with the Department of Commerce, or that the latter has any interests or functions in common with it, yet the Interstate Commerce Comission may and does vitally affect the foreign commerce of the country through its rate-making powers. The suggestion would probably be strange to them that they should consult the Department of Commerce before taking action which may control the commerce which the Department of Commerce is especially charged to foster, promote, and develop.

The Shipping Board provides for carrying our commerce to the ends of the earth and, through its officers and representatives abroad, takes an important, if not a vital, part in our commercial activity, but the Department of Commerce is not represented upon the Shipping Board and, except as a matter of courtesy, can not influence or guide it. In some of its foreign offices, particularly in London, the work of the Shipping Board along lines of commercial intelligence parallels that of the Department of Commerce, occupies in considerable degree the same field, and indeed the suggestion has been locally made that the information which the officers of the Department of Commerce in London secure should be turned over to the Shipping Board office there for its use. The supercargoes of the Shipping Board, we are informed by that body, are instructed to gather commercial intelligence in all the ports to which they go. They have in the past communicated this information to the Department of Commerce for its use, but there is no obligation to do so. It has been a courtesy on their part.

The Federal Trade Commission has duties of high importance vitally affecting our domestic and foreign trade, but no representative of the Department of Commerce forms a portion of that body, nor is there existing any obligation for that commission to function in close relation with the Department of Commerce. It will be noted that the Federal Trade Commission is given the supervision over the combinations permitted by law for developing foreign trade. This is a function which falls directly within the organic law of the Department of Commerce.

The International High Commission, of which the Secretary of the Treasury is the ex officio chairman, is a composite body representing the United States and the other American Republics. It has distinctly commercial functions, among them the provision of uniform regulations for commercial travelers, of uniform arrangements for the classification of merchandise, for customs regulations, for consular certificates and invoices, and port charges. It gives special consideration to the protection of patents and trade-marks and deals with the extension of arbitration for adjusting commercial disputes. It is a useful and dignified body, whose work touches closely that of the Department of Commerce. It is in no respect inharmonious, but it is separate. The Department of Commerce has no legal relation to it. A list of its publications is found upon page 59 of the hearings before the Committee on Foreign Affairs, House of Representatives, Sixty-fifth Congress, third session, on the Diplomatic and Consular Service appropriation bill, under date of December 11, 1918. It should be noted, however, that as regards trade-marks the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, of this department, actively operates in the protection of American trade-marks abroad and maintains a special section occupied in no small part in advising and informing American manufacturers on that subject.

The Railroad Administration, through its power to embargo freights, to grant or remove export rates, may at times exercise a controlling power over both our domestic and foreign commerce, but it has under the law no relation to the Department of Commerce and, save a matter of courtesy, does not assume that there is any joint field of endeavor.

The Department of State, for reasons admitted by all to be good and sufficient, maintains foreign trade advisers and a force for the purpose of gathering foreign trade information. The relation between that department, especially through its Consular Service and the foreign-trade advisers, and the Department of Commerce is intimate and cordial. It has been a privilege to express admiration for the fine and fruitful work of the Consular Service. There is a "no man's land" wherein the diplomatic field runs parallel with the commercial and the commercial field touches closely upon the diplomatic. It will probably always be necessary to maintain a species of joint endeavor between the two departments. There is, however, no duplication of work. The commercial results of the work of the officers of the Department of State are made available through the Department of Commerce and are supplemented and completed, not duplicated, by the work of the officers of the Department of Commerce in the foreign field. The Department of State can never be promotive in a commercial sense. The Department of Commerce can never do doplomatic work. The two fields touch, but they do not cross. They are complementary, not antagonistic. There is no legal requirement at the present time calling for cooperation between the two services, but there is a very generous spirit of cooperation and sincere mutual respect and helpfulness.

The Agricultural Department, through several services, assists or supervises large commercial transactions at home and abroad, and does so ably and with advantage to the country.

Again, let it be emphasized that the relations between these various bodies are not frictional, but cordial. The men comprising the various groups are friends. They realize they are working to a common end. I repeat, the question is not one of individuals but one of organization. There can be no clear-cut commercial policy carried out by separate bodies that do not interfunction. Any industrial organization composed as is the commercial organization of the Government would fail, for the seeds of decay are planted in the very separateness of the component parts. It is not urged that these bodies should cease to be or that their functions should be altered. There are separate duties belonging to each, although many of those duties lie in a common field with the Department of Commerce.

It is, however, strongly urged that each and every one of these separate services, except the Departments of State and Agriculture, should be linked formally to that department which alone the law charges with the duty to "foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce" of the country.

Is there sound reason why there should not be a representative of the Department of Commerce upon the War Finance Corporation, upon the Federal Reserve Board, upon the Federal Trade Commission, upon the Shipping Board, upon the Interstate Commerce Commission, upon the International High Commission, or upon the Railroad Administration? If such reason exists, what is it? On the other hand, is it the public purpose and intent that the department charged to "foster, promote, and develop the foreign and domestic commerce" of the country should do it only in part, subject to the kindly and unintentional but nevertheless real competition and control of others charged, indeed, with some different duties but acting within the same commercial area?

Either the Department of Commerce should be so organized as to perform its important function effectively or it should not. If it should not do so, then the organic law dictating its functions should be modified and it should cease to be in name what it is hardly in fact, the Department of Commerce. Or, on the other hand, it should be recognized that it is the focus of commercial organization on the part of the Government and as such these various independent bodies should so be headed up into it that the world of commerce at home and abroad may know there is one center for commerce as there is one for agriculture, as there is one for war, as there is one for the Navy, and not a congeries of unrelated parts which operate, indeed, in personal harmony and peace but without those effective results which can come alone from systematic and unified effort.

Yours, very truly,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD,
Secretary of Commerce.

Hon. THOMAS R. MARSHALL,
President the United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

EXHIBIT A.

Bureau employees:
Washington	177
Foreign service	105
District offices	32
Total	314

Personnel of Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

Country to which assigned and position.	Name.	Date of appointment	Salary.
Great Britain:
Commercial attaché	Vacant		$7,500
Trade commissioner [1]	Brock, H. G	July 1, 1918	4,500
Do	Gary, L. B	Jan. 23, 1919	3,650
Do	Grady, H. F	Feb. 1, 1919	3,650
Do	Page, W. J	Sept. 16, 1919	5,000
Do [1]	Powell, F. W	Feb. 8, 1919	3,650
Clerk to commercial attaché	Oseland, Z. C	Jan. 25, 1918	1,500
Clerk to trade commissioner	Walker, A. M	Mar. 4, 1919	2,000
Do [2]	Park, W. M	Oct. 1, 1919	2,500
France:
Commercial attaché	Snow, C. D	July 1, 1919	7,500
Trade commissioner [2]	Adams, H. W	Oct. 1, 1919	4,000
Do	Butler, J. F	Mar. 27, 1919	3,650
Clerk to commercial attaché [2]	Hunt, L. W	Aug. 11, 1919	1,500
Clerk to trade commissioner [3]	Breckheimer, P. J	Feb. 18, 1919	2,000
Do [2]	Masuret, E. A	Sept. 2, 1919	2,000
Do	Sweetser, H. A	Dec. 16, 1918	2,500
Japan:
Commercial attaché	Abbott, J. F	Jan. 11, 1919	6,000
Trade commissioner	Weimer, J. G	July 1, 1919	4,500
Clerk to commercial attaché	Long, C. V	Jan. 25, 1919	1,500
Denmark:
Commercial attaché	Anderson, N. L	July 1, 1919	6,500
Trade commissioner	Kluth, T. O	Jan. 27, 1919	3,650
Clerk to commercial attaché	Vacant		1,500
Clerk to trade commissioner	do		2,000
Brazil:
Commercial attaché	Philippi, J. E	Aug. 15, 1918	7,000
Assistant trade commissioner	Connell, R. M	Sept. 1, 1919	2,500
Clerk to commercial attaché	Vacant		1,500
Spain:
Commercial attaché	Jones, C. L	Jan. 17, 1919	6,500
Trade commissioner	Strachan, W. M	Jan. 16, 1919	3,650
Do	Vacant		3,650
Clerk to commercial attaché	Cron, L. L	July 1, 1919	1,500
Clerk to trade commissioner	Googe, W. D	Jan. 27, 1919	2,250
Do	Vacant		2,000
The Hague:
Commercial attaché	Edwards, P. L	Jan. 1, 1918	5,000
Trade commissioner [1]	Redfield, A. H	Jan. 17, 1919	3,000
Clerk to commercial attaché	Vacant		1,500
Clerk to trade commissioner	Vander Laan, J. W	Feb. 1, 1919	2,000
Mexico:
Commercial attaché	Feeley, E. F	July 7, 1919	6,000
Clerk to commercial attaché	McIntyre, F. P	July 26, 1919	1,500
Russia:
Commercial attaché [4]	Huntington, W. C	May 1, 1916	5,000
Clerk to commercial attaché [4]	Fitzpatrick, J. R	Aug. 28, 1919	1,500
Trade commissioner	Vacant		4,500
Clerk to trade commissioner	do		2,000
China:
Commercial attaché	Arnold, J. H	Dec. 30, 1914	8,000
Trade commissioner [4]	Batchelder, C. C	Aug. 25, 1919	5,475
Do	Meeds, L. W	June 16, 1919	4,000
Clerk to commercial attaché	Lee, C. F	June 1, 1917	1,500
Clerk to trade commissioner	Dormady, F. P	Sept. 10, 1919	2,250
Do	Smith, R. R	July 21, 1919	2,000
Argentina:
Commercial attaché	Klein, Julius	May 1, 1919	7,000
Trade commissioner [4]	Brady, G. S	Sept. 9, 1919	3,650
Assistant trade commissioner	Noll, R. H	July 11, 1919	2,500
Clerk to commercial attaché	Vacant		1,500
Italy:
Commercial attaché	Dennis, A. P	Jan. 2, 1919	6,000
Trade commissioner [1]	Chiesa, M. J	Jan. 25, 1919	3,650
Do	MacLean, H. C	Feb. 1, 1919	3,650
Clerk to commercial attaché	Vacant		1,500
Clerk to trade commissioner	Hudson, R. G	Mar. 5, 1919	2,000
Do	Osborne, A. A	Feb. 1, 1919	2,500
Belgium:
Trade commissioner [1]	Collines, H. T	Feb. 3, 1919	4,380
Do	Herring, C. E	June 16, 1918	4,000
Clerk to trade commissioner	Prosser, W. L	Feb. 3, 1919	2,000
Czechoslovakia:
Trade commissioner	Geringer, V. A	Mar. 28, 1919	4,000
Clerk to trade commissioner	Jalovec, Louis	Apr. 16, 1919	2,000
Switzerland:
Trade commissioner [2]	Groves, H. L	Sept. 6, 1919	4,000
Clerk to trade commissioner	Vacant		2,000
Roumania: Clerk to trade commissioner [4]	Lane, W. E	Feb. 4, 1919	2,250
Poland:
Trade commissioner [2]	Van Norman, L. E	Oct. 1, 1919	5,000
Clerk to trade commissioner	Vacant		2,000
Norway: Clerk to trade commissioner [1]	Anda, Magnus	Feb. 6, 1919	2,000
Australia:
Trade commissioner	Ferrin, A. W	Jan. 1, 1919	4,500
Clerk to trade commissioner	Vacant		1,800
Turkey:
Trade commissioner	Mears, E. G	Feb. 1, 1919	4,500
Clerk to trade commissioner	Huse, H. R	Feb. 21, 1919	2,250
Austria:
Trade commissioner [2]	Upson, W. F	Sept. 29, 1919	4,500
Clerk to trade commissioner	Vacant		2,000
Peru:
Trade commissioner [2]	Jackson, Carlton	Sept. 8, 1919	3,650
Clerk to trade commissioner	Vacant		2,000

[1] On duty in United States finishing reports.
[2] Making preparations in United States for departure to post of duty.
[3] Temporary, pending arrival of successor.
[4] In United States preparing for departure to post of duty.

Personnel of Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce—Continued.

Territory and position.	Investigation.	Name.	Date of appointment.	Salary.
Latin America:
Trade commissioner	General commercial conditions, Colombia and Venezuela.	Bell, P. L	Sept. 23, 1918	$3,650
Do [1]	Furniture markets.	Everley, H. E	Mar. 12, 1917	3,650
Do [1]	Construction materials.	Ewing, W. W	July 20, 1916	3,650
Do [1]	Textiles	Garry, Louis	Dec. 16, 1918	3,650
Do [1]	Jewelry and silverware.	Rosenthal, S. W	June 11, 1917	3,650
Do	General commercial conditions, Peru and Bolivia.	Schurz, W. L	Feb. 1, 1919	3,650
Do [2]	Factory equipment.	Smith, P. S	Sept. 8, 1919	5,000
South Africa: Trade commissioner.	General commercial conditions.	Lundquist, R. A	Aug. 15, 1916	3,650
Europe:
Trade commissioner [1]	Lumber markets.	Brown, N. C	Apr. 29, 1917	3,650
Do [1]	do	Oxholm, A. H	Oct. 28, 1916	3,650
Do [1]	do	Simmons, R. E	Apr. 27, 1917	3,650
Do [1]	General commercial conditions.	Wells, L. C	Mar. 17, 1919	3,650
Do [1]	Banking opportunities.	Young, A. A	Jan. 18, 1919	3,650
Do	Electrical markets.	Wood, C. P	Feb. 3, 1919	4,250
Do	General commercial conditions.	Cutler, B. S	July 14, 1919	6,000
Do	Mining	DeKalb, C	Mar. 1, 1919	4,500
Do	Leather	Hertz, Norman	Mar. 4, 1919	3,650
United States:
Trade commissioner	Commercial conditions.	Harris, Garrard	Aug. 29, 1919	3,650
Do	Transportation facilities.	Hooker, G. E	July 10, 1919	4,000
Expert	Stowage of ship cargoes.	Taylor, T. R	Sept. 2, 1919	3,000
Trade commissioner	Foreign trade complaints.	Meese, N. S	Sept. 20, 1919	1,400
Clerk to trade commissioner.	do	Cabot, H. V	do	1,200
Far East:
Trade commissioner	Mineral resources	Clements, J. M	Mar. 5, 1917	5,475
Do [2]	Advertising methods.	Sanger, J. W	Oct. 1, 1919	4,015
Do	General commercial conditions, East Indian and Straits Settlements.	Fowler, J. A	Nov. 23, 1918	3,650
Do	Industrial machinery.	Rastall, W. H	Oct. 30, 1918	5,475
Do [2]	Industrial development of Japan.	Rutter, F. R	Oct. 1, 1919	4,000
Do	Ports and transportation facilities.	Whitham, P. P	Feb. 14, 1917	5,475

[1] On duty in United States finishing reports.
[2] In United States preparing for departure to post of duty.

Division or office and position.	Name.	Date of appointment.	Salary.
WASHINGTON OFFICE.
Director:
Director of bureau	Kennedy, P. B	Aug. 1, 1919	$6,000
Private secretary	Vacant		1,800
Stenographer	Steele, P. W	Apr. 2, 1917	1,400
Messenger	Johnson, C. N	Oct. 11, 1907
First assistant director:
First assistant director	MacElwee, R. S	Feb. 1, 1919	3,500
Stenographer	Challice, A. M	Feb. 17, 1919	1,200
Second assistant director:
Second assistant director	Vacant		3,000
Stenographer	Steward, Elma	Mar. 7, 1917	1,400
Chief clerk:
Chief clerk	Eckhardt, N	Aug. 5, 1898	2,250
Assistant chief clerk	Dotterer, H	Oct. 5, 1914	2,000
Stenographer	Towles, E. A	Mar. 1, 1915	1,400
Clerk	Smith, G. W	Aug. 15, 1907	1,400
Stenographer	Solomon, G. F	Nov. 19, 1917	1,200
Messenger	Coleman, Henry	Oct. 2, 1886	840
Assistant messenger	Shaw, Maudie	May 14, 1918	720
Do	Page, W. J	Mar. 25, 1918	720
Messenger boy	Parkinson, L. J	Dec. 31, 1918	420
Auditing section—
Chief of section	Haun, H. W	Nov. 15, 1911	2,300
Clerk	Fehr, Jules	Oct. 5, 1914	1,600

Personnel of Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce—Continued.

Division or office and position.	Name.	Date of appointment.	Salary.
WASHINGTON OFFICE—continued.
Chief clerk—Continued.
Auditing section—Continued.
Clerk	Johnson, C. C	July 19, 1911	$1,500
Do	Guinn, P. S	Nov. 20, 1916	1,400
Do	Jones, Mac	Nov. 4, 1918	1,200
Stenographer	De Roche, L. M	Nov. 16, 1917	1,200
Clerk	Eastman, M. B	July 22, 1918	1,000
Files section—
Clerk in charge	Smith, W. F	Jan. 17, 1916	1,800
Clerk	Worthington, G	July 9, 1917	1,200
Do	Hughes, Ruth	Dec. 1, 1917	1,200
Do	Hallan, H. J	Aug. 1, 1917	1,200
Do	Masi, J. W	Nov. 4, 1916	1,200
Do	Smith, Helen	Aug. 20, 1918	1,200
Do	Williams, M. S	May 1, 1919	1,000
Distribution section—
Clerk in charge	Naghten, W. A	Mar. 20, 1907	1,800
Clerk	Toomey, V. R	Mar. 19, 1917	1,400
Do	Kidwell, L. T	Dec. 7, 1914	1,200
Do	Corlew, H. J	Jan. 21, 1918	1,200
Do	Entwisle, M. K	Sept. 25, 1918	900
Do	Skorup, Joseph	June 2, 1919	900
Do	DeBirny, A. W	Sept. 15, 1919	900
Supplies and printing—
Clerk in charge	Chadwick, A. S	Dec. 8, 1909	1,600
Clerk	Dillon, R. E	Jan. 2, 1919	1,200
Stenographer	Flehr, Etteline	May 1, 1918	1,200
Assistant messenger	Griffin, F. T	Jan. 7, 1919	720
Mails—
Clerk in charge	Howard, F. F	July 16, 1881	1,400
Clerk	Wallace, S. W	Aug. 1, 1915	1,000
Assistant messenger	Soders, N. W	June 10, 1919	720
Latin American:
Chief of division	McQueen, C. A	Sept. 6, 1918	2,500
Assistant chief of division	Blalock, S. H	Aug. 16, 1919	2,000
Translator	Hole, M. C	Sept. 1, 1909	1,800
Do	Warren, R. J	Nov. 22, 1917	1,400
Clerk	Starbird, A. A	Mar. 20, 1917	1,400
Do	Kirk, Mary	Dec. 16, 1918	1,400
Do	Frost, B. M	Dec. 15, 1917	1,400
Translator	Phoebus, M. A	Nov. 14, 1917	1,400
Clerk	Butterworth, R	Mar. 1, 1919	1,300
Stenographer	Montz, V. A	Oct. 16, 1917	1,200
Clerk	Thompson, M. C	Mar. 19, 1919	1,200
Do	Gaines, E. O	Mar. 1, 1919	1,200
Do	Bennett, J. L	Apr. 8, 1918	1,200
Far Eastern:
Chief of division	Eldridge, F. R	Aug. 6, 1918	2,500
Assistant chief of division	Pendergast, R. P	Aug. 26, 1919	2,000
Stenographer	McKelvey, A. E	Jan. 21, 1918	1,400
Do	Beery, Mary	Oct. 21, 1919	1,200
Do	Pugh, M. A	Oct. 17, 1919	1,200
Clerk	Pauly, E. A	Dec. 10, 1918	1,200
Do	Nunn, J. H	July 1, 1919	1,200
Do	Rice, R. K	July 17, 1919	900
Do	Bodmer, M	Aug. 4, 1919	900
District offices:
Chief of division	Vacant
Stenographer	Faulkner, Ora	Mar. 19, 1917	1,400
Russian:
Expert	Baievsky, B. M	Mar. 27, 1919	2,000
Translator	Grodzicka, S	Mar. 1, 1919	1,400
Stenographer	Nelson, M. H	Dec. 20, 1918	1,200
Foreign Investigations:
Chief of division	Butler, H. D	Apr. 4, 1919	2,500
Assistant chief of division	Breyere, E. J	Oct. 5, 1914	1,800
Clerk	Fortier, J. A	June 9, 1919	1,200
Stenographer	Freeman, E. H	Jan. 6, 1919	1,000
Do	Walton, V. H	Dec. 2, 1918	900
Messenger boy	Trathen, James	Oct. 20, 1919	420
Commercial Attaché:
Chief of division	Stevenson, P. J	Nov. 25, 1913	2,500
Assistant chief of division	Miller, W. L	Feb. 4, 1919	1,400
Stenographer	Murray, H. D	Apr. 1, 1918	1,200
Do	Goehring, R. E	Mar. 17, 1919	1,000
Foreign Tariffs:
Chief of division	Domeratzky, L	July 13, 1905	2,500
Assistant chief of division	Moles, O. C	Apr. 13, 1915	2,000
Stenographer	Fricker, M. H	Nov. 6, 1911	1,600
Translator	Kendrick, E. M	Jan. 13, 1919	1,400
Do	Wakefield, R. P	July 9, 1917	1,400
Stenographer	Gontzler, K. I	Feb. 17, 1919	1,000
Research:
Chief of division	Schmeckebier, L. E.	May 24, 1917	2,500
Assistant chief of division	Robertson, J. A	May 11, 1918	2,500
Do	Whitney, Ed	Aug. 4, 1899	2,250
Commercial economist	Kral, J. J	July 20, 1911	2,750
Expert in commerce and finance	Towles, J. K	Jan. 2, 1919	2,000
Research clerk	Hoare, H. M	Feb. 23, 1912	1,800
Translator	Lamore, B. H	Jan. 18, 1918	1,800
Do	Bowars, Blanche	Aug. 1, 1918	1,400
Research clerk	Staples, C. L	Jan. 7, 1918	1,400
Clerk	Batman, M. T	Nov. 21, 1918	1,200
Translator	Marlowe, A. R	July 27, 1918	1,200
Clerk	Weems, W. O	Sept. 1, 1918	1,200
Stenographer	Smith, Sarah	Dec. 19, 1918	1,200
Clerk	Swift, A. H	Nov. 5, 1918	1,000
Laborer	Bradley, E	Sept. 12, 1912	660
Trade Information:
Chief of division	Brasel, R. H	Nov. 5, 1903	2,500
Assistant chief of division	Croghan, P. J	Aug. 20, 1914	1,800
Correspondence clerk	Goldberg, B	Feb. 25, 1915	1,600
Do	Mallory, W. L	May 5, 1919	1,400

Personnel of Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce—Continued.

Division or office and position.	Name.	Date of appointment.	Salary.
WASHINGTON OFFICE—continued.
Trade Information—Continued.
Clerk	Moore, L. M	Jan. 22, 1913	$1,400
Do	Gruber, H. W	Apr. 7, 1919	1,200
Do	Hughes, L. A	Dec. 1, 1917	1,200
Stenographer	Lyddane, M. M	Nov. 16, 1917	1,200
Do	Chappel, A. M	July 17, 1917	1,200
Do	Rochford, J. S	Dec. 16, 1918	1,000
Do	Gardner, R	Jan. 1, 1919	1,000
Do	Gardner, L. G	....do	1,000
Do	MacFarland, Alice	Nov. 18, 1918	1,000
Clerk	Lanigan, R. A	July 1, 1918	1,000
Do	Fuller, W. S	Feb. 7, 1905	1,000
Do	Bryant, J. L	Dec. 17, 1918	900
Do	Carolee Speake	July 21, 1919	900
Do	Swain, A. M	Aug. 27, 1919	900
Statistical:
Chief of division	Hohn, John	Feb. 25, 1901	2,500
Do	Asmuth, Walter	Aug. 1, 1902	2,500
Clerk	Sleppy, E. W	Mar. 21, 1891	1,800
Do	Thrall, J. G	Apr. 10, 1901	1,800
Do	Daniel, J. W	Oct. 2, 1885	1,800
Do	Wheeler, C. E	Aug. 20, 1910	1,800
Do	Cohen, M. H	Aug. 16, 1903	1,800
Do	Scott, Winfield	Jan. 9, 1901	1,800
Do	Ingram, Beryl	July 22, 1910	1,600
Do	Jeffrey, J. H	Oct. 19, 1905	1,600
Do	Ludwig, E. F	Oct. 6, 1902	1,600
Do	Grist, B. A	July 10, 1907	1,600
Do	Daly, P. M	Aug. 15, 1904	1,600
Do	Black, M. E	July 20, 1914	1,600
Do	McDuffie, J. A	Sept. 17, 1884	1,600
Do	Eddingfield, W. T	Aug. 17, 1903	1,500
Do	Dent, T. M	June 1, 1909	1,400
Do	Litchfield, F. W	Oct. 11, 1905	1,400
Do	Welch, B. T	Jan. 6, 1874	1,400
Do	Young, E. R	Jan. 9, 1895	1,400
Do	Watson, J. W	Apr. 3, 1918	1,400
Do	Scott, W. H	Sept. 12, 1904	1,200
Do	O'Connor, John	Apr. 23, 1917	1,200
Do	McRae, V. E	Aug. 1, 1918	1,200
Do	Schmeckel, T	Sept. 23, 1918	1,200
Do	Thomson, G. H	Jan. 16, 1880	1,200
Do	Du Bois, A. W	Sept. 27, 1914	1,200
Do	Rice, E. J	Nov. 7, 1918	1,200
Do	Mann, E. A	Dec. 31, 1918	1,200
Stenographer	Duffy, F. E	Aug. 29, 1918	1,000
Clerk	Fowler, L. H	Mar. 27, 1918	1,000
Do	Hiner, I. M	Oct. 28, 1918	1,000
Do	Turner, Jettie	Aug. 6, 1919	900
Do	Batcheller, E. L	Sept. 15, 1919	900
Editorial:
Chief of division	Hopkins, O. P	Apr. 18, 1911	2,500
Editorial assistant	Evans, Griffith	Sept. 21, 1909	2,000
Expert editor	Collier, J. H	July 16, 1916	2,000
Editor	Peirce, F. L	Mar. 22, 1916	1,800
Do	Hopkins, I	Nov. 3, 1913	1,800
Do	Cain, M. D	July 7, 1902	1,800
Clerk	Lillie, J. H	Oct. 21, 1907	1,600
Editor	Gunn, Miriam	July 14, 1917	1,400
Do	Kavanaugh, K	June 25, 1918	1,400
Do	Piper, D. E	Feb. 1, 1919	1,400
Clerk	Greenfield, Cora	July 15, 1918	1,200
Do	Strocker, A. W	Aug. 16, 1916	1,200
Do	Myers, Ruth	Oct. 9, 1918	1,200
Editor	Darlington, L. C	Apr. 17, 1919	1,200
Do	Collins, J. B	Jan. 16, 1919	1,000
Do	Bowers, E. C	Apr. 2, 1919	1,000
Clerk	Blakeney, A. E	June 20, 1918	1,000
Do	Ash, W. O	Oct. 3, 1919	900

District offices in United States and position.	Name.	Date of appointment.	Salary.
New York:
District office manager	Clark, A. R	Feb. 1, 1919	$4,000
Commercial agent	Barnaud, A. J	May 15, 1919	2,500
Do	Zwickel, E. M	Dec. 16, 1919	1,600
Do	Bauer, G. F	May 28, 1919	1,400
Clerk	Hutchinson, A. E	Aug. 21, 1916	1,400
Do	Bennett, F. D	Nov. 19, 1917	1,400
Do	Marcus, J	May 8, 1919	1,400
Do	Schwing, C. A	July 20, 1916	1,400
Do	Turner, H. L	Apr. 22, 1919	1,000
Do	Friedland, R	July 2, 1917	1,000
Do	Meyer, I. M	Jan. 20, 1919	1,000
Do	Galvin, F. E	Feb. 5, 1919	1,000
Messenger boy	Schwenger, E. W	Jan. 21, 1918	900
Boston:
District office manager	Fuller, T. J. D., jr	Mar. 8, 1919	3,000
Clerk	Donohue, M. C	Mar. 12, 1918	1,200
Do	Greene, F. A	Oct. 16, 1917	1,200
Do	Duffy, M. A	May 1, 1918	1,000
Chicago:
District office manager	Stancill, R. L	June 1, 1919	3,000
Commercial agent	Kunning, P. W	Feb. 3, 1919	1,400
Clerk	Lydon, T. A	Nov. 19, 1918	1,000
Do	Worsley, A. R	Oct. 16, 1918	1,000
Seattle:
District office manager	Vacant		3,000
Clerk	Seeley, H. D	Feb. 11, 1918	1,200
Do	Ayers, L	Jan. 18, 1919	1,000

Personnel of Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce—Continued.

District offices in United States and position.	Name.	Date of appointment.	Salary.
San Francisco:
District office manager	Babbitt, E. G.	Apr. 13, 1915	$3,000
Clerk	de Navarro, C.	Feb. 1, 1919	1,200
Do	Costello, M.	Apr. 7, 1919	1,200
St. Louis:
District office manager	Gaukel, T. L.	Feb. 1, 1919	2,000
Clerk	Hartnett, J. M.	July 22, 1918	1,200
New Orleans:
District office manager	Thompson, E. W.	Oct. 1, 1919	3,000
Clerk	Husson, H. C.	Mar. 1, 1918	1,200
Do	Dieck, A.	May 6, 1919	1,000

EXHIBIT B.

Activities being conducted and those contemplated by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce under the appropriation for promoting commerce, Department of Commerce, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920:

ESTIMATED COST FOR YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1920.

General commercial studies:
England	$9,650
Italy	2,250
Netherlands	5,750
Norway	3,050
France	2,750
Switzerland	7,475
Maintaining trade commissioners:
Australasia	9,700
Belgium	16,700
Czechoslovakia	11,450
Denmark	8,900
France	16,175
Italy	11,400
Poland	9,775
Roumania	2,850
Spain	13,400
The Levant	11,700
United Kingdom	17,350
Austria	8,850
India	7,600
Germany	6,200
South Russia	7,100
Commodity investigation:
Agricultural implements, France	1,280
Banking and currency, Spain	2,325
Electrical goods, Italy	1,550
Electrical goods, Spain	1,000
Industrial machinery, France	3,500
Industrial machinery, Italy	1,150
Leather and raw stock	7,500
Lumber markets and industry	5,885
Machine tools	1,000
Mineral resources, Spain	4,850
Transportation and inland waterways	5,850
Promoting interest in foreign trade in the Southern States	5,000
Investigation and adjusting commercial complaints	2,500
Shipping investigation	35
Special investigation	5,000
Electrical goods	8,600
Report on shipping	1,250
Industrial machinery	3,000
District office service:
New York	22,250
Boston	7,200
Chicago	7,000
St. Louis	4,650
Seattle	5,100
San Francisco	6,100
New Orleans	5,850
Miscellaneous:
Temporary travel and other special service	9,000
Contingent expenses	6,500
Total appropriation	325,000

EXHIBIT C.

Activities being conducted and those contemplated by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce under the appropriation for pro- 1920:

ESTIMATED COST FOR YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1920.

General commercial studies:
Shanghai	$11,000
Peking	9,000
Dutch East Indies	7,700
Tokyo	8,000
Commodity investigations:
Advertising methods	$7,000
Industrial machinery	6,000
Mineral resources	9,300
Ports and transportation	12,800
Miscellaneous:
Administration and office force in Washington	20,000
Contingent expenses	4,000
Temporary travel and other special services	2,500
Reserved for contingencies	2,700
Total appropriation	100,000

EXHIBIT D.

Activities being conducted and those contemplated by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce under the appropriation for promoting commerce, South and Central America, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920:

ESTIMATED COST FOR YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1920.

General commercial studies:
Argentina	$9,115
Brazil	4,750
Colombia and Venezuela	7,500
Paraguay and Bolivia	7,500
West Indies	3,500
Peru	8,265
Commodity investigations:
Advertising methods	1,500
Construction materials	3,325
Factory equipment	2,600
Furniture markets	2,600
Jewelry markets	3,000
Leather and raw stock	6,250
Textiles	3,500
Banking and finance	3,125
Miscellaneous:
Administration and office force in Washington	20,000
Temporary travel and other special services	3,000
Contingent expenses	3,000
Reserve for contingencies	2,270
Total appropriation	100,000

EXHIBIT E.

Activities being conducted and those contemplated by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce under the appropriation for commercial attachés, Department of Commerce, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920:

ESTIMATED COST FOR YEAR ENDING JUNE 30, 1920.

Foreign field stations:
The Hague, Netherlands	$10,300
Buenos Aires, Argentina	12,200
Copenhagen, Denmark	11,700
London, England	11,900
Madrid, Spain	11,950
Mexico City, Mexico	10,450
Paris, France	11,650
Peking, China	14,800
Petrograd, Russia (provisionally)	11,100
Rio de Janeiro, Brazil	11,250
Rome, Italy	11,750
Santiago de Chile, Chile (provisionally)	10,000
Tokyo, Japan	9,200
Lima, Peru	8,200
Miscellaneous:
Contingent expenses	6,000
Temporary travel and other special services	2,550
Total appropriation	165,000

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Director General of Railroads in response to a resolution of the 3d ultimo, which will be inserted in the RECORD.

The communication is as follows:

UNITED STATES RAILROAD ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, October 31, 1919.

DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge receipt of resolution of the Senate of the United States (S. 203), dated October 3, 1919, requesting certain information in regard to the activities of the United States Railroad Administration in connection with the foreign commerce of the United States.

The Railroad Administration has endeavored to assist in the restoration of the movement of foreign traffic by the application of reasonable rates, rules, and regulations, such as are consistent with present conditions. To assist in determining what properly might be done, it has conferred with and secured data from various departments of the Government and worked with them in that manner to cooperate in fostering, promoting, and developing the foreign commerce of the United States. The Railroad Administration is represented on the economic liaison committee organized by the Department of State.

There is no assigned division or department of the Railroad Administration devoted to the fostering, promoting, and developing of foreign commerce.

The Railroad Administration is not involved directly in the gathering of data used or the expense incident thereto, but only in the proper transportation of the traffic as developed and offered for shipment within the United States. A great many railroad employees who are generally engaged in the handling of traffic are, to an extent, involved in the handling of import and export traffic; it is an incident of the general business of the carriers. The foreign freight agents employed on the individual railroads are employed in facilitating the transfer, including the necessary customhouse business, of traffic between the ocean carriers and the inland rail carriers, their functions being performance of service rather than primarily the fostering, pomoting, and development of foreign commerce. They are a part of the organization maintained by the railroad corporations prior to Federal control, which will doubtless be maintained by such corporations after the termination of Federal control.

Very truly, yours,

WALKER D. HINES,
Director General of Railroads.

PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington, D. C.

USELESS PAPERS IN EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Civil Service Commission, requesting action looking to the disposition of useless papers devoid of historic interest on the files of the commission. The communication will be referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] the committee on the part of the Senate. The Secretary will notify the House of Representatives thereof.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2883) authorizing the Meridian Highway Bridge Co., a corporation, to construct and maintain a bridge of bridges and approaches thereto across the Missouri River between Yankton County, S. Dak., and Cedar County, Nebr.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 425) to establish the Zion National Park in the State of Utah, disagreed to by the Senate; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, and Mr. HAYS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2775) to promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain, disagreed to by the Senate; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SINNOTT, Mr. SMITH of Idaho, Mr. ELSTON, Mr. FERRIS, and Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 1024. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to John Zimmerman for certain lands in the Colorado National Forest upon the surrender of other lands of an equal acreage also located in the Colorado National Forest, Colo.;

H. R. 3258. An act for the relief of Julius Jonas;

H. R. 6857. An act to authorize the change of the name of the steamer Charlotte Graveract Breitung to T. K. Maher;

H. R. 7030. An act for the relief of Martin Goldsmith; and

H. J. Res. 241. Joint resolution to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the year 1919.

HOUSE BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

The following bills were each read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Claims:

H. R. 3258. An act for the relief of Julius Jonas; and

H. R. 7030. An act for the relief of Martin Goldsmith.

H. R. 1024. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue a patent to John Zimmerman for certain lands in the Colorado National Forest upon the surrender of other lands of an equal acreage also located in the Colorado National Forest, Colo., was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

H. R. 6857. An act to authorize the change of the name of the steamer Charlotte Graveract Breitung to T. K. Maher, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

H. J. Res. 241. Joint resolution to suspend the requirements of annual assessment work on mining claims during the year 1919, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a telegram from the National Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, of Detroit, Mich., which will be inserted in the RECORD.

The telegram is as follows:

[Telegram.]

DETROIT, MICH., November 1, 1919.

The PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C.:

The executive committee of the National Retail Lumber Dealers' Association desires to express through you to the Senate of the United States its unqualified approval of the Senate's courageous and praiseworthy action in the support given to the President's position touching the pending coal strike. This association represents in a very large way the retail lumber industry of America, which comprehends in the neighborhood of 70,000 retail lumber yards. In session to-day we have made a careful survey of the results of the strike as it will affect our industry, and we wish to call your attention to the fact that an interrupted supply of coal at this time will very materially interfere with not only the manufacture but the distribution of the large supply of lumber which is now called for by the people of this country for the purpose of furnishing shelter and homes so urgently needed. The need of the hour is that those in authority shall uphold the laws of the land and our constitutional institutions.

NATIONAL RETAIL LUMBER DEALERS' ASSOCIATION.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have before me a petition signed by, I believe, some 67 merchants of the city of Dayton and vicinity in the State of Ohio in support of the Kenyon bill. It seems that heretofore these petitioners signed a memorial protesting against the bill. I ask that the petition be incorporated in the RECORD without the signatures and that it be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

There being no objection, the petition was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OCTOBER 26, 1919.

TO OUR SENATORS:

We, the undersigned merchants of Dayton and vicinity, favor a measure to subject the big meat packers to regulation similar to that provided by the Kenyon bill. We are opposed to the existing monopoly of meat products, cheese, etc., and we believe that this monopoly should be regulated. We understand that the Kenyon bill provides for Government regulation, but not ownership or operation; that it allows the present owners to operate their plants so long as their operations are fair, nondiscriminatory, and competitive; that it provides for the separate operation of stockyards; and that it puts private refrigerator-car lines on a common-carrier basis. We desire hereby to withdraw any petitions, letters, or telegrams in opposition to the Kenyon bill to which our names may have been affixed, for the reason that our former action was taken without an understanding of the contents of the bill and at the request of the packers.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present a resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Georgia memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact appropriate legislation whereby Okefenokee Swamp may be made a national park reservation. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF GEORGIA,
OFFICE OF SECRETARY OF STATE.

I, S. G. McLendon, secretary of state of the State of Georgia, do hereby certify that the matter hereto attached is a true copy of a resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact appropriate legislation whereby the Okefenokee Swamp may be made a national park reservation, and for other purposes, approved August 18, 1919, as the same appears of file in this office.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the seal of my office at the capitol, in the city of Atlanta, this 29th day of October, in the year of our Lord 1919 and of the independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-fourth.

S. G. MCLENDON,
Secretary of State.

A resolution memorializing the Congress of the United States to enact appropriate legislation whereby the Okefenokee Swamp, in the southern section of the State of Georgia, may be made a national park reservation, and for other purposes.

Whereas the Okefenokee Swamp, located in the southern section of the State of Georgia, containing an area of about 700 square miles, in which the St. Marys River and the famous Suwanee of song and story take their source, and in which there is found so much to attract the sportsman, as its hommocks and jungles teem with wild animals and game of every description native to North America, its lakes and creeks and rivers abound in fish, and its open forests ring with the music of native bird life; and

Whereas no place in all the southeastern section of the United States offers more to the student of wild life than this swamp. Here, preserved because of its inaccessibility, remains much of the primeval life of America. No place in all the southeastern section of our country, in that vast area bounded on the north by the Potomac and Ohio Rivers and on the west by the Mississippi, contains so many different species of birds as are native to this swamp; and

Whereas here in tangled leaf and wild flower live a great many of our songsters who have escaped the destruction that awaited them elsewhere. Here, too, are some of the largest birds, going up the scale and reaching the largest eagles in this section. Here are found a few species that practically are found nowhere else; and

Whereas in this jungle also remain much of our wild game, here the bear and southern lynx can be found, the only place in this territory in which black bear exists, except in some few canebrakes in isolated spots along our great rivers; and

Whereas no section is so rich in its attraction to the students as this section, and here he can reap the satisfaction of seeing many species of both bird and animal life in fairly abundant quantities that are extremely rare, if not almost extinct; and

Whereas the swamp is equally as rich for the careful student in the study of fish life; here are found a very great variety of our fresh-water fish; in fact, in a narrow compass of waters are found more varieties than any other similar area. The fish that inhabit our still waters of sluggish habits here live and thrive in long lagoons and lakes. Here at many points the waters, as they meet to make the head of both the St. Marys and Suwanee Rivers, form an ideal spot for the life of some of our game fish; and

Whereas in all the Northwest and in the Southwest sections of the United States great areas have been purchased and set apart so that the people there might have a place in which to go to see the life that has disappeared forever from the plains and forests and mountains of the far West, the National Government having purchased seven great parks to carry out this work; and

Whereas here in the Southeast no friendly hand has been held out to help us in preserving for future generations the wild life that once existed in this section of the United States. Nature herself worked hard and furnished here a natural sanctuary. Commerce has come in now and the ax of the lumberman is heard all throughout the swamps, and the coverts for game, the dense jungles in which birds and animals hide themselves from danger, will disappear unless protected, and the great forest, jungle, and swamp which form the headquarters of the two great rivers will disappear unless steps are taken to preserve same: Therefore

The House of Representatives of Georgia (the Senate concurring), do resolve:

First. That our Senators and Representatives from Georgia in Congress of the United States be, and they are hereby, memorialized to have the Congress enact appropriate legislation whereby the Okefenokee Swamp may be made a national park reservation.

Second. That duly certified copies of these preambles and resolutions be immediately transmitted by the secretary of state upon the passage, approval, and filing of same in his office to each of the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from this State in the Congress of the United States.

JNO. N. HOLDER, Speaker of House.
E. B. MOORE, Clerk of House.
SAM L. OLIVE, President of Senate.
DEVEREAUX P. MCCLATCHEY, Secretary of Senate.

Approved August 18, 1919.

HUGH M. DORSEY, Governor.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I also present a resolution adopted by the State convention of the American Legion, held in Atlanta, Ga., October 15-16, 1919, urging investigation and remedial legislation in the matter of training and pay allowed disabled service men resulting from the World War. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION, GEORGIA DIVISION,
Atlanta, Ga., October 21, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: There is transmitted herewith a copy of resolution adopted by the State convention of the American Legion, held in Atlanta, October 15-16, 1919, urging an investigation and remedial legislation in the matter of training and pay allowed disabled service men resulting from the World War.

This is sent to you pursuant to the text of the resolution, and it is urged that you give the matter your careful consideration.

Yours, very truly,

BASIL STOCKBRIDGE,
State Chairman.

Be it resolved by the Georgia Division of the American Legion in State convention assembled, That the Congress of the United States be urged to appoint a commission to investigate the method of training disabled service men of the World War, as same is given under the present laws, and to further investigate the pay allowed to disabled service men who are taking advantage of said training, and to further investigate the compensation that is being paid to disabled men, and in case deficiencies are found as a result of said investigation that appropriate legislation be passed to remedy said deficiencies immediately; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be furnished to the two Senators and to each of the Representatives from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I present a resolution adopted by the State convention of the American Legion, held in Atlanta, Ga., October 15-16, 1919, urging that Congress enact a law amending the present war-risk insurance act so that premiums may be collected by post-office employees. I ask that the resolution be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
GEORGIA DIVISION,
Atlanta, Ga., October 21, 1919.

Hon. HOKE SMITH,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: There is transmitted herewith copy of resolution unanimously adopted by the State convention of the American Legion, held in Atlanta on October 15-16, 1919, urging that Congress enact a law amending the present war-risk insurance act so that premiums may be collected by post-office employees.

It is urged that this matter receive your earnest consideration.

Very respectfully,

BASIL STOCKBRIDGE,
State Chairman.

Be it resolved, and it is hereby resolved, by the Georgia Division, American Legion, in convention assembled, That the Senators and Representatives of the State of Georgia in the Congress of the United States be requested to introduce and urge the passage of legislation by the Congress which would authorize the receipt by postmasters and rural mail carriers of premiums upon war-risk insurance policies, it being the belief of this convention that authority to make payments of premiums upon policies to postal authorities will prevent the dropping of policies of men who are not familiar with methods of making remittance by mail.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD certain resolutions intended to operate as petitions to the Senate in behalf of the help of the American Government to the people of Armenia.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution adopted by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions at its annual meeting in Grand Rapids October 23, 1919.

In view of the 100 years of philanthropic service to all the people of Turkey and the large investment of life and property made by the people of America through the Christian Church; in view of the present crisis, threatening not only the continuance of this humanitarian service but the very existence of the people for whom it was established; and in view of the fact that the United States is the only one of the great powers which is in a position to render this service: Be it therefore

Resolved, That it is the earnest conviction of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, assembled in Grand Rapids, Mich., that action immediately be taken by the United States to protect the people of Armenia such as is contemplated by the Williams resolution now before the Senate; be it further

Resolved, That copies of this our resolution be forwarded to the President of the United States, the Committee on Foreign Relations, and the leaders of the majority and minority parties in the Senate; be it further

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to correspond with the churches of our denomination to the end that they should urge this action upon their several representatives in the United States Senate.

On October 24 the National Council of Congregational Churches passed the same motion, substituting its name in place of that of the American board in the second paragraph and omitting the fourth paragraph.

The committee of the American board was appointed by President Edward C. Moore on October 23, as follows: President Henry C. King, Rev. James L. Barton, Mr. Franklin Warner, Rev. William Horace Day, Mr. John M. Whitehead, Rev. William E. Barton, Mr. H. M. Beardsley, Rev. Robert E. Browne, Judge John H. Perry, Mr. William E. Sweet, Rev. Ernest W Riggs (chairman).

ARMENIAN NATIONAL UNION OF AMERICA,
RICHMOND BRANCH.

Resolution on behalf of Armenia.

Whereas, In spite of the fact that almost a year has passed since the signing of the armistice, the Armenian people continue to suffer, as before, all the horrors of famine, homelessness, violence, murder, persecution, exile, and imminent massacre; and

Whereas thousands of Armenian women and girls are still enslaved by Kurdish, Turkish, and Arab masters; and

Whereas the Armenians are now practically without means of defending themselves, while the Turks, Kurds, and Tartars are equipped with arms, and, emboldened by the lax attitude of the powers, are threatening to combine in an attack upon the Armenian Republic and upon all the Armenians of Transcaucasia; and

Whereas outrageous situations of this kind have always been abhorrent to the American people; and

Whereas America entered the war for the express purpose of putting an end to them; and

Whereas there are now before the Senate two bills, one the Lodge bill, in favor of an independent Armenia, and the other, the Williams bill, referring directly to the present crisis, and recommending that we lend to Armenia some kind of military aid; and

Whereas throughout the war the Armenian people were true and valiant allies, the first and the last in the defense of the Caucasian front: Therefore be it

Resolved, That we, the Armenian colony of Armenian National Union of America assembled in Richmond, Va., believing that to refuse aid to this heroic people at this time would be to betray the principles for which our men fought and died and to incur a lasting national dishonor, do hereby urge upon the Senate the adoption of such resolution as shall afford to the Armenian people immediate protection; and be it further

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to Senator LODGE, Senator HARDING, Senator WILLIAMS, Senator NEW, and to the President and Vice President.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of resolutions adopted by the Richmond Branch of the Armenian National Union of America on October 27, 1919.

K. DER KRIKORIEN,
Secretary Richmond Branch of Armenian National Union of America.

We, the undersigned citizens of the city of Richmond, Va., heartily indorse the above resolutions.

[Copy of original signatures sent to President Wilson:] George Ainslie, mayor; W. Russell Bowie, rector St. Paul's Episcopal Church; D. C. Richardson, judge; R. Carter Scott, judge; E. Randolph Williams; D. S. Freeman, editor News-Leader; James W. Morris, rector Monumental Episcopal Church; E. Raleigh Phillips; Alex. Ryland; Wm. C. Camp, American National Bank; City officials: Geo. Wayne Anderson, W. M. Winston, R. L. Hasker, W. R. McLaughlin, R. W. White, J. F. Waller, Thos. M. Landers, sr., S. M. Baughan, C. E. Hayward, Marie C. Daly, Hattie C. Crist, Celute I. Barrow, Mattie E. Campbell, Winifred P. Moxon, E. G. Friend, Bessie E. Irving, Gay B. Shepperson, Alice B. Hopkins, Abe Cohn, C. Upsher Creery, S. C. Hardin, J. E. Burnett, Beverley T. Crump, L. L. Cheatwood, Wm. Reinhard, A. Van Buren, J. H. Lawder, Geo. W. Libby, J. R. Perdue, jr., G. H. Tompkins, Louis C. Gisseller, H. E. Tresnon, W. L. Tyler, Cleat Walke, Stuart Bowe, Wm. H. Wyatt, jr., W. J. Griggs, C. M. Smith, jr., H. C. Cofer, Chas. I. Phillips, Luther Libby, Thos. Haddon, William B. Smith, J. Geter Jones, Merchants' Bank; Government officials: Walter D. Melton, Harry Wood, Chas. B. Reid, W. A. Grant, Claude A. Hess, Howard L. Melton, John W. Arnold, Harrison S. Hall, A. D. Fenson, R. J. Rowlett, Vara H. Winston, R. Lew Phillips, Douglas Baird, Elmo S. Redwood, Ed. E. Bernard, F. W. Kemker, Walter S. Doughty, J. Harrison Tabb, William R. Vial, jr., W. B. Allen, W. T. Miles, G. Gordon Brown.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I also ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD certain resolutions from the Council of Jewish Women in favor of the unqualified ratification of the treaty of peace and the league of nations.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK SECTION,
COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN,
October 25, 1919.

Senator JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: At a large open meeting of the New York section of the Council of Jewish Women, held on October 23, 1919, the following resolutions were adopted:

"Whereas the league of nations presents the only hope of universal and lasting peace and of ultimate disarmament; and

"Whereas the league of nations would establish peace on the high moral plane of justice and freedom to weak nations as well as to strong; and

"Whereas the safety and liberty of our country are in every way protected by this covenant; Therefore be it

"Resolved, That the New York Section of the Council of Jewish Women, consisting of 3,600 citizens, in meeting assembled, indorse the covenant of the league of nations; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent to every member of the Foreign Relations Committee of the Senate and to each of the Senators from New York State."

Very truly, yours,
Mrs. IRVING LEHMAN,
Chairman Committee on Legislation.

Mr. LODGE presented a memorial of Thomas Francis Meagher Branch, Friends of Irish Freedom, of Anaconda, Mont., remonstrating against the ratification of the league of nations treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. NEWBERRY presented memorials of sundry citizens of Detroit, Mich., remonstrating against the establishment of a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Arlington Women's Union Club, of Bangor, Mich., praying for the ratification of the proposed league of nations treaty, which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented a resolution adopted by Local Union No. 2743, United Mine Workers of America, of Ringo, Kans., favoring the wage demands of miners in the pending coal strike and expressing their loyalty to the Government, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 411) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to certify certain findings of fact, and for other purposes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CUMMINS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 1233) to repeal an act entitled "An act to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes," and the act amendatory thereof, reported adversely thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3090) to repeal the espionage act, reported adversely thereon.

SUGAR SHORTAGE.

Mr. McNARY. On behalf of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry I report back favorably the bill (S. 3284) to provide for the national welfare by continuing the United States Sugar Equalization Board until December 31, 1920, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 286) thereon.

Mr. RANSDELL. I ask for 24 hours in which to prepare and file the views of the minority.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, leave is granted. The bill reported by the Senator from Oregon will be placed on the calendar.

MINNESOTA RIVER DAM.

Mr. NELSON. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3263) to authorize the construction of flood control and improvement works in Minnesota River and Big Stone Lake between the States of Minnesota and South Dakota, and I submit a report (No. 284) thereon. The bill is recommended by the department. It gives consent to the local authorities to erect a dam. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. GRONNA. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota if North Dakota is not included?

Mr. NELSON. It will be included, I suppose, ultimately in the waterworks. This is for a dam at the foot of Big Stone Lake, between Minnesota and South Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask that the bill may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Minnesota Valley Drainage and Flood Control District, organized and existing under the laws of the State of Minnesota, and the Big Stone Lake Drainage and Flood Control District, organized and existing under the laws of the State of South Dakota, are hereby authorized to construct a dam across Minnesota River at the foot of Big Stone Lake, together with such dikes, spillways, diversion channels, and other works in said river and lake as the said districts may agree upon as necessary for the prevention and control of floods, the improvement of navigation, and the drainage of land: Provided, That plans for the works hereby authorized shall be submitted to the Secretary of War and the Chief of Engineers for their approval, and unless and until approved by them no part of the said works shall be built or commenced.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TOWN-SITE ALLOTMENTS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. SPENCER. From the Committee on Indian Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 7751) authorizing the sale of inherited and unpartitioned allotments for town-site purposes in the Quapaw Agency, Okla., and I submit a report (No. 285) thereon.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It relates merely to the drainage of a very small section in the Ottawa country where a town has been built up in the zinc fields. It is purely a local matter.

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read before consent is given.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, upon the application heretofore or hereafter made, of a majority in interest of the owners of any inherited and unpartitioned allotment in the Quapaw Agency, Okla., to sell the surface of said allotted lands, in whole or in part, for town-site purposes, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, concerning terms of sale and disposal of the proceeds for the benefit of the respective Indians: Provided, That any duly authorized representative of the Interior Department may execute any deed or other instrument necessary to the completion of such sale in the name and on behalf of any of the owners of said land if such owner or his legal representative shall fail or refuse to execute such deed or other instrument for a period of 30 days after being given notice in such manner as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe that such deed or other instrument is ready for execution.

In conducting such sale the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, prescribe such conditions and requirements as may be necessary for the protection of any person or persons he may find to have legal or equitable interests in any of said lands or the improvements thereon, making due allowance, in his discretion, for the value of such improvements, but no preference right to purchase any lot or tract shall be accorded any person for a period exceeding 90 days.

There is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,000, to cover the expense of conducting such sale, such sum to be reimbursed to the Treasury out of the proceeds of the sale and to be apportioned among the distributees of the fund derived from the sale.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 3357) to provide funds for continuing work upon existing projects already authorized by the act of June 17, 1902, and subsequent acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, known as the reclamation law; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands.

A bill (S. 3358) fixing the ages for appointment of officers who have served in the Reserve Corps during the war with the Imperial German Empire to a relative rank in the Regular Army of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 3359) to amend the laws relating to navigation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 3360) granting an increase of pension to William J. Johnson (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 3361) granting an increase of pension to Lucinda C. Doney (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 3362) for the relief of the Jefferson Lime Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 3363) granting an increase of pension to Amelia Hubbard; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FRANCE:
A bill (S. 3364) to provide increased compensation for employees of the government of the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.
By Mr. JOHNSON of California:
A bill (S. 3365) for the relief of Hilbert A. C. Jensen; to the Committee on Military Affairs.
By Mr. ELKINS:
A bill (S. 3366) granting a pension to Harry B. Robb; to the Committee on Pensions.
By Mr. OWEN:
A bill (S. 3367) for the erection of a public building in the city of Stillwater, State of Oklahoma, and appropriating money therefor; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.
By Mr. PHELAN:
A bill (S. 3368) to provide for aeroplane mail service between New York City, N. Y., and San Francisco, Calif.; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.
A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 122) making November 11 of each year a national holiday, to be known as Liberty Thanksgiving Day; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

THE MERCHANT MARINE.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not usually take very much time in the morning hour, but I ask unanimous consent of the Senate at this time for about 15 or 20 minutes to submit some remarks with reference to a bill which I propose to introduce relating to shipping.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Washington will proceed.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, when the World War began we had 1,076,152 gross tons of shipping out of nearly 50,000,000 tons engaged in the world's trade. It was carrying only about 10 per cent of our foreign commerce. Then was brought home to us the need of a great nation for a merchant marine. Foreign shipping upon which we were dependent was taken for war purposes. Our products and goods could not be exported for lack of ships. Charter rates became excessive, many of our industries were prostrate, and our people were threatened with ruin. The loss actually suffered was more than would have been required to secure an adequate merchant marine under proper governmental encouragement.

When we entered the war in 1917 our foreign tonnage had increased to 2,191,715 tons under the impetus of war needs. Then it was that our protective coastwise policy was fully justified. It is safe to say that the war was really won by our coastwise merchant marine, which then amounted to 6,277,934 tons. Many of the best ships available for transporting troops, munitions, and supplies were coastwise ships which we would not have had except for the policy followed for the protection of our coastwise shipping from foreign competition. It saved us and the Allies from defeat, or helped us to an early victory.

As it was, our power was greatly impaired by the lack of ships. Men and supplies were to be taken over water thousands of miles. Ships had to be secured at any cost or militarism would be triumphant, our flag dishonored, and liberty lost to the world for generations. Over three billions of dollars were appropriated by Congress for ships. This is more than the book value of all the merchant ships of the world in 1914 and a heavy price to pay for the neglect of years.

No one knew how long the war would last. A shipbuilding program for a two or more years' war was begun and carried on until victory came. After the armistice many contracts were canceled, and the program will likely be completed by December 31, 1920. By the end of next year we will have, including our coastwise shipping, a merchant fleet of almost 18,000,000 gross tons, and about equal to that of the British Empire.

We do not desire, and it is not our purpose, to drive other nations off the sea, but we do want to do, and we ought to do, at least our proportionate part of our own and the world's carrying trade, so that our commerce shall have a fair chance in the world's markets, and that we may be hereafter fully prepared for any emergency that may confront us. In my judgment, the people are ready to do anything needed to bring this about.

Our ships have been built in a hurry. Many are not the best for our trade. We have too many of some kinds and none of others. The fleet should be properly balanced and then we should maintain it on a par with commercial growth and keep it up to the highest state of efficiency. If any nation seeks to drive us off the sea, we should meet such an attempt with all our resources. If our right to have and operate a merchant marine commensurate with our wealth, commerce, and power is admitted by other nations, it will be well for them and for us. The need of the British Empire of a great merchant marine is admitted by us; but it is not good that the world should depend upon one nation for its water transportation. The world's peace is not safe or assured under such a condition. We are the greatest exporting Nation in the world, and the second, if not the first, importing Nation, and we should be no more dependent upon foreign transportation to get our products to market than should any other nation.

Of the 12,000,000 tons of shipping for the foreign trade that will be under our flag by the close of next year, more than 8,000,000 will be owned by the Government and paid for by taxes from the people. What to do with it and how to use it is the problem that confronts us, and it should be solved as soon as possible.

We may differ about Government ownership, but that can be no issue here. The Government owns these ships, whether we will or no. They can not be given away. The people will not stand for that. We must not allow private parties to take the cream of this shipping and let the Government hold the balance to dispose of at a great sacrifice. Grant that Government ownership should end as soon as may be; it must be brought about as nearly as may be without unnecessary sacrifice and just as a private individual would get rid of property he did not desire to keep but that he did not have to dispose of at a sacrifice. Furthermore, the Government is interested in the future success of shipping and the maintenance of a permanent fleet. That object must be kept in view, and in getting rid of Government ownership we must try not to sacrifice our property and must strive also to build up and put our shipping on a permanent basis. In fact, the ultimate purpose of our legislation should be the establishment of a policy under which an adequate merchant marine will be developed and maintained under private ownership and operation.

Private interest, incentive, and energy bring the greatest efficiency. Efficiency means success—its absence, failure—in business and enterprise. When any of these ships can be sold so as to promote the ultimate purpose they should be sold. If not sold, they should be operated privately when this can be arranged for on fair terms and in a way to promote the ultimate purpose.

No one can reasonably hope that private enterprise and capital, in the face of foreign competition and handicapped by our own inexperience and lack of business connections and facilities, will be able to absorb and take over all this shipping in a short while and establish the routes we ought to have. To serve our present needs, establish and maintain new lines, and develop the new markets that we must have if our merchant marine is to be what it ought to be, additional ships of special type, size, and speed must be built. They will cost large sums of money. Some may be built by private capital, but in my judgment most of them will have to be built by the Government if we are to have them. They can be built without new appropriations and as a part of a policy that will not only cost the Government nothing but will help repay what has already been spent. Along with the ships we have we also have agencies to build the ships we need. It is economy to use them, even if the additional cost of a ship may be a little more—which I very much doubt. At Camden, N. J., for example, the Government has a plant for the building of the largest ships in the world with ways a thousand feet long. This plant has cost several millions of dollars, and for all practical purposes is a part of the New York Shipbuilding Co.'s yard. Unless private shipbuilding interests are ready to buy it and pay a fair price for it, the Government ought to keep it and through the New York Shipbuilding Co. construct the ships that it ought to have and for the construction of which there are probably no other existing facilities.

The situation that confronts us is about this: We are comparatively inexperienced in financing, building, and operating ships. We ought to have, for national safety and commercial success, at least 15,000,000 tons of shipping, to be maintained and increased as our trade grows, along with ample shipbuilding and repair yards. We will have this shipping by the close of 1920, with 8,000,000 tons or more of it owned by the Government. What shall we do to bring it ultimately into private hands, insure its maintenance and development to meet the needs of national safety and commerce, and at the same time return to the people the greatest part of their investment?

After consulting with men of experience, who in the suggestions they have made I believe have subordinated their personal interests to the public welfare, I have prepared a bill which I believe can be made to form the basis of such a policy. It coordinates private initiative, incentive, and patriotism with governmental power and responsibility, and, I hope, may accomplish the great purpose sought by all.

Many point out the need of a policy to do what we want done, but few, if any, suggest concrete plans. The Saturday Evening Post of October 18 points out the relative development of shipping since 1914, showing that while the British fleet is smaller by 5,000,000 tons than it would have been if no war had occurred and the German fleet smaller by three and a half millions tons, the American fleet is larger by more than 7,000,000 tons. It goes on to say:

The figures graphically illustrate our enormous relative advance in the shipping field, and ships can now be built in this country cheaper than in England—perhaps cheaper than in Germany.

But neither England nor Germany is overmuch discouraged by that condition. Both of them admit that we have taken a colossal stride in incredibly short time and that at the moment they are handicapped. They say, also, that of old they beat us hollow at shipbuilding and ship operating, and they cherish a notion that under normal conditions they can finally beat us again. They say that building ships in short order under Government flat is one thing, while operating those ships year in and year out against the competition of the shrewdest, most experienced shipping men and nations of the world is another thing.

And they are largely correct in that contention, and that is one of the conditions that we must take into account in trying to solve this problem.

They rather expect us to make enough mistakes to put the game back into their hands again. They are not without good grounds for their expectation. A full half century of mistaken and ill-considered national policy in respect of American shipping brought it to the pass in which the European war found it in 1914. A new and comprehensive code of shipping laws, buttressed by a sound and far-seeing policy in maritime matters, is the only thing which can prevent our competitors' wishes from coming true.

Everybody agrees that we are to have intensive competition and that we need a sound and far-reaching policy to maintain our proper position, and all the writers on this subject would give more substantial aid by trying to develop such a policy rather than to spend so much time in demonstrating what we all know.

The plan I propose is a concrete one. It has its defects and its dangers. Graft, waste, and extravagance are possible under it; but before it is condemned let some one suggest a plan that will not permit these things. The ships and property we have must be handled and controlled by human agencies with more or less discretion, and as long as this must be so these things can not be wholly avoided. Let those who criticize and condemn this plan suggest something better. Let us construct rather than destroy. Anything better and safer will be welcomed by me. An adequate merchant marine, built in American shipyards by American labor, owned by American capital, operated and manned by American seamen, carrying American commerce to all the ports of the world, and flying the American flag, has been my dream for many years, and it is my purpose to do whatever I can to attain this great end, and I will support any measure and any policy that will give a reasonable assurance of accomplishing this great object.

What I suggest is, in fact, not new. We now have the United States Shipping Board acting in a dual capacity. It was intended to be a great regulatory, governmental agency, and is in fact doing the work of a great corporation. It can not well serve both ends. I do not propose to destroy the Shipping Board. What I propose is to divorce it entirely from building, selling, or operating ships and allow it to do the things it was primarily created to do, and establish a corporation separate and independent of it to operate, maintain, and dispose of our ships in such a way as to give us an adequate merchant marine on a permanent basis. We need an agency that can act promptly and do whatever the emergency or situation demands. The best governmental agencies of this war have been the corporations created to serve particular needs. They have done their work well and with profit to the Government, and have shown that corporate agencies can be used as effectively in governmental activities as in private enterprises.

The first section of this bill declares it to be the policy of the United States to have a merchant marine sufficient to insure our safety in time of emergency, so far as merchant ships can do so, and also sufficient to carry the greater part of our commerce, together with ample shipbuilding and repair plants, all ultimately to be owned and operated by private parties and capital.

Section 2 creates a corporation entirely separate and distinct from the Shipping Board, with nine directors to be appointed by the President from the different sections of the country for a term of eight years. This corporation continues for 30 years unless otherwise provided by law, and has all the powers of a private corporation for the accomplishment of the purposes of its creation. It has no capital stock, but there is transferred to it all the ships of the United States acquired as a result of the war and all the ships, shipyards, property, and assets of the United States Shipping Board and the United States Emergency Fleet Corporation, which shall constitute its capital. It is authorized to use this capital in any way that it deems best to accomplish the purposes of the act. All the contracts and liabilities of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation will be taken over by it. It is authorized and empowered "to construct, equip, repair, maintain, operate, sell, lease, charter, exchange, or otherwise dispose of vessels of the United States, and issue and deal in maritime securities, make contracts, acquire, hold, and dispose of such other property, both real and personal, as may be necessary and convenient for corporate purposes, and to establish and maintain, within and without the United States, port, terminal, and warehouse facilities and coal or oil bunkers or stations for use in connection with our merchant marine, and to do any and all things deemed by it necessary to develop an adequate American merchant marine composed of ships of suitable types, speed," and so forth. In brief, it is proposed to place in the control of this corporation, whose directors are men of the highest standing and largest business experience, ships, shipyards, and assets which cost about $3,000,000,000, for the purpose of accomplishing a definite, declared object, and give them full authority to do with these assets a certain and definite thing. Our biggest men will welcome the opportunity to do this great thing. They can do it if it can be done, and I do not doubt that they will do it.

Sections 3 and 4 provide for the transfer to the corporation of the property and assets to be handled by it.

Section 5 extends the coastwise laws to the Sandwich Islands, the Virgin Islands, Guam, and the Philippines after six months from the passage of the act and directs the corporation to see that adequate service is maintained between the United States and these islands. This will doubtless soon develop a large commerce with these islands and result in private capital taking over any steamship lines the corporation may have to establish and extending them to China and Japan.

Section 6 prohibits competition by the corporation with established American shipping lines.

Section 7 makes the ships of this corporation subject to all the laws of the United States the same as private ships.

Section 8 provides for annual reports.

Section 9 authorizes the Interstate Commerce Commission and the United States Shipping Board to require connection between rail and water carriers, and authorizes these bodies to establish through export rates over rail and water lines to encourage, develop, and increase our commerce.

Section 10 makes it the duty of the Shipping Board to investigate and advise the corporation what steamship lines and postal service should be established and maintained between the ports of the United States and other world ports, together with an estimate of the cost of such postal service, and the type, size, speed, and other requirements of ships, and the corporation is authorized to establish such service as speedily as possible, although the discretion of doing so is left entirely with the corporation.

Section 11 requires the corporation to determine the need for ships between the terminal of the Government railroad in Alaska and other ports, and furnish suitable service for the same unless it can be done by private parties.

Section 12 establishes the principal place of business of the corporation at Philadelphia.

Section 13 repeals the emergency acts under which the present fleet of ships has been constructed, and makes unexpended appropriations available for the work of the corporation.

Section 14 repeals sections 5, 6, 7, and 8 of the Shipping Board act, which authorized the construction, operation, and so forth, of ships.

Section 15 repeals certain acts relating to the coastwise and other emergency legislation.

Section 16 contains the common provision with respect to the effect of declaring unconstitutional any part of the act, and also declares that the specific enumeration of powers shall not exclude other powers embraced within general terms.

Section 17 directs the President to take steps to abrogate the provisions of treaties of commerce that restrict our right to impose discriminating duties on imports.

It may be said that this is a great power and responsibility to put in the hands of a few men. It is; but we have a great property to be handled and a great object to be attained. It must be done in a great way if it is to be done at all.

Mr. President, the committee has not taken up this matter as yet, because we have been waiting for a disposition of the peace treaty. Many of the members of the committee have been working on very important legislation before other committees, including railroad legislation and the peace treaty, so that we have not thought it well to start hearings. I have prepared bills from investigations that I have made as expressive of the views I have reached myself and not as giving the views of the committee in order that concrete propositions may be before the committee as a basis for the hearings which we hope to begin soon. As I say, the bill to which I have specially referred is prepared without any purpose of doing away with the Shipping Board, and it leaves the Shipping Board to do exactly what it was primarily intended to do.

I have also prepared another bill expressing the views I have on the theory of the Shipping Board handling the ships; and if that should be the policy that should be adopted by the committee after the hearings, then I think these suggestions will be of benefit. These concrete measures will probably aid the committee in getting more prompt action after the committee has had its hearings upon this matter, which I consider really as important a problem as we have before this Congress. I consider it a problem even more difficult of solution than the railroad problem, because we have the experience which no other nation has with reference to the railroad problem, while we are lacking in experience in the shipping problem, and this with the very nature of shipping operations and conditions makes it very difficult to work out.

Mr. President, I present these two bills and I ask that they may be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 3355) to provide for the disposition or operation of merchant vessels of the United States, to stimulate interstate and foreign commerce, to encourage the development of the merchant marine of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The bill (S. 3356) to create the United States Merchant Marine Corporation and to sustain and build up the merchant marine of the United States was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Washington has introduced the bills and explained his purpose; and, to some extent, the plan of the bills. I agree with him that there is no more important subject with which Congress has to deal than this question of taking proper care of the American merchant marine. We are in a position now where we can hold our place, a self-respecting and decent and proper place, on the oceans of the world. I hope the time never will come when the United States will again be a beggar of ships.

Just what may be determined with reference to these bills, I think, will depend somewhat on what is developed before the committee. I take it the chairman will arrange for hearings on the bills, so that we may have the views of all those who are thoroughly acquainted with the problem. It is quite clear in my mind that we ought at least to continue the operation of ships by the Government, either through some corporation or through the Shipping Board, for a period of 5 or 10 years, or until such time as new trade routes are thoroughly established. However, that, no doubt, will be developed upon the hearings on these bills.

Recently I received some very well considered and clear views on this subject from a gentleman who has given it considerable thought, Mr. R. L. McKellar, and I ask that these views may be inserted in the RECORD. I do not know that I care to have them read, unless some other Senator does. These will go along with the observations of the Senator from Washington.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOUTHERN RAILROAD LINES,
Washington, D. C., October 18, 1919.

Senator DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Operation of the American merchant marine.

DEAR SENATOR: Recalling your talk on the above subject to the Shipping Board men at the Elks Club on Friday afternoon of last week, at which time you invited an expression of individual views.

In response to this invitation, I wish to say that many will agree with you that governmental operation of railroads is undesirable, principally because the roads are owned privately and the Government is under obligations to return them to their owners within a reasonable period after the close of the war.

However, when it comes to the operation of our rapidly increasing merchant marine, it is a different proposition, for the following reasons:

First. It is owned by the Government, is essential to world commerce, and is a necessary adjunct to our Navy.

Second. An organization for its operation has been created and is in process of development in accordance with existing needs.

Third. If this organization is continued and stabilized, both in its operation and traffic branches, and expanded to meet the requirements of competition and the increasing outturn of newly constructed vessels, it will mean that our ocean service heretofore so largely concentrated on a few ports will be spread out, and that all of our usable ports on the Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific will be supplied with steamship service and new trade routes will be opened up to all ports of the world offering trade with this country.

Fourth. Under Government ownership and operation, these new trade routes can be served and continued until a remunerative business is developed or at least until it is fully demonstrated that the need for such service does not exist.

Fifth. If new construction is stopped and sale of vessels now owned by the Shipping Board is made to private enterprise, it means that under private ownership and operation the larger ports and the best paying trade routes will, as a matter of course, be given preference and that the establishment of new and remunerative trade routes will be a matter of long-deferred and long-drawn-out development, and in some instances only as the result of an overproduction of shipping and consequent remote necessity for finding additional markets in order to employ such excess shipping.

Sixth. It is even possible that under private ownership and operation that vessels now operated and allotted to new service, as in the case of the newly established service from south Atlantic and Gulf ports, will be withdrawn and put into better paying routes if the present routes are not found immediately remunerative.

Seventh. Competition on the Pacific Ocean is also a matter of vital importance to the permanent establishment of our merchant marine in all directions, and it is extremely doubtful if private enterprise will meet that competition as quickly as will the United States Shipping Board under a well-defined policy of continued and stabilized operation.

Eighth. It is my belief that the United States Government should continue without interruption its shipbuilding program, covering vessels suitable for commercial use, including passenger vessels and colliers for transporting commercial coal, and that Government operation should be continued until our merchant marine is firmly established upon the high seas in the handling of the ocean commerce of the world.

It is my further belief that under stabilized and aggressive governmental operation, coordinated with competitive railroad operation, that our merchant marine will do as much in 5 years toward developing our foreign commerce through all ports as will be done in 25 years if the Shipping Board's building program is arrested and ships now owned are sold to private enterprise and no provision made for absorbing the loss in establishing new trade routes and in regular service from ports heretofore inadequately served.

Canada's merchant-marine policy, as indicated in the following extract from Shipping, is also of interest in its relation to ours:

[Magazine, Shipping, Sept. 27, 1919.]

"The Canadian Government has decided to inaugurate an active shipping policy in conjunction with its railroads. Following the lines developed by the Australian, South African, and other governments, it will operate freight and passenger ships on all the seas in the interest of Canadian commerce.

"The Canadian Government maritime transportation service will be operated by the Canadian national railway board. Next month the board expects to place about 30 vessels in commission, and new vessels will be added as fast as the builders can deliver them. The initial service will start from Halifax and St. John and will include Newfoundland, Liverpool, Glasgow, London, Avonmouth, Kingston, Habana and other West Indian ports, Buenos Aires, and possibly Cape Town.

"An Australian and New Zealand service will be run monthly from Vancouver. The Canadian Raider, a 5,100-ton vessel, will shortly be placed on this route. Other vessels for Pacific services to the Orient and India are being built in British Columbia yards and will be commissioned as rapidly as conditions permit. Many of these ships are expected to be on their station before the end of December.

"When the scheme is rounded out the Government of Canada will possess vessels making regular commercial voyages on all the important sea routes of the world. They will be operated solely in the interest of the Canadian people and in cooperation wtih the Canadian Government railroads, consular and commercial-intelligence service."

Yours, very truly,

R. L. MCKELLAR.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am heartily in sympathy with the bill which the Senator from Washington has just submitted to the Senate. There is, however, another viewpoint of the shipping situation which we must consider in connection with any program, however unimportant. I refer to the boycott of ships which have been completed for the Shipping Board, which belong to the United States, and which may be the precursor of many similar proceedings by some of the affiliated unions of this country. If the resolution which I shall send to the desk in a moment and ask to have read is a fair test of what is coming, we must prepare to overcome them, else we may build our vessels in the hope of restoring the merchant marine of the United States, but the only practical effect will be to make them "painted ships upon a painted ocean."

I ask unanimous consent for the reading of the resolution to which I refer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WATERFRONT WORKERS' FEDERATION OF THE PACIFIC COAST,
San Francisco, Calif., September 7, 1919.

TO SHIPOWNERS, SHIPPERS, CHARTERERS, AND OTHERS CONCERNED:

Herewith find copy of resolution adopted by the Federation on the 3d instant relative to the strike of shipyard workers' unions at Los Angeles against the Los Angeles Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co.:

"Whereas it is the declared object of the Los Angeles Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co., backed by the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association, to disrupt and destroy the organizations of labor in the shipbuilding industry in Los Angeles; and

"Whereas this attitude on the part of the employing interests is a threat and challenge to organized labor everywhere: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Waterfront Workers' Federation this 3d day of September, 1919, That the members of its affiliated unions will not sail in, handle cargo from or to, or do any overhauling or repairs to steamship West Calumb or any other vessel completed by the Los Angeles Shipbuilding & Dry Dock Co. since the strike of the shipyard workers against that establishment until such time as a satisfactory settlement of the dispute is effected; further

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to cooperate with the Iron Trades Council of San Francisco, with a view to making this resolution effective; and further

"Resolved, That the Secretary notify all shipowners, shippers, and charterers, and other employers concerned of this action on the part of the federation."

Respectfully,

DON CAMERON, President.
E. ELLISON, Secretary.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator has called that resolution to the attention of the Senate. It seems, however, to be a part of a nation-wide program affecting all lines of industry. There is in the bill which I introduced one section to which I did not refer, and that is a provision looking toward the training of American citizens for officers of ships and American seamen to man these ships. If this is carried out and succeeds, as we hope it will, I do not think we will have nearly so much trouble along those lines.

CONTROL OF RAILROAD TRANSPORTATION.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask unanimous consent to take up for consideration the conference report on the bill (S. 641) to amend section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918, submitted by me on Friday last.

Mr. SMOOT. What is the conference report on, Mr. President?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is on the bill to restore to the Interstate Commerce Commission its former jurisdiction with regard to rates and charges for transportation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

The report was agreed to.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

Mr. KING. I offer a resolution of ratification and ask that it may be read, printed, and lie on the table.

The resolution of ratification was read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of the treaty of peace signed at Versailles on the 28th day of June, 1919, by the plenipotentiaries of the United States and other belligerent powers, with this reservation:

That whereas the Government of the United States takes the view that it is entirely competent through the legislative powers delegated to Congress by the Constitution and the inherent legislative powers of the several States of the Union to deal with all questions of domestic policy, and especially with all questions concerning the status and relations of labor; and

Whereas article 19 of the convention of the league of nations, which is a part of said treaty, provides that the assembly of the league of nations may from time to time advise the consideration by members of the league of international conditions whose continuance might endanger the peace of the world, under which power the assembly of the league of nations is entirely competent to deal with such conditions of labor as may produce unrest so great as that the peace and harmony of the world are imperiled, but notwithstanding said provision said treaty of peace further provides a special international organization of labor which is extraneous to the league of nations, the powers of which are defined in Part XIII of the treaty, comprising articles 387 to 427, inclusive; and

Whereas the Government of the United States does not recognize that the intervention of such said international labor office is at all necessary for the adoption of humane conditions of labor or would promote the cause of labor within the United States, or that such intervention would in any wise be proper or permissible: Therefore

The United States of America withholds its assent to Part XIII, comprising articles 387 to 427, inclusive, of the said treaty of peace, and excepts and reserves the same from the act of ratification; and the United States of America declines to participate in any way in the said general conference or to participate in the election of the governing body of the international labor office constituted by said article, and declines in any way to contribute or be bound to contribute to the expenditures of said general conference or international labor office.

THE EGYPTIAN QUESTION.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a newspaper article, together with copies of cablegrams from Egypt, protesting against the use of machine guns by the British to suppress peaceful demonstrations for national self-determination. I also ask that they be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

There being no objection, the matter was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TWO RIOTERS ARE SLAIN IN ALEXANDRIA, EGYPT—TWENTY-SEVEN POLICEMEN AND TEN CIVILIANS INJURED AS RESULT OF NATIONALIST DEMONSTRATION.

ALEXANDRIA, EGYPT, October 25.

Two rioters were killed and 10 others injured and 27 policemen were hurt in a serious nationalist demonstration yesterday. The trouble arose when the police attempted to suppress a peaceable demonstration, such as have recently been a weekly feature of political activity in Alexandria. Sticks, stones, bottles, and police batons first were used. The arrival of the governor of Alexandria restored order for a time. Then two motor lorries with troops appeared on the scene, and eventually shots were fired at the crowd.

To-day there was some recurrence of the trouble at the harbor side, but it was of a comparative minor character.

—

CAIRO, EGYPT, October 25.

Shouts of "We don't want the Milner Commission!" interrupted a band playing "God save the King" at the public gardens yesterday, giving the signal for a nationalist demonstration. The trouble was quelled by the authorities, who placed a number of students under arrest.

[Cablegrams received from Egypt protesting against use of machine guns by the British to suppress peaceful demonstrations for national self-determination:]

CAIRO, October 29, 1919.

Egyptians in expressing their political feelings by peaceful demonstration were met with machine guns. In the name of miserable Egypt we protest against such hellish cruelty in the twentieth century.

STUDENTS NASRICH TRAINING COLLEGE.

—

CAIRO, October 29, 1919.

To free Americans protest against shooting by English troops unarmed peaceful demonstrators Alexandria, 24th instant, who asked independence and protested against Milner mission.

ENGINEERING STUDENTS.

—

CAIRO, October 29, 1919.

Protest to Americans crimes committed by English against Alexandria manifestants.

AGRICULTURAL SCHOOL MOUSSTOHER.

—

CAIRO, October 29, 1919.

To free Americans we protest against British troops shooting unarmed peaceful demonstrators, children, women, men in Alexandria.

EGYPTIAN MEDICAL STUDENTS.

—

TANTA, October 29, 1919.

On strike and protest ferocity of English troops at Alexandria.

NIZAMIA COLLEGE, TANTA.

—

TANTA, October 29, 1919.

The Egyptian lives are at stake. We protest against the British force who shot the peaceful manifestators yesterday at Alexandria.

TANTA STUDENTS.

—

ALEXANDRIA, October 29, 1919.

We protest against English shooting Alexandria natives on 24th and 25th instant.

KAMILIA COLLEGE.

—

CAIRO, October 29, 1919.

English military bloodshed recommenced against unarmed peaceful innocent demonstrators in Alexandria; complaints to liberal Americans.

KHEDIVIEH STUDENTS.

—

ALEXANDRIA, October 29, 1919.

Before American Nation we protest against the atrocities committed by the British soldiers against the unarmed demonstrators in Alexandria.

ALEXANDRIA GOVERNMENT SCHOOLS.

—

CAIRO, October 29, 1919.

British troops fixed unarmed peaceful demonstrators in Alexandria 24th. Protest before free Americans.

TEWFIKIEH SCHOOL.

—

CAIRO, October 29, 1919.

Students of intermediate school commence strongly protest against abominable atrocities committed in Alexandria yesterday by British troops against unarmed populace.

—

CAIRO, October 29, 1919.

At the moment when universal peace is reigning everywhere England attempts to strangle peaceable demonstrations by the most brutal force. The principles of the American people are opposed to such inhuman massacre of the weak.

STUDENTS OF ELAZHAR UNIVERSITY.

—

SHEBINELKOM, October 29, 1919.

We protest energetically against the massacre of peaceable protestants.

STUDENTS OF MASSAI ELMASHKOURA COLLEGE.

—

DESSOUK, October 31, 1919.

We protest energetically against the British troops who use freely their arms against the inhabitants of Alexandria, and we request American sympathy.

THE INHABITANTS OF DESSOUK, EGYPT.

—

CAIRO, October 31, 1919.

English forces have begun atrocities and savage rage against unarmed civilians at Alexandria. Women and children were killed. We protest.

WADINXIL SCHOOL.

—

CAIRO, October 31, 1919.

Regret report British troops resumed shooting defenseless women, children, men demonstrating peacefully Alexandria.

COPTIC SCHOOL STUDENTS (Christian School).

—

CAIRO, October 31, 1919.

We appreciate efforts American Nation to save us from British imperialism. Confident efforts will continue for humanity's sake until aim attained. Twenty-fourth instant 81 women and children shot or wounded, Alexandria. Please acknowledge.

OFFICIALS OF THE SULTANIC AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

—

ALEXANDRIA, October 30, 1919.

The Egyptians are being prevented from making peaceful demonstrations by British machine guns. In the name of unhappy Egyptian people we protest against such barbarism committed in the twentieth century.

INHABITANTS OF GABBARY, ALEXANDRIA.

DELLA JAMES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that we begin with Calendar No. 201, Senate joint resolution 51, as the preceding bills have been passed over.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; we were on Calendar No. 200, House bill 3844, at the time when we last considered the calendar, and had not disposed of that bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it is true that that bill was under consideration at the time.

Mr. SMITH of Gorgia. I think we should conclude Calendar No. 200 before we go to No. 201.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will ask that the order be changed so as to begin with Calendar No. 200.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3844) for the relief of Della James, the pending question being on the amendment of the Committee on Claims, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$80" and insert "$57.50," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Della James, of Richmond County, Ga., out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for herself and in behalf of her children, the sum of $57.50 per month for a period of 10 years, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the loss by death of her husband, Alfred J. James, through the explosion of a certain shell used in target practice by the One hundred and seventh Field Artillery, Fifty-third Artillery Brigade, Twenty-eighth Division, at Camp Hancock, near Augusta, Ga., on March 29, 1918, said compensation to be payable from and after March 29, 1918: Provided, That the said money shall be applied to the support of the widow and the said children during their respective minorities, but if she again marries the entire amount thereafter shall be used by her for the benefit of the minor children, and if the mother dies the money shall be paid the oldest child for the minors.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not know that I can add anything to what I said when this bill was up for consideration more than a week ago. I doubt the wisdom of such legislation. I think it would be very much better to follow the practice of the Senate in the past, and pay Della James on the same basis on which other beneficiaries are paid where death has occurred to an employee of the Government. I can not see why the family of a person not in the employ of the Government should receive more compensation on account of an accident than the family of a person employed by the Government. This is a new form of legislation. But if the Senate desires to agree to this bill, adopt this policy, and create a precedent of this character, well and good.

I have no doubt but what sympathy plays a great part in this case, as it does in almost all such cases; but I want the Senate to know what it will lead to in the future. There is not a widow of a soldier of the Civil War, old as they may be, helpless as they are, who is receiving any such amount, with the exception of about 125 widows of officers who served in the Civil War.

I know, Mr. President, it is claimed that the amount that was granted to those widows was granted at a time when the cost of living was a great deal less than it is to-day, and I recognize that fact; but if we are going to take up individual cases and pass bills based upon the sympathy which, of course, every man must have in just such a case, how are we going to escape treating in the same way the hundreds of thousands who are in just as serious a condition, perhaps, as this one widow?

I look at it as being a broader question than this one particular case, and I want to do what I think is my duty by calling attention to what it will lead to in the future if we treat all alike. I would very much prefer, Mr. President, to have the bill amended so as to conform to the practice of the Senate in the past.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What would the widow receive under the regular law or precedent?

Mr. SMOOT. If it were the case of a Government employee?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; a Government employee.

Mr. SMOOT. It would be whatever the person killed had been receiving by way of compensation for one year.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, unlike the Senator from Utah, I think I can add a little something to what I said with reference to this same bill when it was up for discussion a week or two ago, and it will be in the way of further answer to the question which has just been put by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

In the first place, I want to have it understood that the man who was killed was not an employee of the Government at all. He was a farmer, who lived on his little place, which was in the vicinity of the target range run in connection with Fort Hancock, Ga. The target range had been laid out with reference to the presence of the farms of this man and of others like him. A shell fired on the target range killed him on his own place, as he was at work in his own field.

A board of Army officers was convened and made a very thorough investigation of the case and reported that the accident was due entirely to the negligence of the officers who fired the shot, and laid the blame for the death of the man entirely upon those officers. The man left a widow and nine children, the oldest of whom was then 16 years of age, and the ages ranged from that down almost to infants in arms; they were very young children.

The Senator from Utah says that had the man been an employee of the Government his widow would have been entitled to one year's salary. The fact is that had the man been in the employ of the Government, under the Federal compensation act his widow would have received two-thirds of the amount of which her husband was in annual receipt and $10 a month on account of each child. So had that principle been applied she would have been receiving very much more than is provided in the bill; she would have been in receipt of $80 a month on account of the children.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is wrong in stating my position. The Senator is discussing the question as though the man were in the Army and lost his life while in the Army, and his widow would receive compensation under the act dealing with soldiers. I had reference to a civilian who is employed by the Government, and this man being a civilian, I compared the two cases and pointed out the distinction.

Mr. NEW. What I stated is what his widow would have received had he been a civilian employee of the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator is mistaken in that.

Mr. NEW. I think not.

Mr. SMOOT. I am quite sure that the Senator is mistaken.

Mr. NEW. I will refer the Senator to the Federal compensation act approved September 7, 1916, chapter 458, volume 39, United States Statutes at Large, sections (a) and (c).

Mr. SMOOT. Does not that act have reference to the war with Germany?

Mr. NEW. Not at all. But, Mr. President, the Senator speaks of what would have been the case had the man been a soldier. Of course, this man was not a soldier. There is no possible theory of law or justice under which he, a man with nine children, could have been taken as a soldier. Of course, he was exempt under the conscription act. He would not have been taken as a soldier except in case of the very direst extremity, when the last man in the country would have been required.

The report that I filed in favor of the allowance of this relief is not based upon any sympathy, or anything of the kind, but, as I think, as a matter of simple justice to the family of a man who was killed on his own place, engaged in work, under the very eyes of his family, and killed through the negligence of the employees of the United States Government. It seems to me that there are no two sides to the question.

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] assures me that this woman will have to place a number of her minor children in the poorhouse if this relief is not granted.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was mistaken; in the orphans' asylum.

Mr. NEW. But in any event they will become objects of charity, dependent upon the public for support, in case this relief is not granted.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall withdraw all opposition to the bill and let it pass if there is no further opposition to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I merely wish to say that I shall not oppose the bill, but I am in hearty accord with the view expressed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. We are establishing a precedent that will come home to plague us, and it will be fruitful of bills for appropriation from the Treasury that will greatly increase the already overwhelming burden of public expenditure.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from Colorado permit an inquiry?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask some one who may know whether it has been the custom of the United States Government to make compensation in such cases?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have a long list of appropriations in bills—nearly a dozen—for improper and negligent use of firearms on testing grounds.

Mr. KING. They are lump-sum appropriations, are they not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. All of them are.

Mr. THOMAS. But here is a life annuity.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is only a 10-year annuity.

Mr. THOMAS. It is an annuity for a period of years; and we all know how those things grow in Congress. That is my objection to it. I shall not oppose it further, but I wish to be recorded as voting against it.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia if he does not think it a very dangerous precedent for the Government to pay for a tort or negligence of all persons who are in the employ of the Government? I have in my files claims by four individuals who claim to have received injuries at different times, through negligence of employees of the Government, and they want the Government to pay for the injuries which they sustained. In one claim the claimant alleges that a man who was driving a Government van ran into him and seriously injured him. He thinks he ought to have $10,000 for the injuries sustained, and if the injuries are as serious as he claims them to be I have no doubt in the world in a private suit a jury would give him damages in that amount. The Government has had five or six millions of soldiers and employees under its jurisdiction during the past two years. I have not any doubt in the world there have been hundreds and thousands of accidents as a result of the activities of soldiers and employees of the Government. I have not any doubt in the world that hundreds and thousands of individuals have received serious injuries to their person, and property has been damaged and injured as the result of the carelessness and negligence of individuals employed by the Government, in the line of their employment and within the scope of their employment.

It occurs to me that if the Government were responsible for all their acts of omission, all their negligence, all their defaults in duty, we will have claims against the Government aggregating millions and millions of dollars, and we will be establishing a precedent that will call, for years to come, for millions and tens of millions of dollars.

Does the Senator say there is a precedent and that the Government has in the past laid down the proposition that it will pay for all the defaults and negligence of all persons in its employ?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; I have said nothing of the kind, but I do say that in cases of this character there have been a number of bills passed, and that I think it would be utterly indefensible for the Government to decline to pay this claim. Each case stands in a measure upon its own facts. The propriety of the Government paying depends upon the peculiar facts of each case. Here is a case of an Artillery training ground. Here is a farmer quite a distance away, entirely out of the range of legitimate fire, free from all danger if the officers managing the practice grounds did their duty. The farmer is killed by the negligence of those in charge of the training grounds. An investigation is made, and the officers report that the death was due to the indefensible negligence of those in charge, who disregarded distance, disregarded proper direction, and improperly used the target grounds. This man was at work at a place where the Government engineers had, by their decision, advised him that he would be safe. He was working in his field and was killed by the improper and negligent discharge of a gun. Who ought to stand that loss? Ought all the people to stand the loss, or ought the widow and the nine children stand the loss? That is the case that is before us.

The man had nine children, the oldest 16 years and the youngest 4 months old. A tenant farmer at work upon his farm, he had been able to make enough to take care of them. Ought all the public to stand the loss or ought the widow and nine children to stand it?

Mr. KIRBY. May I inquire what committee reported the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. It was reported by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Committee on Claims reported it. It has already passed the House. I only want to add that I called on the legislative reference service of the Library of Congress for a report as to whether similar bills had been passed heretofore, and they furnished me a list of about a dozen bills passed for relief in cases of the improper discharge of guns at Artillery training camps, the bills involving various sums. I ask that this list may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The list referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES LAWS RELATING TO COMPENSATION FOR INJURIES RESULTING FROM TARGET PRACTICE.

1. GENERAL PROVISIONS.

Act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat., 586). Secretary of War authorized to adjust and report on claims for damages to private property, not over $1,000, occasioned by heavy gun fire and target practice.

2. PRIVATE ACTS.

Act of February 16, 1907 (34 Stat., 2413). Payment of $100 for killing of two horses by Army troops engaged in target practice.

Act of February 16, 1907 (34 Stat., 2413). Payment of $325 for damages to property incident to Army target practice.

Act of June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., 1868). Payment of $432.50 for injuries sustained by minor children by accidental explosion of a shell near Artillery target range.

Act of February 20, 1911 (36 Stat., 1995). Payment of $50 for damages to property during Artillery target practice.

Act of March 4, 1911 (36 Stat., 2023). Payment of $1,080 for benefit of surviving mother of person killed through negligence and carelessness of troops engaged in target practice.

Act of February 7, 1913 (37 Stat., 1361). Payment of $500 to father of Navy seaman killed in discharge of his duty during target practice.

Act of July 17, 1914 (38 Stat., 1304). Payment of $2,500 to widow of person killed by marines in discharge of their duty in target practice.

Act of July 17, 1914 (38 Stat., 1309). Payment of $80 for horse killed by shell fire by Artillery while at target practice.

Act of September 15, 1914 (38 Stat., 1456). Payment of $1,500 for loss of one eye, etc., caused by wound received at hands of party of sailors and marines engaged at target practice.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator is perfectly right in saying the Senate has heretofore made appropriations for such cases, but it never made an appropriation in this way, as I stated. It has appropriated a lump sum, the same as it has done in the past for other causes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But that money was appropriated only to pay the damage for the killing of a horse, or something of that kind. Congress has appropriated money to meet the damage in each instance, but this appropriation does not nearly meet the damage to this widow.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] might go a good deal further and call attention to hundreds of millions of dollars which the Government of the United States has paid out when there has been damage done to property of the people in the United States. I am a member of the Committee on Claims, and I have very often become impatient with the idea that when human lives are taken they shall not be considered. I believe we ought to pay this woman, I care not whether she is a poor woman or a rich woman. This man's life was destroyed, and Government officials were responsible for it. I am sure that if we had destroyed a ship or destroyed property belonging to some citizen of the United States we would not have hesitated for a moment, but would have allowed a legitimate claim for the destruction of the property. I am sick and tired, Mr. President, of the idea that when citizens are injured or human lives are being destroyed the claims shall not be paid. As one member of the Committee on Claims I shall certainly support the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I can not permit the statement of the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] to end this discussion without assuring the Senate that my objection to the bill has nothing to do with the circumstances or character of the claim. It is a matter to me of governmental power and of precedent.

The Senator says that if property were destroyed there would be no question about the promptness of enactment of a bill reimbursing the owner. That is only partially true, if we are to consider the vast number of bills which are introduced and which go to the Committee on Claims for property lost. I am quite frequently in receipt of petitions and appeals, both in person and by mail, to urge upon the Committee on Claims of the Senate the immediate consideration of claims for damage or destruction of property. I am very sure, when we consider the number of claims which are so allowed and contrast them with the number of claims which are disallowed and the number upon which final action is not taken, the Senator will modify his statement.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. GRONNA. I have been on the Committee on Claims for a number of years. I know of no claim that has been disallowed where it has been proved beyond a question of doubt that the officials of the Government were at fault.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, I accept the Senator's statement. He knows more about it than I do. I base my opinion upon my experience, which is not identified with the action of the Committee on Claims at all; but I know a great many of the bills which are reported from the Committee on Claims are bitterly contested and a great many of them defeated on the floor of the Senate. So it is, I think, going a little too far to assert that we are discriminating between claims for damages growing out of the destruction of property and those which are intended as compensation for human life. The latter class of claims appeal to me, and I think to every man who is normal, much more keenly than mere compensation for the destruction of property.

The fundamental trouble is that the people are becoming more and more prone to come to Washington and ask for compensation, for reimbursement, for appropriations for everything which occurs in the various complications of human life, both in the social and in the industrial world, and we are quite as prone to receive them, and a good deal more prone to act upon them when they involve the human equation than otherwise.

The taxpayers must be considered sooner or later, because when the burden gets beyond their power to bear it they are going to collapse and the Government will collapse. We may keep on without regard to their condition, and to our duty, until the expenses of the Government so overlap its revenues as to make its financial future not only a contingency but a certainty of an ultimate necessary and radical transformation of our ways of doing business.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to say only one word, Mr. President. Of course, there is no other place to come but to Washington to adjust a claim like this. If the Government is responsible because of a certain department of the Government under which this whole trouble arose and the injury was inflicted, it has not the power to adjust it without some legislative authority. The War Department could not pay any claim, no matter how just and how proper and how right it might be. The claimant must come to Congress for relief in this instance. It seems to me it is an entirely legitimate and proper claim and ought to be paid.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator will allow me, I might suggest the fact that the local board of officers investigating this matter recommended that the Secretary of War bring it to the attention of Congress, that compensation for the damage might be made.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. Are we proceeding under Rule VIII with the consideration of unobjected bills, with one speech of five minutes by each Senator desiring to speak, or is the bill just generally before the Senate? There have been three or four speeches made by some Senators.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia what amount of money is carried by the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Fifty-seven dollars and fifty cents a month.

Mr. SMOOT. It amounts to $6,000 in 10 years.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Fifty-seven and one-half dollars a month to pay a widow on her own behalf and on behalf of her nine minor children, because her husband, a hard-working man, who had been supporting his family, was killed through the negligence of officials of the Government while acting in a governmental capacity! I merely wanted to suggest to the Senator from Georgia, since I have noticed the difficulty he has had in promoting the passage of what seems to me to be a very meritorious measure, that it might facilitate its passage if he would increase the amount from $57.50 a month to something like a million dollars or perhaps a hundred million dollars and make the beneficiaries the people of Upper Silesia instead of a widow and her nine children, citizens of the United States.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

RIOT OF NEGRO SOLDIERS AT HOUSTON, TEX.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 51) directing the Court of Claims to investigate claims for damages growing out of the riot of United States negro soldiers at Houston, Tex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the joint resolution goes over.

ELIZABETH WHITE.

The bill (S. 2672) to carry into effect the findings of the Court of Claims in favor of Elizabeth White, administratrix of the estate of Samuel N. White, deceased, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that bill go over.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Utah to withdraw his objection. The bill, I will state, is in favor of an old lady in the State of Louisiana, who is past 80 years of age. The bill has passed the House of Representatives twice; it has passed the Senate twice; and it was omitted by a clerical error from the omnibus claims bill which passed the Senate finally in March, 1915. It is to provide for the payment of a claim which was found to be just and proper by the Court of Claims. I therefore hope the Senator from Utah will not insist upon his objection. Unless the appropriation carried in the bill is speedily granted, it will not do this old lady any good at all. The claim has gone through the Court of Claims; it has gone through both Houses of Congress. It is due simply to a clerical error that she did not get the money four years ago.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Louisiana is slightly in error, I think, when he says that the necessity for this legislation is due to a clerical error. This claim was carried in the omnibus claims bill at the close of the Sixty-fourth or Sixty-third Congress; I forget which.

Mr. RANSDELL. It was the Sixty-third Congress.

Mr. SMOOT. It was the last omnibus claims bill considered by Congress, no matter what the session was, and, like many other claims, was stricken from the omnibus bill because it did not fall within the character and class of claims which it had been agreed by both Houses of Congress should be paid. That, I will say to the Senator, is the fact of the matter; and that is why I ask that the bill now go over; for if this claim is paid, Mr. President, every claim that was then stricken from that omnibus claims bill should be paid.

Mr. RANSDELL. This claim was not stricken from the omnibus claims bill to which the Senator refers. There was a motion made to strike it from the bill, but the motion was overruled, and the claim was incorporated in the bill as passed by the House. When it came to the Senate the committee reported an amendment striking the claim from the bill, but that was overruled, and it remained in the omnibus claims bill; and, I repeat, but for a clerical error made during the last hours of the session the amount would have been paid to this old lady years ago. However, the bill did pass the Senate in the Sixtieth and the Sixty-first Congresses, and it passed the other House in the Sixty-second and Sixty-third Congresses. We have acted on the bill twice, and when it was included in the omnibus claims bill that was the third time it came before the Senate. It certainly is a meritorious claim.

This old lady, as I have said, is 80 years of age; she is in very distressing circumstances; she needs the money badly; and, Senators, it would be cruel not to give it to her at this time. I therefore appeal to the Senator from Utah not to insist upon his objection, and to let the bill go through.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, this claim was rejected by the Senate on March 3, 1915. At that time a proposed amendment striking this claim from the bill was made the subject of debate; and by a vote of the Senate was rejected.

I know it is hard, Mr. President, to stand here and resist the appeal of a Senator who says that this is the claim of a woman 80 years of age; but this is one of the old claims that fell outside of the rule of the Committee on Claims in considering such matters.

In further answer to the Senator in relation to these claims, I desire to say that this bill only emphasizes a practice that has been followed in the Senate and in the other House for years; and a very bad practice, too. The House pays very little attention to claims when they come up there in the form of House bills, because it is said the Senate will give careful consideration to them. The Senate also has passed bills time and time again thinking that they will not be considered favorably by the House. That is a practice that ought to cease.

Mr. RANSDELL. Let me ask the Senator from Utah if the Court of Claims did not have this claim before it, and if they did not find that this amount was due?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not had time to closely examine the matter.

Mr. RANSDELL. That is what the report says—that the claim was before the Court of Claims and they found a certain amount was due for sugar and molasses taken, and that a certain amount was due for the use of a steamboat that belonged to the estate of the deceased.

Mr. SMOOT. If we had time to call a quorum of the Senate to discuss this question, decide as to its merits, and then take a vote upon it, I would not now ask that it go over; but we have not time now to fully consider the matter.

Mr. RANSDELL. If we take that course it means the denial of justice to this lady. The bill, I repeat, was acted on four years ago; it was in the omnibus claims bill, and was stricken out because of a clerical error. Under those circumstances, it seems to me very hard for the Senator from Utah to insist upon his objection in view of the fact that the bill has twice passed the Senate, twice passed the other House, and had been included in the omnibus claims bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I shall have to ask that the bill go over for the present, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JOHN H. RHEINLANDER.

The bill (S. 1302) for the relief of John H. Rheinlander was announced as next in order.

Mr. SPENCER. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

THE TEXAS CO.

The bill (S. 1255) authorizing the Texas Co. to bring suit against the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no report from any of the departments upon this measure, and I ask that it go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I should like to know to what department the Senator from Utah is referring. I wish to know for my own guidance.

Mr. SMOOT. The bill relates to damages caused by a collision, and I do not know whether the collision was with a steamer under the control of the Treasury Department—that is, a steamer of the Public Health Service—or whether the vessel was under the control of the War Department; but whatever department had control of the vessel which was involved in the collision, I think the committee ought to secure a report from that department, secure full details, and ascertain what, if any, action has been taken by the department.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well; I will endeavor to have that course pursued.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Utah that the committee looked upon the bill merely as conferring authority to present to the Court of Claims the question of damages resulting to the steamer Texas from the collision between that steamer and a United States steamship. Every detail of the claim will be considered by the Court of Claims? The bill appropriates no money, but merely, I repeat, confers authority on the Court of Claims to hear the case.

Mr. SMOOT. Similar claims to the one involved in this measure have been settled, as they will be settled in the future, after a survey made by the officials of the department controlling the steamer. I can not see why this claim should be treated in any other way than that, and before I would feel justified in letting the claim go to the Court of Claims I should want to know whether the department has taken any action in respect to it, whether a survey was made, and what the findings were.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 413) for the relief of the Canadian Car & Foundry Co. (Ltd.) was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I ask that that bill be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

TRANSFER OF SURPLUS MACHINE TOOLS.

The bill (S. 3125) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer certain surplus machine tools and other equipment to the Federal Board for Vocational Education was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 1, after the word "Department," to insert "on the filing with the War Department of an itemized receipt for the articles thus transferred. The Federal Board for Vocational Education shall annually report to Congress the disposition and use of the articles, the transfer of which is herein authorized," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War shall have authority to transfer to the Federal Board for Vocational Education, without compensation therefor, certain surplus machine tools and other equipment of the approximate value of $250,000 belonging to the War Department and now in possession of the Federal board and being used by that board as equipment in schools for vocational education controlled by the board. Property so transferred shall be dropped from the records of the War Department on the filing with the War Department of an itemized receipt for the articles thus transferred. The Federal Board for Vocational Education shall annually report to Congress the disposition and use of the articles, the transfer of which is herein authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. I think this bill or a bill similar to it was passed a few days ago.

Mr. SMOOT. There was objection made to the bill at that time, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. KING. I thought the objection was withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INSTRUCTION OF COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 3126) authorizing the detail of commissioned officers of the Army to take courses of instruction within two years from date of commission was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no provision of existing law with reference to the detail or assignment of officers of the Regular Army shall hereafter operate to prevent within a period of two years from date of first commission the detail or assignment of any commissioned officer of the Regular Army to take a basic course of instruction at a service school in the duties of his arm or branch of the service.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOAD LINES FOR VESSELS.

The bill (S. 575) to establish load lines for certain vessels was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I ask that for the bill the title of which has just been read there be substituted Calendar No. 239, being the bill (H. R. 3621) to establish load lines for certain vessels. The House bill is practically the same as the Senate bill, with one or two minor changes, perhaps bettering the bill somewhat. I was authorized by the Commerce Committee to report the House bill and ask that it be substituted on the calendar for the Senate bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill on the calendar and the Senate bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, does the Senator from Florida insist upon taking up the measure now? It is a rather long bill, consisting of eight or nine pages.

Mr. FLETCHER. It is quite a long bill, but I will say to the Senator that the bill has been referred to the Shipping Board and the Department of Commerce and both have approved it. It was really prepared as a result of the joint work of the Shipping Board and the Department of Commerce, through their officers, and they regard it as very important.

I know there is some objection to the idea of establishing a load line at all; but we are about the only country in the world that has not some provision of that kind in its maritime laws. The department feels it is quite important; we have no legislation of that character now, and it is believed that it is very desirable that we make provision for establishing a load line below which vessels can not be loaded on salt water.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, may I suggest to the Senator, too, that as I understand this will enable our officials to meet discriminations on the part of other countries that work against our shipping by reason of their load-line laws? At present, as we have no such law, we can not do it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Yes; that is one reason why they think it is important to establish by law a load line. The method of doing it has met the approval of the departments, and it is considered a very important thing. If we are going to do it at all, we ought to do it now, in order that the necessary machinery may be established for taking care of that situation. They consider it quite important.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator if hearings have been held upon this bill?

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not recall that we had any formal hearings on it. The committee considered it during the last Congress and reported out a bill, and, of course, we conferred with the officers in the different departments, the Shipping Board people, and the Department of Commerce people. I do not know that we had any formal hearings on it. I do not think we did.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say that we had no formal hearings, and no objections have come to the committee against it from any of the shipping interests. It was pending before the committee for quite a good while, and, as the Senator says, was reported at the last Congress.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have received only one letter on the subject, and that is from Mr. Pendleton, of Pendleton Bros. (Inc.), shipbuilders and brokers, of New York. They oppose the passage of any law regulating the load-line proposition.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Florida that I have not studied the bill carefully, but I observe that there are a number of penalties in it, and apparently it is a very important bill, and I do not think we ought to pass it in a hurry. I think I shall ask that it go over for to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Order of Business 239 is substituted for Order of Business 208, and it will be passed over.

Mr. FLETCHER subsequently said:

Mr. President the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. GRONNA] made inquiry with regard to hearings on this load-line bill. I stated that the only opposition to it that had come to my notice was a letter from Mr. Fields S. Pendleton, of Pendleton Bros., and I think, in fairness to both sides and to all concerned, that that letter might go into the RECORD, so that when this matter is taken up again for consideration it can be referred to. I ask to have the letter included in the RECORD in connection with the bill.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEW YORK, October 18, 1919.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Apropos of our conversation of Thursday, I write to ask if you would have the load-line bill (S. 575) recalled to the Commerce Committee, so that the owners might be heard, because, in my judgment, it is a matter that means a great deal to American shipping and is too important a matter to be enacted into law until American shipowners have an opportunity to present their side of the case.

To my knowledge, this matter has been before Congress a number of times. I am quite sure Gen. Grosvenor was chairman of the House committee when it came up, and after a hearing and protest by the owners it was turned down. We took it up with Senator Frye and Senator Mallory, and they were both against the bill, so we did not have much worry in the Senate, as they were the leaders on both sides in the Commerce Committee on shipping matters.

We believe that the loading of a ship should be left to the master. He knows his ship, he knows the kind of cargo he is carrying, and he knows the voyage he must make, and whether the weather will be fair or stormy in the latitudes that he goes into.

A proper load line from Pensacola to Habana, in January, is not a proper load line for the same month from Pensacola to Boston, for on the latter voyage a vessel would ice up, and sometimes get from 300 to 500 tons of ice on her hull and rigging. Furthermore, a load line from Hampton Roads to Boston in the summer time is not a proper load line from Hampton Roads to Boston in the wintertime. The master of the ship decides all of these things, knowing how his ship performs in gales and storms; he is risking his own life and has more at stake than anybody else. He is supreme in command, and it is not right to dictate to him any more than it is how he should handle his ship in a storm.

You could not load a ship any deeper with a load line on a short passage, when the weather is calm, than you could on a long passage, where you will have storms. One great advantage in not having a load line is that the master, by being able to use his own judgment, can carry more cargo at times than others, and in that way even up, so that in the end he can carry more tons of cargo and safer than if he was loading to the same draft at all times. This is the method of all prudent and skilled shipmasters. I can show you that vessels range from 10 per cent to 20 per cent difference in the loading of deadweight cargoes on different voyages and at different seasons of the year; and it will be time enough for the gentlemen who urge this legislation to show a single vessel that was lost by reason of being overloaded.

Senator, we have too much governmental regulation on shipping now, too many delays for inspections, time lost in making applications, in getting inspectors to come on board of ships, in making their reports and filing them in the customhouse, and going through the routine of work in order to get the ship's papers, so that she may clear. All of these delays are costly.

The cargo-carrying trade of the future will be fuel, and Hampton Roads is going to control the world. A load line that permits a ship to load down only to a certain point at Hampton Roads in the summer time for a voyage around Cape Horn or Cape Good Hope will make her lose from 600 to 800 tons of cargo, for that is where the ship will get her stormy weather in their winter season. She will be lightened some 600 to 800 tons before getting to those points, and consequently would lose the freight on this amount of cargo, meaning from $20,000 to $30,000 on each voyage.

It is important that our ships be able, owing to the high cost of fuel, to take all of the bunker coal possible when leaving our ports. We are continually lightering the ship every day from 25 to 50 tons. We need this to overcome the excessive bunkering charges in foreign countries.

A few years ago a merchant in Europe or Africa could buy a 5,000-ton cargo of coal at Hampton Roads for $9,000, or as low as $1.80 per ton. To-day, for that same cargo, he must pay $175,000, or $35 per ton, cost and freight, before the ship sails. On his first cargo he would carry the coal in his own ship and the freight would be paid in Europe, while now American vessels have just begun to take away this trade.

The coal trade is the main thing that has built up England's shipping business. She exported before the war 87,000,000 tons of coal and last year 27,000,000 tons. Bunker coal to-day in England is more than $25 per ton, while ours at Hampton Roads is $7.50. We shall need within the next 18 months all of the advantages that we can get. The shipping situation is no longer a fight of individuals and corporations; it has narrowed down to a fight of nations—Great Britain against the United States, with Japan crawling slowly for the control of the Pacific. England has never failed to protect her shipping at any cost, and since she started subsidies, in 1839, figuring interest at 6 per cent, she has paid, up to the beginning of the war, her shipowners $3,500,000,000, which was more than her shipping was worth at that time.

It is a fight for freight to a finish. I predict that within 18 months we shall see the lowest freight rate, taking into consideration the cost of operation, that we have ever seen. There will be more ships than there are cargoes, and whoever can do the business the cheapest will continue. The Englishman has always had the business and will fight hard to hold it. We can not expect to drive them out of business on the same basis of profit that we can attract new American capital into it. With more ships than cargoes, the freight rate will drop to a point that makes it unprofitable for one or the other to continue shipbuilding. The question is: Will Great Britain be able to build and operate cheaper than the United States? If we have some little advantage now in the load line, we can not afford to give it up.

Very respectfully,

FIELDS S. PENDLETON.

WATER SUPPLY, SUNNYSIDE, UTAH.

The bill (S. 46) for the protection of the water supply of the town of Sunnyside, Utah, was considered in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public lands within the several townships and subdivisions thereof hereinafter enumerated, situated in the county of Carbon and State of Utah, are hereby reserved from all forms of location, entry, or appropriation, whether under the mineral or nonmineral land laws of the United States, and set aside as a municipal water-supply reserve for the use and benefit of the people of the town of Sunnyside, a municipal corporation of the State of Utah, as follows, to wit: The south half of south half of section 34, in township 13 south, range 14 east, Salt Lake base and meridian; and also the following lands which, when surveyed, will be described as follows, to wit: All of section 11; west half of section 12; all of section 13; and all of section 14, in township 14 south, range 14 east, of Salt Lake base and meridian.

SEC. 2. That the lands heretofore described and reserved for municipal water-supply purposes shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with and at the exclusive expense of the town of Sunnyside, Utah, for the purpose of storing, conserving, and protecting from pollution the said water supply, and preserving, improving, and increasing the timber growth on said lands, to more fully accomplish such purposes; and to that end said municipality shall have the right, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to the use of any and all parts of the lands reserved for the storage and conveying of water and construction and maintenance thereon of all improvements for such purposes.

SEC. 3. That the said Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to prescribe and enforce such regulations as he may find necessary to carry out the purpose of this act, including the right to forbid persons other than those authorized by him and the municipal authorities of said municipal corporation from entering or otherwise trespassing upon these lands, and any violation of this act or of regulations issued thereunder shall be punishable as is provided for in section 50 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, approved March 4, 1909" (35 Stat. L., p. 1098), as amended by the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 857).

SEC. 4. That this act shall be subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired under any law of the United States, and the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2189) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SIERRA NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The bill (S. 2789) for the consolidation of forest lands in the Sierra National Forest, Calif., and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized to accept on behalf of the United States title to any lands within the Sierra National Forest, Calif., if in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture the public interests will be benefited thereby and the lands are chiefly valuable for national forest purposes, and in exchange therefor may give not to exceed an equal value of such national forest land or timber or assignable certificates for timber within the national forests in California as may be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture, and in determining the relative values of the lands or timber to be exchanged, consideration shall be given to any reservations which either party may make of timber, minerals, or easements. Such assignable certificates for timber shall be issued under the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture, shall be for the agreed value of lands acquired, and shall be acceptable only at their face value when accompanying bids for the purchase of national forest timber or in payment for national forest timber in California when purchased under existing laws and regulations. Timber given in such exchanges shall be cut and removed under the laws and regulations relating to the national forests, and under the direction and supervision and in accordance with the requirements of the Secretary of Agriculture. Lands conveyed to the United States under this act shall, upon acceptance of title, become a part of the Sierra National Forest.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMISSION ON RURAL AND URBAN HOME SETTLEMENT.

The bill (S. 2444) to create the commission on rural and urban home settlement was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BAR OF DISLOYALISTS.

The bill (S. 2323) to amend an act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States" was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I do not know whether the Senator from Utah is informed in regard to the provisions of this bill. I should like to state the substance of it, and then, if the Senator has any objection, all right.

Mr. KING. I will withhold the objection for a moment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Section 3480 of the Revised Statutes prohibits any person who participated in the so-called Rebellion from prosecuting any claim against the United States. Since that time the soldiers and the postmasters have been allowed to collect their claims when found upon the books of the Treasury Department to be due these parties for services performed prior to the war. The only persons who have not been allowed to collect their claims are the sailors and the marines, and this bill repeals that section in their interest. That is all it is. It simply allows the marines and sailors to collect the claims due them on the books of the Treasury. It amounts to only about twenty to fifty thousand dollars. Having paid the postmasters and having paid the soldiers, I do not see and the committee did not see why we should not pay the sailors and marines.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, in line 4, after the words "United States," to insert "approved July 6, 1914," and in line 6, after the word "Revenue," to insert a hyphen and the word "Cutter," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to repeal section 3480 of the Revised Statutes of the United States," approved July 6, 1914, be amended by adding after the word "Army" the words "Navy, Marine Corps, and Revenue-Cutter Service."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN OREGON AND CALIFORNIA.

The bill (S. 2798) authorizing the removal of stumps from cut-over Oregon and California lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether this involves any expense to the Government.

Mr. SMOOT. None whatever.

Mr. NORRIS. In that connection, I notice that upon the face of the bill it does not appear what the object is. There is no money paid for the removal of these stumps. What reason is there for the enactment of the measure, and what is expected to be accomplished by it?

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps I had better read the report from the Acting Secretary of the Interior. That explains it in as few words as possible. This is a letter addressed by the Acting Secretary of the Interior to Mr. FERRIS, the chairman of the Public Lands Committee of the House. He says:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, August 14, 1917.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: I am in receipt of your favor of the 4th instant, transmitting a copy of H. R. 5645—

That is the same as this bill—

with the request that a report be furnished to the committee thereon, together with such suggestions and recommendations as I may desire to make.

This bill, entitled "A bill authorizing removal of stumps from cut-over Oregon and California lands," had its origin in a request addressed to the department through members of the Oregon delegation, asking for the privilege of removing stumps suitable for making ship knees from the cut-over Oregon and California grant lands, which were revested in the United States by the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stat., 218).

Under the act of revestment, no authority exists for the disposition of either the land or the timber thereon until due classification and an order for the restoration thereof. The request, accordingly, could not be granted under the existing law.

There is an urgent emergency, however, for ship-knee timber, such as may be secured from stumps standing on the Oregon and California cut-over lands. The removal of the stumps will add to the value of the land when it is ready for disposition. The bill enables this department to protect all possible interests of the United States or others which may be affected by it, and I would, accordingly, recommend its passage.

Cordially, yours,

ALEXANDER T. VOGELSANG,
Acting Secretary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 1, after line 11, to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make any and all regulations found necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior shall be, and is hereby, authorized to grant within his discretion free permits for the removal of stumps from cut-over timberlands embraced within the former grant to the Oregon & California Railroad Co. and revested in the United States by the act of June 9, 1916 (39 Stats., p. 218), subject to such terms and conditions as he may impose for the protection of all rights and interests of the United States and such others, if any, that may be affected thereby.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make any and all regulations found necessary to carry into effect the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MATTHEW M'DONALD.

The bill (S. 1743) for the relief of Matthew McDonald was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will withdraw that objection for a minute. Mr. McDonald was only 11 years of age when he enlisted in the Navy. He served two months, and was taken out by his mother on a letter from the governor of the State. On the records of the Navy he is carried as a deserter. Of course, he had no right to enlist without the consent of his parents before he was 18. At his own request an amendment is recommended to the bill that no pension shall ever be paid on account of his service; so it is proposed simply to correct his record.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator whether automatically, under existing law, he would not receive a pension?

Mr. CURTIS. No; the bill especially provides that he shall not, and the amendment was recommended at his request. Under the ordinary wording of bills he would draw a pension; but at his suggestion an amendment was prepared providing that no pension, back pay, or bounty shall ever be paid on account of that service.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to my colleague that a provision of that kind is so uncommon in bills of this nature that I was surprised when I read it.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection. I supposed that the plan was the one usually pursued, namely, to receive a pensionable status, and then the first thing the deserter does is to get a pension.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs with an amendment, in line 7, after the word "shall," to strike out "accrue prior to the passage of this act" and insert "be allowed, and no back pay and bounty shall be paid because of the enactment of this legislation," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of the pension laws Matthew McDonald shall be hereafter held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the naval service of the United States Navy October 20, 1863: Provided, That no pension shall be allowed and no back pay and bounty shall be paid because of the enactment of this legislation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3201) fixing the salary of the district attorney for the eastern district of New York was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LANDS IN IDAHO.

The bill (S. 1300) to authorize the sale of certain lands at or near Minidoka, Idaho, for railroad purposes was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, on page 1, line 8, after the word "by," to strike out "appraisement" and insert "the Secretary of the Interior, in order to return the expenditure heretofore made or proposed for the irrigation of the lands," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to sell and convey to Oregon Short Line Railroad Co., a corporation organized and existing under the laws of the State of Utah and authorized to do business in the State of Idaho, its successors and assigns, for railroad purposes, and at a price to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior in order to return the expenditure heretofore made or proposed for the irrigation of the lands at not less than $50 per acre, and under such terms, conditions, and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, the following described land, situated in Minidoka County, Idaho:

All that part of the west half of the southeast quarter and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 2, and the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter and the north half of the northwest quarter of section 11, all in township 8 south, range 25 east of the Boise meridian, within the following described area:

Beginning at the intersection of the present southeasterly right of way boundary of the Twin Falls Branch of the Oregon Short Line Railroad Co. with the section line common to said sections 2 and 11, 100 feet southeasterly from and at right angles to the center line of main track of said railroad, said intersection also bearing north 89° 5′ west, 460.1 feet from the quarter section corner common to said sections 2 and 11; thence north 40° 25′ east along said southeasterly right of way boundary, being 100 feet southeasterly from and parallel to said center line of main track, for a distance of 1,726.8 feet; thence south 0° 1′ east, and parallel to the north and south center line of said section 2, for a distance of 1,332.6 feet, to a point in the section line common to said sections 2 and 11; thence continuing south 0° 1′ east, and parallel to the north and south center line of said section 11, for a distance of 1,320 feet, to the south line of the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter and the north half of the northwest quarter of said section 11; thence north 89° 5′ west, along said south line, for a distance of 2,229.5 feet, to a point in the present southeasterly right of way boundary of said railroad; thence north 40° 25′ east, along said right of way boundary, and being 100 feet southeasterly from and parallel to said center line of main track, for a distance of 1,710.4 feet, to the point of beginning, and containing in all 67.87 acres, more or less, within the proposed pumping unit of the Minidoka project of the United States Reclamation Service.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

IRRIGATION AND RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS.

The bill (S. 2188) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. L., p. 1133), was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. L., p. 1133), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That section 4 of the act of August 18, 1894, entitled 'An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes,' be, and the same is hereby, amended so that the 10-year period within which any State shall cause the lands applied for under said act to be irrigated and reclaimed, as provided in said section, as amended by the act of June 11, 1896, shall begin to run from the date of approval by the Secretary of the Interior of the State's application for the segregation of such lands; and if actual construction of reclamation works is not begun within three years after the segregation of the lands or within such further period as shall be allowed by the Secretary of the Interior, the said Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may restore such lands to the public domain; and if the State fails, within 10 years from the date of such segregation, to cause the whole or any part of the lands so segregated to be so irrigated and reclaimed, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, continue said segregation for a period not exceeding five years, or may, in his discretion, restore such lands to the public domain upon the expiration of the 10-year period or of any extension thereof."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSITION OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 2379) to provide for the disposition of certain public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 847), as amended by the act of August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 497), and which are no longer needed, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior any lands which have been withdrawn under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 847), as amended by the act of Congress approved August 24, 1912 (37 Stat. L., p. 497), for the purpose of exploratory drilling to discover water supplies for irrigation or other purposes, and which have had wells or other permanent improvements placed thereon by and at the expense of the United States, are no longer needed for the purpose for which they were withdrawn and improved, the Secretary of the Interior may appraise the lands, together with the improvements thereon, and thereafter sell the same for not less than the appraised value at public auction to the highest bidder, after giving public notice of the time and place of sale by posting upon the land and publication for not less than 30 days in a newspaper of general circulation in the vicinity of the land.

SEC. 2. That upon payment of the purchase price the Secretary of the Interior is authorized by appropriate patent to convey all the right, title, and interest in and to said lands to the purchaser at said sale, subject, however, to such reservations, limitations, or conditions as said Secretary may deem proper: Provided, That not over 160 acres shall be sold to any one person.

SEC. 3. That the moneys derived from the sale of such lands and improvements be disposed of as are other receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RETIREMENT OF SCHOOL-TEACHERS.

The bill (H. R. 5818) for the retirement of public-school teachers in the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am in favor of this bill with some modifications, but it will need considerable attention, and as there are only a few moments of the morning hour remaining I ask that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

GRADE OF LIEUTENANT GENERAL.

The bill (S. 3224) relating to the creation in the Army of the United States of the grade of lieutenant general was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

TRAVEL ALLOWANCES FOR ARMY.

The bill (S. 3239) to amend the Army appropriation act for 1920, so as to authorize travel allowances to persons discharged from disciplinary barracks and other places of confinement other than honorably, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, and for other purposes," approved July 11, 1919, under the heading "Transportation of the Army and its supplies," be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the following words: "for travel allowance to persons on their discharge from the United States disciplinary barracks or from any place in which they have been held under a sentence of dishonorable discharge and confinement for more than six months, or from the Government Hospital for the Insane, after transfer thereto from such barracks or place to their homes (or elsewhere as they may elect), provided the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the place of last enlistment"; and substituting therefor the following words: "for travel allowance to all persons discharged the service of the United States otherwise than honorably, from the place of discharge or release, if thereafter detained at the Government Hospital for the Insane or otherwise held in restraint under proper authority, to their bona fide homes (or elsewhere as they may elect with the approval of the discharging officer), provided the cost in each case shall not be greater than to the man's bona fide home."

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, on page 2, line 9, to strike out the words "'if thereafter," and in line 10 to insert the word "whether," so that the clause would read:

For travel allowance to all persons discharged the service of the United States otherwise than honorably, from the place of discharge or release, whether detained at the Government Hospital for the Insane, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIMS BY INDIANS IN WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 157) authorizing the Indian tribes and individual Indians, or any of them, residing in the State of Washington and west of the summit of the Cascade Mountains to submit to the Court of Claims certain claims growing out of treaties and otherwise was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That all claims of whatsoever nature, both legal and equitable, of the tribes and bands of Indians, or any of them, with whom any of the treaties of Medicine Creek, dated December 26, 1854; Point Elliott, dated January 22, 1855; Point-no-Point, dated January 26, 1855; the Quin-ai-elts, dated May 8, 1859, growing out of said treaties, or any of them, including claims for allotments of land, or the value thereof, which they failed to receive under any of said treaties; and that all claims of whatever nature, both legal and equitable, which the Muckelshoot, San Juan Island Indians; Nook-Sack, Chinook, Upper Chehalis, Lower Chehalis, and Humptulip Tribes or Bands of Indians, or any of them (with whom no treaty has been made), may have against the United States shall be submitted to the Court of Claims, with right of appeal by either party to the Supreme Court of the United States for determination and jurisdiction, both legal and equitable, is hereby conferred upon the Court of Claims to hear and determine any and all suits brought hereunder and to render final judgment therein: Provided, That the right of appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States shall not extend to those tribes or bands of Indians, or any of them, with whom no treaty has been made: Provided further, That the court shall also consider and determine any legal or equitable defenses, set-offs, or counter claims which the United States may have against any of said tribes, bands, or individual Indians.

SEC. 2. That the Court of Claims shall advance the cause or causes upon its docket for hearing, and shall have authority to determine and adjudge all rights and claims, both legal and equitable, of said Indians, tribes or bands of Indians, or any of them, and of the United States in the premises, notwithstanding lapse of time or statutes of limitation.

SEC. 3. That suit or suits instituted hereunder shall be begun by such Indians, tribe, tribes, or bands of Indians, as parties plaintiff, and the United States as the party defendant. The petition or petitions may be verified by attorney or attorneys employed by such tribes or Indians upon information and belief as to the facts therein alleged, and no other verification shall be necessary: Provided, That the attorney or attorneys of said tribes or bands of Indians, or any of them, shall be selected by the claimant Indian or Indians with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and upon final determination of such suit or suits the Court of Claims shall have jurisdiction to fix and determine a reasonable fee, not to exceed 10 per cent of the recovery, to be paid to the attorneys employed by the said tribes or bands of Indians, or any of them, and the same shall be included in the decree and shall be paid out of any sum or sums found to be due said tribes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no report here from the Interior Department or from any other department of the Government.

Mr. JONES of Washington rose.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator from Washington kindly explain this bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I will say to the Senator that at the last Congress the Committee on Indian Affairs had quite extensive hearings on a similar bill. Representatives from the Bureau of Indian Affairs were present, as well as representatives of the Indians. The bill was referred to a subcommittee and hearings were had. The subcommittee reported to the full committee, which took the matter up very carefully and reported the bill in exactly this form, and it passed the Senate at the last Congress. The amendment offered to the bill here was suggested by the department. I trust there will be no objection to it.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment, on page 3, line 2, to insert the words "within five years from the date of the passage of this act," so as to read:

That suit or suits instituted hereunder shall be begun within five years from the date of the passage of this act by such Indians, tribe, tribes, or bands of Indians as parties plaintiff and the United States as the party defendant.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CORRECTION OF ERROR IN INDIAN ALLOTMENT.

The bill (S. 3115) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to correct an error in an Indian allotment was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That for the purpose of correcting an error made in the allotment on the public domain of Domatil E. Lafournaise, an Indian of the Turtle Mountain Band of Chippewa, whereby the same is in conflict with the allotment of Jenoir Brien, a member of the same band, and to clear title to the land allotted to Jenoir Brien, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to issue a patent in fee to lot 5 of the southeast quarter of section 6, township 159 north, range 103 west of the principal meridian in North Dakota, in favor of Henry F. Thomas, holder of a deed to the allotment of Domatil E. Lafournaise (now Patnaude); said patent to issue upon the execution by Henry F. Thomas of a quitclaim deed in favor of E. L. Hugelen, purchaser of the allotment of Jenoir Brien and erroneously included in the allotment of Domatil E. Lafournaise.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE IRISH QUESTION.

The resolution (S. Res. 215) providing that whenever the United States becomes a member of the league of nations this Government should present to the council or the assembly of the league the state of affairs in Ireland and the right of its people to self-government was announced as next in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

NONMAILABLE MATTER.

The bill (S. 729) to amend section 217 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 217 of the act of Congress entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909, be amended by striking therefrom the words "kill, or" in the last sentence thereof and by adding thereto the following:

"Whoever shall knowingly deposit or cause to be deposited for mailing or delivery, or shall knowingly cause to be delivered by mail according to the direction thereon, or at any place at which it is directed to be delivered by the person to whom it is addressed, anything declared by this section to be nonmailable, with the design, intent, or purpose to kill the person to whom such article or thing is addressed, or any other person, shall suffer death.

"Any person violating any provisions of this act may be tried and punished either in the district in which the unlawful article or thing was mailed, or to which it was carried by mail for delivery according to the direction thereon, or in which it was caused to be delivered by mail to the person to whom it was addressed."

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, on page 2, line 4, to strike out the words "suffer death," and to insert the words "upon conviction, be punished by death or imprisonment for not less than 20 years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENT OF JUDICIAL CODE.

The bill (S. 2632) to amend section 24 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, some Senators have asked me what the bill means. It is the language of the law as it is now, but under the present law if a man has a claim against the Government he has to come here to Washington and sue before the Court of Claims if the amount involved is over $10,000. If a man in South Dakota has an honest claim against the Government involving over $10,000, he has to come to Washington, employ a lawyer, and bring a suit here. The bill extends the jurisdiction to $100,000, and allows claimants to bring suits in their own districts, where the Government has its own district attorneys and is prepared to defend its own cases. I do not think there ought to be any limitation at all, but the committee placed the limitation at $100,000.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RETIRED PAY FOR CIVIL WAR SERVICE.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 146, the bill (S. 131) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade.

Mr. SMOOT. We did not reach that bill to-day, I will say to the Senator. We began with calendar No. 200.

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand, but this bill has been passed over several times. If it were the understanding that we should continue the consideration of the calendar until completed, I would not bring it up at this time; but I should like to have it disposed of.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that by unanimous consent it was agreed that we should take up the calendar under Rule VIII, beginning with Calendar No. 200.

Mr. McCUMBER. If that was the unanimous-consent agreement, Mr. President, I do not want to violate it.

STEPHEN A. WINCHELL.

The bill (S. 1374) for the relief of Stephen A. Winchell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

The bill (S. 3288) further to regulate commerce among the States and with foreign nations and to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DETACHED SERVICE OF ARMY OFFICERS.

The bill (S. 3238) relating to detached service of officers of the Regular Army was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That after the termination of the emergency incident to the war with Germany and Austria-Hungary, in the construction of any law relating to detached service of the officers of the Regular Army, all service performed by such officers during the said emergency shall be regarded as service with troops or organizations thereof.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROMOTION OF AMERICANIZATION.

The bill (S. 3315) to promote Americanization by providing for cooperation with the several States in the education of non-English-speaking persons and the assimilation of foreign-born residents, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

AMENDMENT OF FARM-LOAN ACT.

The bill (H. R. 9065) to amend sections 3, 8, 10, 12, 20, and 21 of the act approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we can not consider that bill in the five minutes remaining, and I ask that it may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

PUNISHMENT OF SEDITIOUS ACTS.

The bill (S. 3317) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts was announced as next in order.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I think I will ask that the bill may go over. There are certain Senators very much interested in the bill who are not present. I would like to make a request in regard to the bill. The bill was introduced on behalf of the Judiciary Committee, referred to that committee, and immediately reported back, so that the bill was never printed until after the report of the committee. It has been suggested to me that because of the importance of the subject covered by the bill a little more publicity ought to be given to the measure. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator whether there was a committee report accompanying the bill?

Mr. STERLING. There is no committee report with the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no report indicated on my calendar, but I wondered whether a mistake had not been made in printing the calendar.

Mr. STERLING. No; there is no committee report. It was ordered to be reported favorably without amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator intend to submit a report upon the bill?

Mr. STERLING. No; no further report. I would like to say that I would not be quite content to leave the bill on the calendar, and I shall move its consideration at the earliest practicable date.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD, and, without objection, it is so ordered.

The bill is as follows:

[In the Senate of the United States. Oct. 22 (calendar day, Oct. 27), 1919. Mr. STERLING introduced the following bill, which was read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. Oct. 22 (calendar day, Oct. 27), 1919. Reported by Mr. STERLING without amendment.]

A bill (S. 3317) to prohibit and punish certain seditious acts against the Government of the United States and to prohibit the use of the mails for the purpose of promoting such acts.

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to advocate or advise the overthrow, or to write, or knowingly to print, publish, utter, sell, or distribute any document, book, circular, paper, journal, or other written or printed communication, in or by which there is advised the overthrow, by force or violence, or by physical injury to person or property of the Government of the United States or of all government, or to advise or advocate a change in the form of government or the Constitution of the United States or resistance to the authority thereof by force or violence or by physical injury to person or property, or by force or violence to prevent, hinder, or delay or attempt to prevent, hinder, or delay the execution of any law of the United States.

SEC. 2. That the display or exhibition at any meeting, gathering, or parade, public or private, of any flag, banner, or emblem intended by the person or persons displaying or exhibiting the same to symbolize or indicate a purpose to overthrow by force or violence or by physical injury to person or property, the Government of the United States or all government, is hereby declared to be unlawful.

SEC. 3. That every document, book, circular, paper, journal, or other written or printed communication in or by which there is advocated or advised the overthrow by force or violence or by physical injury to person or property of the Government of the United States or of all government, or in or by which there is advocated or advised the use of force or violence or physical injury to or the seizure or destruction of persons or property as a means toward the accomplishment of economic, industrial, or political changes is hereby declared to be nonmailable and the same shall not be conveyed in the mails or delivered from any post office or by any letter carrier: Provided, That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to authorize any person other than an employee of the Dead Letter Office duly authorized thereto or other person upon a search warrant authorized by law to open any letter not addressed to himself.

SEC. 4. That it shall be unlawful to import or cause to be imported into the United States or any place subject to its jurisdiction any matter declared by section 3 of this act to be nonmailable or to transport or cause to be transported any such matter from one State to another or into any place subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

SEC. 5. That whoever shall use or attempt to use the mails or the Postal Service of the United States for the transmission of any matter declared by section 3 of this act to be nonmailable or who shall violate any other of the provisions of this act shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both, and if an alien, shall be, upon the expiration of his sentence, deported from the United States and forever barred from reentering the United States or any Territory under its jurisdiction.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

The bill (H. R. 9821) to amend an act entitled "An act relating to the Metropolitan police force of the District of Columbia," approved February 28, 1901, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

DEPORTATION OF UNDESIRABLE ALIENS.

The bill (H. R. 6750) to deport certain undesirable aliens and to deny readmission to those deported was announced as next in order.

Mr. GRONNA. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over. This completes the call of the calendar.

RETIRED PAY FOR CIVIL WAR SERVICE.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Calendar No. 146, the bill (S. 131) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. McCUMBER. Will the Senator tell me why he objects?

Mr. KING. Because I do not think the bill has merit, from what I understand of the facts concerning it.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service in the regular or volunteer forces prior to April 9, 1865, shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade upon the retired list by reason of such service: Provided, That if such advanced rank or rating shall not carry with it an increase of pay of 20 per cent, or if there be no higher enlisted grade to which advancement may be made as herein authorized, then and in such cases said men shall receive an increase of pay of 20 per cent over and above the retired pay actually received by them, respectively, at the time of the passage of this act.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act shall operate to reduce the pay of any person in the Navy or Marine Corps, and that its provisions shall not operate to create any claim for back pay.

SEC. 3. That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act be, and are hereby, repealed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I will simply read the last paragraph of the report of Franklin D. Roosevelt, Acting Secretary of the Navy. He says:

All the enlisted men (approximately 27) to be benefited by this bill (S. 131) have had at least 30 years' service for enlisted men and are not placed on the retired list unless they have had that amount of service or more. Similar benefits to those provided in this bill were given several years ago to all commissioned officers of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps and the Revenue-Cutter Service on the retired list whose records showed creditable Civil War service.

This is to place on the retired list the few remaining in the military service who have had Civil War service. Last August there were about 27 men, and the cost will be between two and three thousand dollars.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The purpose of this bill is, I understand, to give a pensionable status to persons who have served in the Revenue-Cutter Service, giving them the same status as if they had served in the Navy of the United States.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; this is not a pension matter at all. It simply provides for their retirement at the next higher grade after they have served 30 years. They are entitled to be retired either at the grade they were then holding or one grade higher. The law gives a higher retirement grade to all the others, and this is recommended as covering these 27.

Mr. KING. But their retirement, if the Senator will pardon me, would call for retirement pay. It would give them an enlarged rate of pay.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; and for the whole number it would amount to somewhere about $2,500 a year. This is simply intended to cover those who served in the Civil War, and who have had 30 years' service. It is not prospective, but covers those who have had that length of service.

Mr. KING. I will ask the Senator if it is not in line with the scheme which is now proposed to place the Revenue-Cutter Service in the same category with the naval service, giving the revenue-cutter officers the same status as officers in the Navy, the same advantages, the same retirement pay, and so forth?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the considertaion of the treaty of peace with Germany in open executive session.

Mr. McCUMBER. I call attention to the fact that it is not 2 o'clock.

Mr. LODGE. But I can make the motion at any time.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senate has just voted to take up this bill.

Mr. LODGE. I know, but I do not want it to remain the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBINSON in the chair). The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is in order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have not yielded to the Senator, and I do not know how he could take me off my feet to make the motion. I admit that at 2 o'clock perhaps another motion may come up, but scarcely at this time.

Mr. LODGE. Of course the arrival of the hour of 2 o'clock does not affect the open executive session. The hour of 2 o'clock applies only to legislative session. The motion I make is a privileged one. I do not want to cut the Senator from North Dakota off, but I do not want to let this bill become the unfinished business, because there are other bills which are more important.

Mr. McCUMBER. Nor do I, Mr. President. I want a vote on it now, if we can dispose of it.

Mr. LODGE. If we can vote on the bill and dispose of it, I have no objection.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to the special rule for the morning hour on Monday. However, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is now in order. The Senator from Massachusetts moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany in open executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to call up the unanimous-consent agreement which I presented on Friday and which has been printed, but before doing so I make the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gronna	McKellar	Sheppard
Ball	Hale	McLean	Shields
Borah	Harding	McNary	Simmons
Brandegee	Harrison	Moses	Smith, Ariz.
Capper	Henderson	Myers	Smith, Ga.
Chamberlain	Hitchcock	New	Smoot
Colt	Johnson, Calif.	Newberry	Spencer
Culberson	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sterling
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Sutherland
Curtis	Kellogg	Overman	Thomas
Dial	Kendrick	Owen	Townsend
Dillingham	Kenyon	Page	Trammell
Elkins	Keyes	Phelan	Underwood
Fernald	King	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Fletcher	Kirby	Pittman	Warren
France	La Follette	Poindexter	Watson
Gay	Lodge	Pomerene	Williams
Gerry	McCormick	Ransdell	Wolcott
Gore	McCumber	Robinson

Mr. GERRY. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] and the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] are detained from the Senate on official business. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] are absent on account of illness. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] are detained by illness in their families. The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], and the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are absent on public business.

I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has gone to Massachusetts to vote at the State election.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My colleague, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], is detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that the unanimous-consent agreement, which I presented on Friday last and which is lying on the desk, be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the proposed agreement.

The Secretary read as follows:

It is agreed by unanimous consent that on the calendar day of Wednesday, November 12, 1919, the Senate will vote finally upon the resolution of ratification of the pending treaty of peace with Germany; that on and after the calendar day of Monday, November 3, 1919, up to the calendar day of Monday, November 10, 1919, no Senator shall speak more than once nor for a longer period than one hour upon any amendment to the text of the treaty or upon any amendment proposed or that may be proposed to the resolution of ratification, or to any reservation pending or offered thereto; that on and after the calendar day of Monday, November 10, 1919, no Senator shall speak more than once nor for a longer period than 10 minutes upon any amendment pending or offered to the text of the treaty or upon any amendment pending or proposed to the resolution of ratification, or to any reservation proposed to be incorporated therein; that at the hour of 5 o'clock p. m., on the calendar day of Wednesday, November 12, 1919, debate shall end and voting shall begin and shall be proceeded with until all amendments and reservations and the perfected resolution of ratification have been finally disposed of: Provided, That nothing in this agreement shall prevent the Senate from voting upon any amendment or reservation as the same is reached.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I only desire to say that I shall not insist on any particular date. If the Senate desires to make it earlier, I shall not insist upon the limitations of time set forth nor upon the division of time. There is only one thing that I do insist upon, and that is that the unanimous consent, if entered into, shall be an effective one; that it shall provide for the final vote on the resolution of ratification; that it shall be efficient and effective in that way. That is the only point that I shall insist upon in regard to the proposed agreement. Otherwise, I am entirely ready to modify it as the best judgment of the Senate thinks it should be modified.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, the objection to the unanimous-consent agreement asked by the Senator from Massachusetts is a very vital one, so far as the supporters of the treaty are concerned. It provides for a final vote upon a certain resolution of ratification which has been assented to already by sufficient Senators, so that there is no reasonable chance of materially changing it. If we accepted that proposition we would be in the position of agreeing to vote upon the resolution of ratification as practically already framed by the Senator from Massachusetts and certain of his colleagues, without any power materially to alter that resolution.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him at that point?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. Neither this unanimous-consent agreement nor, I think, any unanimous-consent agreement that will be offered, could or would cut off in any way the right to amend or substitute another reservation for any reservation offered. They would all be open to substitution, to amendment, to change, as they were passed, one by one. Of course, the final vote would be on the resolution of ratification in such form as the Senate had agreed upon. That is all the agreement calls for.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But, I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, suppose that resolution should fail to receive a two-thirds vote?

Mr. LODGE. Then, of course, as the uniform practice of the Senate shows, it will be open for a motion of reconsideration.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator, then, would construe the rule and the Constitution to mean that no different resolution of ratification could then be proposed.

Mr. LODGE. No different one could be proposed at the same time we were working on the first one.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Suppose that one had been defeated, having failed to receive a two-thirds majority vote?

Mr. LODGE. Then, if there was a majority of the Senate that desired to reconsider it, it could be reconsidered and another set of reservations undoubtedly would be offered, I suppose.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But except by reconsideration?

Mr. LODGE. I do not know what the parliamentary situation would then be. I can not tell what action would have been taken.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then it is exactly that contingency which we can not afford to consent to. We can not agree that the final vote on the treaty should be had upon a resolution of ratification made up to a large extent by the enemies of the treaty. If the resolution conducted by the Senator from Massachusetts fails to receive a two-thirds vote, we want the opportunity to present another resolution of ratification which may ultimately receive a two-thirds vote, which may receive the vote of the Senators who desire to ratify the treaty without reservations, who may compromise with Senators who desire to ratify the treaty with reservations. We are not willing by unanimous consent to agree that the final vote on the treaty shall be the proposition to pass the resolution framed very largely by those who are the enemies of the treaty.

Mr. President, in taking this position we feel that we are more than justified by the spirit of the Constitution. The Constitution provides that the matter of ratification of a treaty shall be in the hands of two-thirds of the Senate, not in the hands of a majority of the Senate.

The Constitution provides that two-thirds of the Senators present and voting shall be required to assent to the ratification of the treaty, and the rules of the Senate provide that a two-thirds vote is necessary indefinitely to postpone the treaty. It is two-thirds of the Senate and not a bare majority that are entitled to control the vote on this treaty.

Mr. President, I want to say right here that, in my opinion, the treaty will remain before the Senate until the Senate takes definite action upon it. You can postpone it indefinitely by a two-thirds vote, and that will end it for the present so far as the Senate is concerned; you can recommit it to the Committee on Foreign Relations by a majority vote if you want to take that responsibility; the Senate also can displace it by a majority vote by agreeing to a resolution to take up some other measure; but certainly we are entitled to have definite action taken by the Senate, to have Senators assume the responsibility either of indefinite postponement or recommitment or of displacing the treaty by another measure. We are not willing to have the treaty smothered by a bare majority, who have agreed upon a certain resolution of ratification with qualifications that some of us are not able to accept. We feel that we are entitled to have a sincere effort made to see whether it is possible to secure 64 votes here in the Senate for the treaty.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. TOWNSEND. How does the Senator expect that we shall arrive at a conclusion by the Senate as to what the treaty shall be and when the resolution of ratification shall be adopted except by a majority vote as we proceed?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I think that is a fair question, and I will explain to the Senator what I think would be the fair, broad-minded way by which every effort could be made to test the real sentiment of the Senate. I believe that can be brought about only, first, by permitting the resolution of ratification as drawn very largely in the Committee on Foreign Relations, modified possibly to some extent here as in Committee of the Whole, to come to a vote. When that vote has been taken, if the resolution receives a two-thirds majority, there is nothing to do except to notify the President that that has been done. If it fails in that form to receive a two-thirds majority, then, there being here in the Senate probably 70 Senators who want the treaty in some form, it certainly seems to me to be the fair thing to permit some of those Senators to present for a vote of the Senate a resolution in such form as they think will receive the assent of a larger number of Senators.

In case the resolution of ratification offered by the Senator from Massachusetts shall fail to receive a two-thirds vote, I believe the next step should be to submit to the Senate a resolution of unqualified ratification, without any provisos or conditions. If that shall fail to receive the necessary two-thirds vote, the fair thing would be to allow Senators to present other resolutions of ratification qualified in such a way as they might receive a larger number of votes; and possibly reach a settlement in that way. If such resolutions fail to receive a two-thirds vote, then it is up to the Senate to decide what to do with the treaty. We shall then have tested out in a fair, broad way the sentiment of the Senate.

I am not sure that ratification will be reached in any form; but if Senators desire that the matter now be handled in a way which the magnitude and dignity of the great question require instead of by the methods of a political convention, in which a bare majority binds itself to stand by a certain resolution and if that resolution fails the whole thing fails, I think the method which I have suggested would be much more in accordance with the dignity and importance of this great question and would settle it.

There is no settlement of the question if the Senate is confined merely to a vote upon the proposition presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, backed probably by a bare majority. It simply shows what a majority will do. It neither indefinitely postpones the treaty nor does it supplant it by anything else. The method which I propose would bring about a settlement.

Therefore, Mr. President, I shall object to the request for unanimous consent presented by the Senator from Massachusetts, and, in place of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement which I presented to the Senate on Friday last, I offer another suggestion for a unanimous-consent agreement. If the Senate will permit, I shall read it, as it is not in printed form, and shall read it slowly, so that it may be fairly understood:

First. That after the adoption of this unanimous-consent agreement the Senate will meet each day at 11 o'clock a. m. for the consideration of the German treaty and all amendments, reservations, or resolutions of ratification that may be proposed. No Senator shall speak more than once nor longer than 15 minutes during the present week upon any pending question.

Second. That during the calendar day of Monday, November 3, 1919, before adjournment or recess, the Senate will vote upon the pending amendment and also upon any other amendments to the treaty that may be offered.

Third. That during the calendar days of Tuesday and Wednesday, November 4 and 5, 1919, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, will consider committee reservations, which consideration may be continued not later than the calendar day of Thursday, November 6, 1919, at 3 o'clock p. m., before or at which time a vote upon pending committee reservations shall be taken, whereupon the treaty shall be reported to the Senate by the Committee of the Whole.

Fourth. In the Senate the vote upon the resolution of ratification, embracing such reservations as have been adopted in Committee of the Whole, shall take place before adjournment or recess of the calendar day of Thursday, November 6, 1919.

Fifth. If it receives the necessary two-thirds vote, the President shall be notified.

Sixth. If it does not receive the necessary two-thirds vote, the Senate shall consider on Friday, November 7, and Saturday, November 8, 1919, any resolutions of ratification proposed by the minority of the Foreign Relations Committee and vote upon the same not later than 3 o'clock p. m., Saturday, November 8, 1919. If no such resolution receives the necessary two-thirds vote, it shall then be in order for any Senator to propose a resolution of ratification during the calendar day and the same shall be voted upon without discussion. If no such resolution receives the necessary two-thirds vote, it shall thereupon be in order for any Senator to move to take up the railroad bill or any other business, and this question shall be decided without discussion.

Mr. President, that provides for bringing the matter to a head this week. It puts the Senate in a position where on next Saturday, by a mere majority vote, if no resolution of ratification has been accepted, it can set aside the treaty for the present and take up the railroad bill or any other important legislation. It distributes fairly well the time on the reservations and on the pending amendment, giving, of course, the lion's share of time to the reservations proposed by the Committee on Foreign Relations as they may be modified as in Committee of the Whole. If two-thirds of the Senate do not agree to the resolution of ratification which the Senator from Massachusetts fathers, it then gives the other sentiment in the Senate an opportunity to present its case to the Senate and ask for a vote, first, probably upon an unqualified resolution of ratification; and if that shall be defeated, then upon another resolution of ratification with such qualifications and restrictions and reservations as may be necessary to unite 64 votes in the Senate in the support of the resolution.

I think that is a fair proposition. It will, I repeat, bring the matter to an end this week. It will have the effect of giving the best possible opportunity to test out the sentiment of the Senate on the subject of ratification. It does away with the idea that a mere majority can tie up a resolution here and say to the remainder of the Senate, "If you do not approve this, the treaty is at an end." The very idea of reservations is to give an opportunity for a compromise of diverse opinions.

Mr. President, there is a very honest difference of opinion as to the terms on which this treaty should be ratified. The time has come when we have got to look the situation fairly in the face, and we find that unless a compromise between these diverse views is reached the treaty can not be ratified, but it places the responsibility where it belongs.

There is another thing that it does. It gives to the Senators here who believe in the treaty in some form an opportunity to reach a compromise. As it is, it is well known that the pending resolution of ratification, with the reservations already agreed to, represents particularly the views of Senators who are going to vote against the treaty even when those reservations are attached to it. It does not represent the Senators here who want to ratify the treaty; and, while it is perfectly proper for them to inject their views into the resolution of ratification, it is not fair play to prevent Senators from voting on another resolution of ratification.

Senators may say that we can amend the resolution of ratification fathered by the Senator from Massachusetts; but the Senator from Massachusetts has assured me, and other Senators associated with him have assured me, that they have the vote to hold it right where it is; they have the pledges of Senators to stand by that resolution. Very well; let that resolution come to a vote in the Senate. If it can muster a two-thirds vote, the treaty is entitled to ratification in that form; but if it can not muster a two-thirds vote, certainly we ought to have the opportunity to present a resolution in a different form, and we should not adopt the methods of a political convention in preventing a fair expression of the average opinion of the Senators here in the Senate. Therefore, Mr. President, for the consideration of the Senate, I offer the request for unanimous consent which I have read.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the only methods that I have adopted are the methods laid down by the rules and by the practice of the Senate of the United States in dealing with treaties. Let me first draw a distinction, which the Senator from Nebraska omitted to draw but which is vital, between the resolution of ratification and the reservations or conditions which are attached to it. The resolution of ratification is the enacting clause, and, of course, is the same in all cases, whether it stops with simple consent and advice or whether it goes on and imposes conditions. The Senator would have to use it for his reservations if he proposes to attach any to the treaty; he would have to use it if he proposes to ratify the treaty without reservation. That is the resolution of ratification. The reservations are what are in discussion here.

It is true that the Constitution gave to one-third of the Senate, or one more than one-third, power to defeat a treaty; but it did not give them control of the reservations or amendments, or of the form in which the treaty should go to the question of ratification. That is left to a majority. The Senator's proposition is that the majority must not have its way; that the people who are to decide must be the one more than one-third; and, of course, they can have their way as to whether the treaty shall be ratified or not, no matter what form it may take.

Now, Mr. President, we consider the reservations. As I have said, they are open to every form of amendment and substitution. Each will be considered separately. They will then be taken into the Senate, and again they will be open to a separate vote on each one, and to any amendment, and to any substitution. Then the reservations or amendments, if there should be any, agreed upon by the Senate in Committee of the Whole and in the Senate, are placed upon the enacting clause, which is then put at the head of them, and that is submitted to the Senate for a final vote as to whether the resolution in that form shall pass. There has been every opportunity to do everything that the Senator wishes to have done. If the resolution fails in that form to receive the vote of two-thirds of the Senate, it is then open to reconsideration if a majority favors reconsideration, and it can be brought back here as it stands, with the reservations or amendments, if there are any, attached to it; and the Senate then has an opportunity, and the minority who have voted against ratification have the opportunity, to deal with it under the rules.

Mr. President, those are the parliamentary methods and the methods pursued by the Senate in all cases where treaties have had reservations, or where they have been proposed, or where there has been rejection of a resolution and subsequent reconsideration. I see no reason to go beyond those rules. I do not believe for a moment that it is possible under parliamentary law to take a resolution of any sort, or a bill, and lay one form after another beside it, and keep voting on indefinite propositions. The whole basis of parliamentary law is to promote the transaction of business with a view of bringing it to a conclusion. Now, it is not a final conclusion, of course, but the first conclusion we can reach is on an enacting resolution with such amendments or reservations as the Senate chooses to put on. That is the first step toward final action. I think that action ought to be taken. I should be glad to take it on the 6th, or the 10th, or any date that the Senate may decide; but I am not going into any elaborate piecemeal scheme of this sort. I want to get some kind of definite action, and have the resolution of ratification either carried or lost. Then, if reconsideration is desired, whenever the majority chooses to take it up, it can bring up the resolution again and try it once more; but I am not going to vote for a lot of piecemeal agreements. I want to get a vote on the resolution with the reservations that the Senate sees fit to adopt now, after full consideration; and I shall object to any other form that does not carry with it a definite time for voting on a resolution of ratification in such form as the Senate chooses to make it. I think this other agreement, offered by the Senator from Nebraska, produces no end at all. The country wants this treaty either voted up or voted down.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there were Senators on the other side of the Chamber and Senators on this side of the Chamber who have been designated as "mild reservationists." They held quite different views from the majority of the Foreign Relations Committee. They were antagonistic to many of the reservations presented by the majority of the Foreign Relations Committee. I understand, however, that they have agreed to vote for those reservations under the belief that only by voting for such reservations may a sufficient number of votes be commanded to get any action at all. For that reason, and for that reason only, they will vote for these reservations. If these reservations are adopted as a part of the resolution of ratification by a majority vote, and if then they do not succeed in accomplishing the ratification of the treaty by the necessary two-thirds vote, those mild reservationists are not going to stop there if they have a legal opportunity to go further. They will have satisfied their obligations to the majority on the other side of the Chamber; they will have voted with the majority of the Foreign Relations Committee, and the resolution of ratification will have failed in that form. Will it not then be the desire of the mild reservationists on that side of the Chamber to offer a reservation which will possibly appeal to two-thirds of this body? If the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts goes through, there will be no such opportunity to the mild reservationists on that side of the Chamber or on this side of the Chamber.

In other words, there are Senators on this side of the Chamber who do not believe in any reservations. Those Senators probably will vote against all reservations; and yet, as one of those very Senators who would vote against all reservations, I would not like to be foreclosed from the privilege of voting for interpretative reservations if it turned out to be the only way in which the treaty could be ratified. Yet if the plan of the Senator from Massachusetts is adopted, I will vote against such reservations and I will vote against the resolution of ratification containing those reservations, and if there are a third of this body voting the same way that I do the resolution will be defeated, and that is to be the end of the treaty under the plan submitted. If it is demonstrated that that resolution was defeated by reason of the character of the reservations in it, and I am convinced that we can not ratify the treaty without reservations, and the Senator from North Dakota should then offer his reservations or some other Senator should offer his interpretative reservations, I would feel justified then in joining those Senators in voting for a compromise resolution. I would be debarred of this opportunity under Senator LODGE's plan. It could be accomplished under Senator HITCHCOCK's plan.

There is not any chance on earth, and the Senator from Massachusetts knows it, of ever ratifying this treaty with the reservations that he now presents to the Senate. I do not think he has in his mind for one moment that he can get two-thirds of the Senate to vote for the resolution of ratification containing those reservations, and yet he seeks to force a final vote upon the treaty upon the vote upon those reservations. He wants to prevent the Senator from North Dakota or the Senator from Oregon or the Senator from Minnesota or the Senator from Georgia from offering interpretative reservations that may command the votes of two-thirds of the Members of the Senate. He does not desire to give the Senators on this side who will first vote against all reservations another chance to vote for mild reservations.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, I could not possibly cut off Senators from offering any reservations they wanted to, even if I desired to do so, and I have no such desire.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator has said that, but it does not meet the point. They can offer substitutes or amendments before the vote on the resolution submitted by the Senator. They can do it beforehand, but they can not do it afterwards. That is exactly the distinction I am making.

Mr. LODGE. They can not offer them after the resolution is agreed to, can they?

Mr. PITTMAN. Nor can they offer any other resolution, under the plan proposed by the Senator, after his is defeated.

Mr. LODGE. Why, certainly, they can.

Mr. PITTMAN. That is exactly the position the Senator is trying to put us in.

Mr. LODGE. They can move reconsideration, bring it back, and consider it all over again, if they want to.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator is trying to deprive the Senators in this body who desire the treaty ratified as it is of any opportunity to compromise after his resolution of ratification is defeated. That is the purpose of it, and that will be the accomplishment of it, if the Senator succeeds. He desires us to vote our honest convictions now, with no opportunity, after the resolution is defeated, to enter into a compromise with any other Senators in this body. That is the whole purpose of it. That will be the result of it.

Mr. LODGE. I am proceeding simply according to the rules. I know no other way. I can not change the rules in the middle of the game, as seems to be proposed. I am following the rules as they stand. There will be every opportunity for everybody to offer any compromise or other reservations that they want to. There is no other way of getting at it that I know of. All I want to do is to get a vote; and if these reservations that I propose are beaten, and a majority does not vote for them, then we can come to a vote on the treaty without reservations or with other reservations; but let us get a vote. That is what I want.

Mr. PITTMAN. It is true the Senator wants a vote, but he wants a vote in a manner that is certain to defeat this treaty. He says that we may offer our amendments to his resolution. Yes; that is true; but he knows that those amendments will be defeated. The Senator from North Dakota could offer his substitute reservations, but he knows that they will be defeated. He knows that everything is tied up for the defeat of anything that might accomplish a compromise in this body, and then he wants to force before this body on a final vote something that he knows will defeat the treaty. That is the purpose of it. He says he is simply following the rules. Why, the Senator knows that by unanimous consent you can set aside any rule, and that is exactly what the Senator from Nebraska has asked the Senator to do. He has asked him to set aside the rules so that after the vote is taken upon the Senator's resolution, if it does not get the necessary two-thirds, we may take a vote on a resolution submitted by the Senator from Nebraska, and then, if that does not get the necessary two-thirds, we can vote on a resolution submitted by the Senator from North Dakota. That is what he asks. Those rules can be changed by unanimous consent, and the Senator need not worry about that if he is simply trying to accomplish action.

Mr. LODGE. The rules can not be changed by unanimous consent, and will not be, of course. I have no reason to know that the treaty with these reservations attached, or the important ones among them attached, will not be ratified. On the contrary, I have always believed that it would be.

I have tried to bring about reservations which would lead to the ratification of the treaty. If they are voted down, and voted down by those who profess to be the friends of the treaty, no matter what rule you have, or what rule you abolish, you can not abolish the Constitution, and the treaty will be in great danger.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I am taking no part in the form of the proposed unanimous-consent agreement. I am, however, very deeply interested in a subject which will be vitally affected by the arrangement that is proposed. I am for any sort of unanimous-consent agreement that will dispose finally of the treaty during the present week.

I bring to the attention of Senators a situation which is so grave that it ought to be uppermost in our minds when we are considering at what time the present subject shall be disposed of. Nine months ago, substantially, the President of the United States declared that not later than the 1st of January now approaching he would feel it his duty to return the railways of the country to their owners, under a power which he undoubtedly possesses. I have good reason to believe that his purpose at that time has not been changed. I can not speak positively with regard to his intent, but I am led to think that about the first of the approaching January these properties will be returned to their owners. Nor could anyone criticize the President with much severity, because we have had ample opportunity to prepare and enact into law the legislation which I regard as absolutely necessary in the return of our systems of transportation to their owners.

I do not criticize anybody for the time taken in the debate upon the treaty. It is of the mightiest consequence. I have never uttered a word of complaint with regard to it. But I think it has been debated sufficiently. I know that every Senator has made up his mind with regard to the votes which he shall cast, either upon the proposed amendments or reservations, or upon the ratification. In view of the impending calamity—and it will be a calamity from which we can not escape, if the railroads are returned to their owners without adequate and sufficient legislation—in view of that situation, the German treaty ought to be disposed of, and I have not ventured to think, even, that the consideration of it could be, or would be, prolonged beyond the present week.

If the railroads are returned to their owners without adequate legislation, you will not only see an intensification of all of the difficulties which are now observed in the labor world, but, in my judgment, you will witness a financial catastrophe against which it will be very hard for us to contend. It is our bounden duty, if it be within our possibilities, to pass before this session ends the legislation which we think is necessary to properly take care of the situation; and I, for one, would feel that I had done less than my duty if I did not use all of the means at my command to induce the Senate to take up this subject for consideration within a very brief time.

I have not attempted to bring it forward, because I have believed that we ought to dispose of the German treaty; but we have reached now a situation, and I want fairly to advise Senators, in which I shall feel it to be my responsibility and my duty to ask that the German treaty be displaced, if I can not be assured in some manner that the railroads will not be returned to their owners in the absence of adequate and protective legislation.

I do not know just when I ought to do that. I have been waiting day after day, hoping that the debate upon the treaty might be brought to a conclusion. But so seriously do I view the subject of what are the consequences of passing over into the next year without legislation on this subject that if it becomes apparent that the German treaty is to be delayed, and is to claim the attention of the Senate during all of this session and part of the next, I shall have no doubt with regard to my duty in the premises.

Mr. LODGE and Mr. JONES of Washington addressed the Chair.

Mr. CUMMINS. I yield first to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LODGE. I only want to say that I entirely appreciate the feeling of the Senator from Iowa. I sympathize with him. I shall be glad to see the resolution of ratification with reservations voted on upon Saturday next, if I can bring it about.

That at least would make procedure along parliamentary lines and it would take one long step to finish it; but I can not agree to a unanimous-consent request that leaves this thing open to indefinite postponement and talk of compromise, trying to arrange here and there, behind the doors and in the cloakrooms, a compromise which will consume more time than has been already consumed. I shall object to that form of agreement.

Mr. CUMMINS. I was not in the least criticizing the position of the Senator from Massachusetts. He has told me for the last several weeks that he desired to do everything in his power to bring the debate to a close, and I know that that has been his purpose. I do not want to leave the German treaty until it is finally disposed of. I am entirely in sympathy with that view.

I do not quite comprehend the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]; but whatever is done, no matter what course is pursued, let us agree upon something that will dispose of this treaty, so far as its consideration by the Senate is concerned, within this week, if that be possible. If there are Senators who think that the debate ought to be continued, and that it can not be disposed of in justice to its great importance until the next session, then let us lay it aside and take up for consideration a subject that must be disposed of if we are to protect the people of this country in their transportation facilities before the first of the year. Now I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I would like to see the treaty disposed of soon. I am ready to vote at any time. I understand, I think, the importance of the railroad legislation; but I want to ask the Senator if there is any law requiring the Railroad Administration to turn the railroads back to private parties by the 1st of January?

Mr. CUMMINS. There is no such law. The President has the power to return them; and I venture to suggest that while, if I were in his stead, I would not return them until adequate legislation is enacted, yet there are a great many reasons which move one in that direction. At this time there is almost complete demoralization in the railway service. The employees, knowing that the time is approaching for the return of the properties to their former owners, can not maintain that degree of efficiency which ought to be manifest in all such service. The railway companies are utterly incapable of doing anything, for they have nothing with which to accomplish any purpose. The properties are not in their possession; the working capital is not in their possession; they are unable even to prepare fairly for the approaching return of the properties. There is every consideration for the rapid disposition of the subject, and we can not vindicate ourselves to the people of the country unless we do take such measures as are necessary and adequate to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to get the opinion of the Senator as to the amount of time which will probably be consumed in the consideration of his railroad bill.

Mr. CUMMINS. I have not attempted to make an estimate along that line, but it has seemed to me that the Senate ought to be able to dispose of it within three weeks.

Mr. THOMAS. What the Senate ought to be able to do and what it does in actual practice are divergent things.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am not disposed to deny that.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me ask the Senator if he has the impression that if we should take up the railroad bill next week we could dispose of it before the holidays?

Mr. CUMMINS. If we should take up the railroad bill next Monday, I think we could dispose of it by the end of November.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not so optimistic as that, by any means; but I am willing to try it.

Mr. CUMMINS. I want to try it.

Mr. THOMAS. I will aid the Senator all I can by keeping as quiet as possible during the interval, if that will help any. I suggest to the Senator that he make the railroad bill the unfinished business, and we can then devote to it the morning hour when we adjourn instead of recessing, and by that means we will make a little progress. In any event, we will create some diversion for the galleries by relieving them of the monotony of treaty consideration.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am sure the railroad question will not furnish the charming and delightful forays into the history of the world that we have witnessed in the treaty debate. I think that when we take it up for consideration the galleries will empty pretty rapidly. But however that may be, all I want is that Senators, in coming to a conclusion with regard to what kind of an agreement should be made to bring the German treaty to an end, will have in mind the situation which confronts us so far as our railways are concerned. I am willing to agree to anything so far as the distribution of time and length of debate are concerned that will bring the consideration of the treaty to an end this week; and when it is brought to an end it ought to be at an end for the time being, at any rate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to ask whether the unanimous-consent agreement submitted by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] was objected to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to make a formal objection to it.

Mr. SMOOT. I so understood. I call for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, what I desire to say will be in the line of the regular order, and I want to address a question to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

I should very much like to have adopted the unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Nebraska. I appreciate the fact that it is very difficult to make an arrangement whereby a minority may have a second chance if they fail to secure their wish on the first opportunity. Inasmuch as under the regular rules of the Senate there is only one way of registering the opinion of a minority, and that is by a vote upon each proposition as it comes up, as an amendment, and a final vote either on accepting the result or voting against the proposition as it comes before the Senate at that time, and as we can not make the change then, I know of no way under the rule whereby the minority can get another opportunity to register its views in another manner unless we have unanimous consent.

Now, I am satisfied that there are those who are so bitterly opposed to the treaty that they will never give unanimous consent to anything that would take from them any advantage they may have. Therefore I think it is useless for the Senator or anyone else to attempt to secure an agreement which would allow the Senate to vote upon the reservations, or the resolution containing reservations, and, if they are defeated and if they can not get a reconsideration of that vote, then to have unanimous consent that they could try the whole matter over; and that is really what the unanimous-consent request of the Senator means.

If that is an impossibility, if we have got to meet this issue, it seems to me we might just as well meet it at one time as another in agreeing upon a day certain, and if we can not, by any possibility, change the proposed reservations to suit us, then the question will have to be put up to the Senate whether they wish to vote for or against those reservations as they shall appear in the resolution at that time. I am ready to meet it.

I think there is a little error about the unanimity of understanding concerning the reservations that have been printed. The first four or five of them I shall support. I shall support them because I feel confident that we can not get 64 votes for the treaty unless we have them, and that is the only reason that guides me in supporting them. If I should vote for the resolution of ratification as it is finally formulated, and that resolution should fail to receive the 64 votes necessary, I have enough interest in the treaty, and hope that upon a reconsideration it might be modified so that we could get the vote, to move of my own volition to reconsider the vote by which it passed. But I recognize the fact that a majority can vote that down, and I do not know of any way to escape it.

I am not in favor of every one of the reservations. I am opposed to the preamble or a portion of the preamble to the reservations, and I am opposed to one or two of the reservations, and so I notified my colleagues when they passed upon them in the committee that I would reserve the right to oppose them in the Senate.

So after all it seems to me that we might as well agree first as last upon a date, if we are going to attempt to get the treaty disposed of in a reasonable time, for I am certain that those who are opposed to the treaty in any form will not consent to give the Senator from Nebraska the advantage which he hopes for.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I understand that while I was off the floor for a moment some question was raised about my making objection to the unanimous-consent agreement proposed by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I did make objection or intended to make objection to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that the Senator from Massachusetts had objected, and so stated.

Mr. FERNALD obtained the floor.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Maine if he will give way to me for a few remarks connected with a matter which has been under consideration?

Mr. FERNALD. I have been waiting for some little time to proceed. I should like to go on at this time if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Very well.

Mr. FERNALD. Mr. President, I offer no apology for the action I am about to take toward the solution of the great question now before this Senate. For weeks a fair and open discussion has taken place by those who earnestly favor the league of nations and the treaty of peace. It has been my desire from the beginning to endeavor in every way possible so to perfect this document that it might meet my passive approval. I have never ardently espoused the cause of the league of nations, for I see in it many provisions which I deem dangerous to the liberties of a free people, and especially to the liberties of our own Republic. The President of the United States, with his advisers, spent weeks in foreign lands in a company of statesmen and representatives of other and foreign governments in coming to an agreement and what he deemed a just solution of the matter. I do not question his sincerity and realize the difficulty under which he labored in the meeting of so many diversified minds and opinions.

Doubtless in the circumstances he did the best he could. If I were to criticize his action at all it would be in his selection of delegates to represent this country abroad on a matter of such vital interest to our people. Had he taken men even from his own party altogether, or such as might be found on either side of this Chamber, I believe that a document might have been produced which in every respect would be more acceptable to this Senate and to the American people than that which we now have before us. This, however, is a question of the past, and criticism at this time is, perhaps, out of order, quite futile, and unnecessary.

But this treaty or contract between nations is before us with a statement from the administration that should any changes of a material nature be made the force of the entire document would be annulled. I can not agree, Mr. President, to this view. I believe that the wisdom of this Senate may be relied upon to make some changes which would bring this within the approval of those who must ratify it before it can be enforced. I shall not attempt in detail to discuss all of the many articles of the treaty, because they have already been discussed by the Members of the Senate, and the very fact that this body is fairly evenly divided in the matter proves beyond cavil that some changes must be made before we can come to an agreement and ratify the treaty.

I do not intend to thrash over old straw, because it would seem that every kernel of wheat has been taken from it. Senators on both sides of the Chamber has agreed that many of the treaty provisions are not only unfair, unreasonable, and unjust, but entirely illegal and unconstitutional. I do not, of course, offer any suggestions along legal or constitutional lines. The Senate has already been enlightened on both sides of the question by able constitutional lawyers. It is in a spirit of fairness and entirely from a business man's standpoint that I shall attempt to discuss these matters. But in doing so I do not feel that I must make any observations to excuse any vote I may take or to place myself properly before my constituents. The people of my State—like those, I assume, of other States—are not of one opinion, and disagree as to the action they would like me and my colleague to take. It is a matter of some regret to me that I must oppose my colleague in this matter. He and I do not agree entirely in the method of solving this question, and I concede to him the same right to his opinion that I claim for my own. In our discussions there will be no resentment or feeling of disregard on my part, and I am sure he shares the same feeling. He represents, I assume, the sentiment of many honest, well-meaning, intelligent people of our State. Just how our constituents would divide on this matter I am unable to say; but I do feel that the position I take on this question will meet the approval of some at least—and I trust of many—of the business men not only of my own State but of the entire country.

I do not even share the belief that great speed should be made in the solution of this matter. I have felt entirely satisfied with the progress we have made and with the leadership of both eminent Senators on each side of the Chamber. I want to say here and now that the people of this country, even though they desire prompt and speedy action on most matters, feel that in this particular case, where we are about to enter into a contract with the nations of the world that is not temporary but enduring, it is far better that careful deliberation be given than that any hasty action be taken. I, of course, desire to expedite this discussion and the consideration as much as is consistent with its scope and magnitude and the far-reaching effect of its solution in its relation to our people. Many Senators have already expressed themselves on this question; and I am quite willing to wait in patience in order that other Senators may have an opportunity to make such observations as they may see fit, and that all such shall have due and just consideration. I hold that in the final disposition of this matter no partisian spirit will be shown, because the settlement of this great question is far above partisanship or any political aggrandizement. It is an American question and should be settled by Americans in an American way.

Before discussing the merits or demerits of amendments or reservations to be made to this treaty I want to say that I do not deem it such a holy and sanctified instrument as some Members of the Senate would have it appear.

Nor do I believe it necessary that any provisions be made whereby the treaty may not be sent back for further consideration by the Governments interested and the signatories to the document. While I have very tender compassion for the sentiments of other people, I have a much greater regard for the feelings of my own countrymen. And if it seem necessary in making the changes that this document be returned to the signers for consideration, I shall vote to send it back to them with a much greater respect for my own judgment than to have either mild or stringent reservations made that would insure its adoption. I have not opposed—in fact, I am very much in favor of—amendments that shall be made in the body of the document. I believe in meeting these matters squarely and fairly, and that every signatory should understand well and without question just the position this Government is taking in making this treaty. I do not agree with those who think that reservations will be passed without consideration. Every act of this Senate and every word in any reservation will be as carefully scanned by the other powers as if amendments were made. I have preferred amendments rather than reservations.

But there are those who think that by making such reservation as they deem will protect the interests of our Government it will not be necessary to have further consideration, and that the powers of the earth will accept it without further controversy. And that seems the only excuse given by those who advocate reservations in the place of amendments. If we are to make a contract with a party, why not embody in that contract every act that we intend to perform, have it well understood, that there may be no controversy in the future regarding it? In fact, I believe that some provisions that I desire can not be made by reservation, but that it will be necessary to have amendments before the contract will meet with my approval. I may stand alone in this, but if I do, it is my constitutional right; and I would rather stand alone and feel that I am right and justified in my stand than to accept that which I deem unwise, unfair, unjust, unrighteous, and dangerous to American interests and institutions.

In the ratification of the instrument before us we are departing from the policies laid down by the founders of the Government and the makers of the Constitution and those early founders of the Republic who, looking down through the ages, never dreamed of such entangling alliances as this document stipulates. Coming fresh from the different Governments where they had been under the dominion of monarchs, and suffering from the autocracy and the environments under which they had lived, they advised against such alliances. As has been so often referred to in this Chamber, Washington, in his parting address and in the inspired words, almost of a prophet, warned us against the very doctrines which are embodied in this treaty. Every one of the statesmen of that day, knowing full well the desire of the great governments of the earth to court our friendship and engage our assistance, made plain in the most convincing language the danger of such alliances. For 130 years we have followed the teachings of our fathers, and in that time the Old World has been honeycombed with intrigues, revolutions, uprisings, and wars. But this Republic, standing alone, going straight forward in the course laid down by the founders, has kept its bearings, grown in national wealth and prosperity, and to-day we present a country that is the wonder and the admiration of the world.

It is a matter of gratifying pride to me to know that whenever our Government has been threatened by foreign aggression the North and South, the East and the West, have sprung to arms and have been ready as one man to come to the rescue. It matters not how humble a citizen of this country, if he has sworn allegiance to the flag, whether he be black or white, red or yellow, poor or rich, as a citizen of this country, he may feel an absolute security under the flag and in the power and majesty of its protection.

This country has never made an aggressive war; it is only when our property and lives have been in danger or taken that we have offered resentment. I can not agree with those who claim that the war with Germany was solely for the "safety of democracy"; I voted to declare war on Germany because she had destroyed our property, insulted our flag, murdered our citizens, sent our men and women to the bottom of the sea. And it is in such cases only that our Government will rise to arms and resort to force. But when that occasion arises, we have in this great Republic of ours sons whom America can depend upon to defend the flag; and no nobler men nor more vigorous fighters can be found on the face of the earth.

We have no great standing Army. Our Navy has not been the largest in the world. But when it comes to heroism and courage, that nation is yet unborn which can stand before our soldiers in open honorable battle. And we need not fear a coalition of the nations of the earth to destroy the United States, because all the powers combined of hell and earth can not, on our own soil, meet us with any expectancy of victory. I make this not as a challenge, because I desire peace at all times, but simply to assure those who are fearful of what may come to us in the event that this league of nations is not ratified. And our boys are ready at a moment's call. They may drill with broomsticks, they may be called upon untrained and unequipped, but when Uncle Sam gives the word they are ready to spring to action, and will never be found wanting. They are not ready to obey the command of some foreign potentate. And if this league of nations is accepted, the mothers who gave so nobly their heroic sons in defense of their country will again be called to make the sacrifice, because as sure as the sun rises and sets we will be forced to send our soldiers to every field of battle on the face of the globe where war is imminent.

And in these days when we are supposed to be at peace, and as a Nation are at peace, there are scores of little wars going on in the distant and far-off countries of the Old World. In Siberia—in fact, in almost every quarter of Asia—little armies to-day are fighting and men are dying, and this league contemplates sending our men to quell every outburst or uprising. If this be not its intention, why does the administration suggest that we support an army of 500,000 men and spend millions in construction of battleships and in training our soldiers? What else are armies and navies expected to do but to fight? The very fact that they have asked for large appropriations for this purpose proves beyond a question of doubt that we are expected to enter these conflicts. And those well-meaning people, those churches, who have resolved that this treaty should be ratified without a change believe that the league of nations to enforce peace will stop all further war. Oh, what a delirious, Utopian dream! How I wish that it would accomplish this. But it is certain to do just the opposite. When we enter into a contract to protect the territorial integrity of other nations, no matter what the conditions may be, no matter how much a people may desire liberty and freedom, we must aid the government with whom we are in alliance and to whom we have promised assistance.

Recently in this body soldiers of Irish birth have been ridiculously maligned—these people who for years have had the desire for liberty; these people who have been under the English yoke and have striven for liberty and have made the most righteous demands; these people who stood beside the patriots in this country during the Revolution and in the War of 1812. I can not conscientiously vote for the ratification of the covenant so long as it does not make proper provision and give assurance to the Irish people which my sense of right demands. No assurance is given which indicates that the league can settle the problems of this people striving for self-determination and who may and probably will demand recognition in the future. I want such provision incorporated in the document.

This covenant in its present form pledges members of the league to the aid of other members; hence, in the event of Ireland's striving to wrest her freedom from England, the United States would be unable to aid her and must support Great Britain, the latter being a member of the league. Regardless of how much our sympathies might be with Ireland, no matter how dear the cause of Ireland to the 20,000,000 Americans of Irish blood in this country, under this treaty we should be forced to aid Great Britain, and this despite the fact that this Senate, by a vote of 60 to 1, adopted the resolution asking for a hearing as to the situation of affairs in Ireland. This hearing was denied at Paris, and the same influences that refused the hearing will be at work in the council of the league.

In passing let me say that I wish to register my regret for and my disapproval of the reckless assertion regarding the aid rendered by the Irish in the Revolutionary War. Historians have proven to us that 38 per cent of the Revolutionary Army was Irish, and we know that the Civil War furnished its full quota of Irish soldiers, and no one need be told that in the World War the Irish name was conspicuous and Irish courage unquestioned.

And for the part which the Irish race has taken in the solution of these great questions, in their loyalty and patriotism, their indomitable courage and their allegiance to the flag of their adoption, we owe them a debt of gratitude that can not be overestimated. I will never vote to ratify any document that will withhold from America the privilege of at least extending to this splendid race its moral and sympathetic support.

I have voted for every amendment which would, in my judgment, make this document less objectionable.

To my mind the situation regarding Shantung is a disgrace and a crime. America has ever stood for equal, economic opportunity for China and for her territorial integrity and independence as a nation. The attitude of the United States in this respect has been above reproach, and I can not bear to think that the American people will stand for injustice or will willingly sanction or permit it. I want America to keep her record unsullied and unstained. But if the control of Shantung is permitted to be given Japan, that record, in my eyes, will be blemished and our standard lowered. China is one of the richest countries on the face of the earth. She is the source of immense supply for minerals, including iron, copper, coal, silver, and gold. She is a still greater reservoir of men. Her population is estimated at 300,000,000. Added to this are her endowments of favorable climate and unsurpassed fertility of soil. Naturally enough, in her weakness and civil strife and her condition of partially lost independence, China is a great temptation to a power of autocratic militarism like Japan, who more than any other nation is vitally interested in China's fate. Because of geographical propinquity Japan has a strong advantage and has come to feel a sort of claim to China. This ever-growing power over China is naturally productive of bad feeling between the two peoples. Hence, the Chinese detest the Japs and the Japs despise the Chinese and covet China's possession. This tension has been materially heightened by the Paris proceedings.

America's traditional policy has always been to preserve the independence of her neighbor and to aid the best element to achieve national regeneration, and to me it seems incredible that our country will depart from that policy and permit a weak but friendly nation, an ally in the recent war, to become the prey of a rival and ambitious power, and the possible cause of another world war. China is our sister Republic, as much as the suffering nations of Europe, and despite her ignorance and her weakness it is our duty to play our part in lending her aid and assistance. I for one can not vote to ratify the peace treaty without a strong and separate protest against the Shantung provision.

What, you say, no amendment can be offered and no provision made that will aid China or right the wrong perpetrated by Japan?

But unless some expression can be given to the sentiment of our people, which I am sure is almost unanimous, I am not willing to give this treaty my approval. I have voted for 40 amendments already, each in its turn to be defeated, and such, I assume, is to be the fate of every amendment, no matter how just or how much it might improve the covenant, because some with their tender mercy for other peoples can not permit such amendments to be made as will necessitate its return for consideration by other powers. Last week the Senator from California offered an amendment that would give to the United States equal representation in the league with Great Britain. There was no question, I assume, in the mind of anyone but that it was a just amendment, and to my mind it ought to have been accepted. I can not conceive of any citizen of our country refusing to vote to give our Government equal power with that of any other government on earth. From a standpoint of moral right and justice our Government, in my judgment, following a similar procedure to that employed in determining representation of other self-governing colonies, ought to have 48 votes—every State in this Union should be represented. To be sure, our States are not dominions nor colonies any more, but they are self-governing political bodies. We hold our elections for the governor and members of the legislature precisely as the Dominion of Canada holds her elections for the selection of Governor General and the Dominion Parliament.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FERNALD. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. I wonder if the Senator has noticed the statement of a member of the Canadian House of Commons and for 16 years a member of the Canadian cabinet that New York is far more important to the Union than Canada to the British Empire.

Mr. FERNALD. I am going to take that up just a little later. I thank the Senator for the suggestion.

Mr. President, in every sense our States are self-governing political bodies, and are bound by the Union of States practically as Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, and India are bound to the British Empire. We ought to have 48 votes in the league, both as a matter of right and to give some assurance that the questions which come up for consideration embracing almost every question in the world may be considered by the most intelligent, fair, and honorable body of citizens that may be found on the face of the globe. Some of our States are so much larger and are so much more in importance than the colonies which are represented by the 6 votes of Great Britain that there is no comparison. In fact, New York is much larger in population than the Dominion of Canada. Her population of more than 10,000,000 represents the finest type of American citizenship. The Dominion of Canada has a population of 8,300,000, while little New Zealand has less than 1,000,000. The commerce of New York is equal to that of a hemisphere half a century ago, and last year the business, as represented by the imports and exports, was more than $5,000,000,000, while that of New Zealand was $250,000,000, which shows New York's business to be more than twenty times as great as that of New Zealand and twelve times the business done by South Africa, whose exports and imports were but $400,000,000, and seven times that of Australia, whose exports and imports were but $680,000,000; and yet New York has but one forty-eighth of the numerical strength in voting power in the league of nations that New Zealand has. Pennsylvania, with her population of 8,000,000, has no voting power of its own, except the one vote of the United States, as compared with Australia with a population of 4,120,000, exclusive of aborigines.

Think of Illinois, Ohio, and Texas, with a combined population of 13,000,000 souls, with their splendid institutions of learning, their great industrial centers, their marvelous resources, their fertile fields, their citizenship, as high as can be found under the sun, sitting passively by and permitting the colored representative of Liberia or Siam to cast his vote in the great question affecting the welfare and perpetuity of our Republic while they have no voice at all, not even in a "debating society." But some say this league has no authority to settle questions. It must be done by the council; that it is a mere "debating society"; that Great Britain gets no real benefit, but the mere satisfaction of having a few more representatives to put in their word whenever a question is debated. What folly! We have not a gambler's chance in this league. The cards are stacked against us. No sportsman would consider for a moment such a proposition. Can you conceive of Sir Thomas Lipton, the great English sportsman, challenging America to a yacht race, and after the contract had been entered into and the terms specifically stated announcing that as a consideration he would make a few mild reservations, and that among others he would understand that he was to have six men on his boat to every one that was on the American yacht, but that his men were not to touch a rope nor furl a sail, but simply to "stand around" and have nothing to do except to "say their say" in the event of any debate? Do you think American sportsmen would accept this "reservation" without question? This six-to-one proposition has been discussed so often in this Senate, and the Senate been given to understand that no advantage was to be had—that one equaled six, and so forth, a new mathematical philosophy that I do not understand—that I shall not undertake to discuss it. If six is no better than one, why did Premier Lloyd-George for hours and days insist that his dominions and colonies should each have a vote?

The very fact that Great Britain insisted upon this provision is sufficient evidence to prove to me that she expected some advantage to accrue to her from this unfair basis of representation; and having raised my hand to Heaven and sworn to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States, I swear by the Eternal that I never will submit to, and never will vote to ratify, a contract whereby my Government does not have equal power with that of any other government on this earth.

Other men may satisfy their conscience in permitting our Government to have a lesser representation in the councils of the world than Great Britain, but as for me nothing will satisfy my sense of patriotism but to give my Government at least an equal representation with that of any other. I place my Government and my flag above that of any other colony, government, or kingdom on the face of the earth, and on that issue I am willing to stand.

One word more on our representation in the league, and I am through with that feature of the question: In the dark days of the world conflict, when England was calling to America, and entreating her aid, she raised no question as to the numbers we should furnish in her defense. At that time she asked not that one American should equal six Britons, but her cry and supplication was for more munitions, more money, more ships, more food, and more men! And how America responded: She opened her treasures, she loaded ships with provisions, every farmer in the land rose to the occasion, and every available foot of soil in our whole country was cultivated and planted to supply the ever-increasing demand of the Allies. And our splendid boys paused not to reason why, but responded to the call of their country with a courage and heroism which has never been surpassed, crossing 3,000 miles of billows to meet the Teutons on foreign fields, and to raise the banner of the Republic across the seas, where it shall ever be honored by the nations of the world.

Ah no; there was then no suggestion that one equaled six, but we were given opportunity to furnish in that exigency our full quota.

Before proceeding to discuss the most menacing provision of the treaty I wish to mention a condition which may arise at any time. Suppose the bandits of Mexico should come across the border into the State of Texas, as they have done many times, confiscating property, murdering American citizens, and committing all the depredations of which the most miserable and lawless bandits could conceive. Do you think it likely that the Government of the United States would wait until the matter could be brought to the attention of the league of nations, acted upon by the council, and all of the many and varied constitutional questions settled before it would move in the matter? Such a thing is inconceivable. The United States Government, without a moment's delay, would send its armies to the rescue of the citizens of Texas; immediate activities of war would begin, as they should, and this entirely contrary to the provisions of the treaty. This is not a theoretical proposition, but a condition that may develop at any time, as it has many times in the past.

There are so many potential dangers embraced in this document that the more I study and contemplate it the more convinced I become of its menace to our Government. But some have said that unless it was adopted it would break the heart of the world. I can not subscribe to this sentiment. But, if true, I would rather "break the heart of the world" and save and preserve my own country than to shatter the heart, soul, and hope of America in attempting to stimulate the heartbeats of the world.

The labor question is by far the most vital one before the country. Since Part XIII of the peace treaty is presumably in the interest of labor, not much careful scrutiny has been given it until recently, when it was so well explained by the able and eloquent senior Senators from Wisconsin and Colorado [Mr. LA FOLLETTE and Mr. THOMAS].

To my mind, however, that section contains possibilities of harm to American labor and infinite danger to American industry. I believe we should give the most deliberate consideration to the subject before we decide that the United States can progress through political alliance with the socialistic movements of all Europe.

Roughly, and very briefly put, the provisions of Part XIII of the treaty establish a permanent organization of labor, recognized by the peace commission, international in membership, members to be chosen from the nations in the league, the organization to consist of a general conference and an international labor office. The general conference of representatives are to meet yearly—oftener if necessary—four representatives from each nation appointed by the Government—one appointed by the Government to represent the Government; one appointed by the Government but nominated by employers to represent them; and one appointed by the Government to be nominated by the workpeople to represent them.

Please bear in mind, therefore, that the probable size of such conference would be more than 100 delegates. Since all 27 signatory nations, all 13 States invited to become such, and 6 States that later may be invited—a total of 46—will furnish these delegates. The international labor office controlled by 24 persons, 12 representing the conference, 6 representing employers, 6 representing the workers; 8 of the 12 representing the Governments to be nominated by nations which are of chief industrial importance. This governing body will elect its own chairman, regulate its own procedure, fix its own times of meeting, appoint its own director. The director will appoint his own staff to carry out the functions of the international labor office, which include the collection and distribution of information on all subjects relating to the international adjustment of conditions in industrial life and labor. Also the editing and publishing in French and in English and in other languages, if the governing body thinks desirable, of a periodical paper dealing with the problems of industry and employment of international interest.

This gives a general idea of the scope and character of the organization, and when we see the possibilities of such an organization—as affecting our own country, bearing in mind the conditions existing with us at the present moment, and the tendency in the future, not conditions existing in the European countries and the tendency of their national labor movements—we can judge of its injury to American labor. As all know, the trend is strong in Europe toward the nationalization of all private capital and industry—toward socialism, and almost Bolshevism. In those countries already the wageworkers want to rule more and more, and year by year the recommendations and proclamations of their trade-unions are strongly socialistic. As proof of this let me cite the fact that last July, when delegates met at Amsterdam to reorganize the International Trade Union Congress, after the congress had been adjourned, the delegates, with the exception of the United States, reassembled into a socialistic conference. As I said before, the American labor movement was not represented, and here in the United States we feel that the labor-capital problem can be solved. Although there are differences between manual wage earners and the capitalists, yet these differences we feel can be reconciled. But the difference between capitalism and socialism, particularly that extreme form of socialism called Bolshevism, can not be reconciled, and the question for us to raise is whether this proposed labor organization called the International Labor Conference will actually bring labor and industrial management in this country into closer sympathy and understanding, or will it simply promote the doctrine and the cause of socialism, even Bolshevism?

In the light of the fact that an international trade-union congress openly declared itself for a socialistic congress, it would seem to me that it were well for us to consider this matter most attentively.

For we in the United States are not yet ready to say that the final decision in all questions of labor law and labor protection belongs to the workers themselves. The social currents in our country are not yet wholly prosocialistic nor wholly anticapitalistic. This is not true in the European countries. Even conservative England's tendencies are strongly prosocialistic, and surely the workers of our country are not prepared to be bound by laws imposed on them by representatives of other countries whose ideals are contrary to our ideals. As an example: England has declared for the nationalization of its coal mines. This international labor conference could arrange for a discussion of the subject, and upon approval of the principle by two-thirds of the delegates voting, our Government, and each of the other Governments represented in the league, would be forced to place the matter before the Congress, and the full force of all the machinery of the international labor office, with its opportunity for world-wide publication, could be utilized for adopting the proposition, and these matters are important alike to capitalists and workers.

Another way in which the treaty provisions can operate against us is found in article 407, which provides that independent alliances may be formed between the various groups of labor and employers—and these may easily be in competition with America in foreign trade. And I see another hazard to our Government in the wonderful opportunity for the dissemination all over the face of the globe of the doctrine of socialism.

If you will recall my words regarding the functions of this international labor office, you will readily see what a splendid chance is afforded for spreading the gospel of socialism through this channel, and America will be forced to go Europe's way rather than to go her own way, which has heretofore proved so successful. For with an overpowering voting strength against her the United States delegates would be unable to lead and direct the European delegates, and would in turn have to be led and directed the European way; and I contend, and shall continue to contend, that we can do more for Europe by remaining independent and acting independently in these matters and proving to the world by our own success the worth and strength of our stand. For surely no close national understanding can ever be created between American labor and American capital if yearly the subject is to be opened up and action taken by influences that are un-American and contrary to the American ideals.

American workmen are to-day receiving higher wages and living under better conditions than any other class of laborers in the world, and in many countries which would be represented in this international congress the wages paid manual labor are less than one-tenth that paid the wageworker in this country.

I can not permit this provision to be passed without protesting against such unfair competition as would surely come to the American workmen, and whatever consideration may be given this I believe that if the laborers of our country knew and understood well its provisions they would unanimously favor its removal from the covenant.

Some have said that my policy is not constructive, and that I have nothing to offer in place of the covenant. I have this suggestion to make, which I believe worthy of consideration—that instead of a document embracing 535 pages and 80,000 words I believe in a resolution declaring that we are at peace with Germany, not even stating that the war is over, simply declaring that we are at peace, and that the treaty which had been in effect since 1787 and which governed our Nation prior to the declaration of war is again our controlling covenant. This would be a business man's proposition. There would be no involved meanings, no complex phrases; the language would be plain and unmistakable. The humblest citizen of the land would know precisely what was meant. Under that treaty for 130 years no criticism was uttered. It proved satisfactory to both Governments. No time of the Senate need be spent in discussing its provisions, but it could be accepted and approved and it would effectively clear our skirts of all alliances with the Governments overseas.

I realize that in these trying days of readjustment and restlessness there is a feeling of fear lest civilization fail us, our Government deteriorate, and our cherished institutions be shattered. I share no such fear or foreboding. This is not the first crisis in our country's history. In 1865 I recall that men trembled with fear lest the Union be severed, and the old temple of liberty was shaken to its very foundation. Was that fear warranted? No. The great middle classes, the men from the farms and the homes, patriotic and loyal citizens who believed in the Union and in right, joined hands and forces. They came from all parties and creeds. They chose a leader who was born on a farm, who could build a log cabin and fence his acres with rails, and who later built the citadel of individual, universal, and unconditional freedom and fenced it with the strong arm of constitutional law. And history repeats itself. To-day the farmers of this country are interesting themselves in the vital questions which confront us, are forming their opinions, and seeking their leader. And I have an abiding faith that in the solution of this problem—perhaps the greatest that was ever presented to a people—the Members of this Senate, representing the highest, finest type of citizenship, will preserve the principles which have been bequeathed to us by former generations and will give to posterity not a mongrel flag of international character and a Nation weakened by its alliance with other governments of the earth, but a Nation whose beneficent charity shall be the hope of the poor and oppressed of every land; a Nation whose example shall be the guiding star shedding the light of truth, righteousness, and eternal justice; a Nation complete in its own majesty and greatness, with one purpose, one Government, one flag!

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JOHNSON of California in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harrison	McKellar	Smith, Ariz.
Borah	Henderson	McNary	Smith, Ga.
Brandegee	Hitchcock	Moses	Smoot
Calder	Johnson, Calif.	New	Spencer
Capper	Johnson, S. Dak.	Newberry	Sterling
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Sutherland
Curtis	Jones, Wash.	Nugent	Thomas
Dial	Kellogg	Overman	Townsend
Dillingham	Kendrick	Page	Trammell
Edge	Kenyon	Phipps	Walsh, Mont.
Elkins	Keyes	Pittman	Warren
Fernald	Kirby	Poindexter	Watson
Fletcher	Knox	Pomerene	Williams
France	La Follette	Ransdell	Wolcott
Gay	Lodge	Sheppard
Hale	McCormick	Sherman
Harding	McCumber	Simmons

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS], the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] are detained from the Senate by illness. The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] is absent on account of illness in his family. The senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM], the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], and the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] are detained on public business. The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN], the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY], and the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] are absent on official business. I have been requested to announce that the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has gone to Massachusetts to vote in the State elections.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. My colleague, the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD], is detained from the Senate by illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present.

[Mr. SHERMAN addressed the Senate in continuation of the speech begun by him on Friday last. After having spoken for over an hour he yielded the floor for the day.]

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business with closed doors.

The motion was agreed to, and the doors were closed. After 10 minutes spent in executive session with closed doors, the doors were reopened.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH GERMANY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole and in open executive session, resumed the consideration of the treaty of peace with Germany.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, November 4, 1919, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate November 3, 1919.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY.

Norman H. Davis, of Tullahoma, Tenn., to be Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, in place of Dr. Leo S. Rowe, resigned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, November 3, 1919.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of life, with its hopes and precious promises, we stand before Thee in awe and reverence, in the presence of death; so inscrutable, wrapt in profound mystery, we could not stand the shock but for our faith and confidence in Thy love, the essence of Thy being.

When a child is born into the family, there is joy and all the affections of the heart are centered upon it. But when death enters the house, there is grief, profound sorrow and lamentations; hence our hearts go out in deepest sympathy to the parents, grand-parents, and kinsfolk, in the going of the little Champ Clark Thompson.

Especially do we sympathize with his distinguished Grandfather, who has been closely identified with this House for more than a quarter of a century—a Speaker, who served it for eight years and endeared himself to this Representative Body, in his wisdom and fair dealing with all.

Comfort him and all who are mourning the loss of the dear one, upon whom love was centered, with the hope that sometime, somewhere, they shall meet him to love and cherish forever. In the name of Him who died on Calvary, the earnest of the immortality of the soul; and glory, and honor, and praise be Thine forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, November 1, 1919, was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT OVER UNTIL WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Wednesday. I make that request, Mr. Speaker, by reason of the fact that many Members are away attending elections in various States.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent, pending that, that I may address the House for 35 minutes as soon as this is passed.

Mr. MONDELL. Thirty-five minutes, when?

Mr. ASWELL. Now, when the gentleman is through.

Mr. MONDELL. I shall be compelled to object to that, Mr. Speaker, because that will break into the important public business of the day. And, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman should make my request, made on behalf of the whole House, dependent on a personal request. I am not making this request on my own account. I shall be here just as long as Congress is in session. I will be in town, anyway.

Mr. ASWELL. I reserved the right to object.

Mr. MONDELL. I make the request I do on behalf of many gentlemen who feel they must be home election day.

Mr. ASWELL. I reserved the right to object. I do not intend to object. I wish, if I may, to speak for 35 minutes after this.

Mr. MONDELL. I shall have to object to that, for the reason that there is important business before the House under a special rule, and it is not fair under those circumstances to allow 35 minutes of political debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn until Wednesday. Is there objection?

Mr. TILSON. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Wyoming if there is any arrangement being made to have a unanimous-consent day? There are a number of bills on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

Mr. MONDELL. The very first day possible will be set aside for consideration of the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. DYER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, why could we not take that up to-morrow, and, if there is objection then, the gentleman from Wyoming can move to adjourn? My understanding is that the only purpose in not meeting to-morrow is on account of the many Members who are absent. If any question of quorum is raised to-morrow about unanimous-consent business, then he can move to adjourn.

Mr. MONDELL. It is hardly fair for gentlemen who are away, and who must be away on very important matters, to have a question of quorum raised under those circumstances. I am always here. I am never away when Congress is in session. I never make these requests on my own account, but it is fair to many Members of the House who are to be absent for reasons they deem good that under the circumstances we should stand in recess.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The same objection, if you have the Unanimous Consent Calendar up to-morrow, would occur if you went on to other business. A lot of these men who are away and many others would like to be here on unanimous-consent day. If you raise the question of no quorum, we would then be in the same position as we are in to-day.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY] was suddenly called away, and I ask unanimous consent that he be granted leave of absence for one week.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WELTY] be granted leave of absence for one week. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

PERMISSION TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. LONERGAN. Mr. Speaker, as to-morrow will mark the anniversary of the signing of the armistice between Italy and Austria, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks on the achievements of the Italian Army.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Connecticut asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the achievements of the Italian Army. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I regret to do so, but I think in order to let the privileges of the RECORD be the same to all Members and let the RECORD represent just what happens here on the floor, I shall be, during the rest of the session, obliged to object to any extension of remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. HERNANDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a set of resolutions passed by the American Legion of the State of New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a set of resolutions passed by the American Legion of that State. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I do so reluctantly, but I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes out of order.

The SPEAKER. When?

Mr. BURKE. Now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I must be fair in this matter of objecting to extension of remarks of that length. I objected a moment ago to the gentleman from Louisiana, and it would not be fair for me now to allow the gentleman from Pennsylvania to have 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

A QUORUM—CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana makes the point that there is no quorum present. It is clear that no quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Fields	Kleczka	Reber
Andrews, Md.	Flood	Kreider	Reed, N. Y.
Anthony	Fordney	LaGuardia	Riddick
Ashbrook	Frear	Langley	Riordan
Babka	Fuller, Ill.	Lehlbach	Robsion, Ky.
Bacharach	Fuller, Mass.	Lesher	Rodenberg
Barkley	Gallivan	Little	Rogers
Bell	Gandy	Longworth	Rouse
Boies	Ganly	Luce	Rowan
Booher	Garland	Lufkin	Rowe
Bowers	Garner	McClintic	Rubey
Britten	Garrett	McCulloch	Sanders, N. Y.
Brooks, Pa.	Godwin, N. C.	McDuffie	Sanford
Browning	Goldfogle	McGlennon	Saunders, Va.
Brumbaugh	Good	McKenzie	Schall
Butler	Goodall	McKeown	Scully
Caldwell	Goodwin, Ark.	McKinley	Sherwood
Campbell, Kans.	Gould	McLane	Shreve
Candler	Graham, Pa.	McLaughlin, Nebr.	Siegel
Cantrill	Graham, Ill.	MacCrate	Sinclair
Carew	Green, Iowa	Madden	Sisson
